REPORTS

OF

CAPTAIN L. A. BEARDSLEE,

U. S. NAVY,

RELATIVE TO

AFFAIRS IN ALASKA,

AND THE

OPERATIONS OF THE U. S. S. JAMESTOWN

UNDER HIS COMMAND,

WHILE IN THE WATERS OF THAT TERRITORY.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

LETTER

FROM

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,

TRANSMITTING,

In response to Senate resolution of January 18, 1882, the reports of Capt. L. A. Beardslee, United States Navy, relating to affairs in the Territory of Alaska, and the operations of the U. S. ship Jamestown, under his command, while in the waters of that Territory.

JANUARY 24, 1882.—Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 19, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the resolution of the Senate of January 18, 1882, and to transmit the reports of Capt. L. A. Beardslee, United States Navy, relative to affairs in the Territory of Alaska, and the operations of the United States ship Jamestown, under his command, while in the waters of that Territory.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. HUNT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. DAVID DAVIS,
President of the Senate.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL.

Capt. L. A. Beardslee to the Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a report prepared by me in obedience to the orders of the department, dated November 17, 1879, in which I am instructed to prepare a report of my operations while in command of the U. S. S. Jamestown, stationed at Sitka, Alaska, which order was subsequently modified by verbal instructions to include in the report such information in regard to Alaska as I had obtained during my command.

I have therefore added papers treating on the character of the country and of its inhabitants, its resources, and meteorological phenonema. The collation and arrangement of the data on this subject, although embraced in twenty pages, has occupied a large proportion of the time since I was assigned to the duty.

I most respectfully submit, in connection with this report, the accompanying copies of letters from the honorable Secretary of the Navy, R. W. Thompson, and the chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

I am, very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Captain, U. S. N.

Hon. WM. H. HUNT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Chief of the Bureau of Navigation to Captain Beardslee.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 26, 1880.

SIR: Having been relieved of the command of the United States ship Jamestown, the bureau takes pleasure in expressing herewith its appreciation of the manner in which you conducted the surveys of the several channels and the many islands and shoals of Sitka Bay, &c., during the two seasons the Jamestown was under your command, and it begs further to say that the vast amount of valuable data rendered bears evidence that the surveys were intelligently conceived and systematically and energetically carried out, reflecting credit upon you as commanding officer, and upon those under your command for the zeal and professional skill displayed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. D. WHITING,
Chief of Bureau.

Commander L. A. BEARDSLEE, U. S. N.,
Washington, D. C.

The Secretary of the Navy to Captain Beardslee.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 30, 1880.

SIR: The department omitted, at the time of your detachment from the command of the Jamestown, to express its approbation of your course regarding matters in Alaska. The condition of that Territory was such that the presence of a war vessel would have been of little use without a commanding officer of rare judgment and discretion.

Your course while in command met with the entire approbation of the department, and tended to restore order and preserve peace. The condition of the people of all classes in that country, where no law existed, was much improved by the measures adopted by you, and much that you did was the result of your good judgment, as you were required to act promptly and without the advantage of advice or instructions from the department.

Your successor in command commends the admirable condition in which he found affairs in Alaska, and attributes it to the wise course pursued by you.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

RELATIVE TO

AFFAIRS IN ALASKA.

PART I.

OPERATIONS OF THE JAMESTOWN IN CONNECTION WITH AFFAIRS OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS LIVING IN ALASKA.

The Jamestown was placed in commission at the Mare Island Yard on the 8th of May, 1879.

It being considered important that she should reach her station as quickly as possible, she was very hurriedly fitted out, and sailed for Alaska on the 22d of May.

The department's instructions to the commanding officer were partially as follows: "Proceed to Sitka, Alaska, and relieve the U. S. ship Alaska. Communicate from time to time, as opportunity offers, with the department as to affairs in the Territory, looking out for the interests of citizens of the United States, and rendering them such protection as may be required"; to "make such soundings and hydrographic examination as the nature of the route and existing charts will suggest"; and "while at the station to execute surveys and examinations of harbors, islands, shoals, &c., as far as the nature of the service and available means will permit."

I had received, also, verbal instructions from the honorable Secretary of the Navy, given on the eve of my departure from Washington, to assume the command, which in general terms were that I should study the situation of affairs in that Territory, and use my utmost endeavors to restore and establish permanently harmonious relations between the white settlers and the native Indians of the Territory, to which end I was authorized (there being no governing power or code of laws in existence in the Territory) to use my own discretion in all emergencies that might arise.

Subsequently, under date of July 26, 1879, I having reported certain actions upon my part at Sitka, which did not properly pertain to the jurisdiction of the commanding officer of a man-of-war, the Secretary of the Navy wrote as follows:

> The department entirely approves of what you have done, and submits the future of your action to your discretion, until something shall occur to render specific instructions necessary. * * * In the mean time the department has full confidence in your wisdom, capacity, and discretion to dispose of such matters as may require your intervention during your stay in Sitka.

These broad instructions, both verbal and written, were of great value and importance to me, and enabled me, with full confidence of approval of my course, to meet such emergencies as arose, in such manner as seemed to me right and best; and I did not feel called upon through lack of authority to permit natural law to be violated while my command provided me with physical force sufficient to prevent such violation.

The Jamestown sailed from San Francisco on the 22d of May. Head winds forced her well to the westward, and stormy weather prevented us from obtaining much hydrographic information, other than that obtained by the ordinary observations, while en route.

Our time was fully occupied in getting the ship in order; she having been fitted out in great haste, after having been very greatly changed in nearly every respect, from her former man-of-war shape, by successive transformation to receiving ship, and "school-ship" for the State of California.

Our crew was short and green, and most of the watch officers inexperienced in handling sailing vessels, one having never kept a deck watch except upon monitors and tugs.

We arrived off Cape Edgecomb on the 12th of June, and with great difficulty made our way through the outlying reefs and islands to a point within eight miles of Sitka Harbor; but were forced by the thick weather of a southeast storm to give up our attempts to reconcile the actual positions of various islands and reefs with those assigned upon our charts, and to indentify the same by our sailing directions, for both charts and directions were very erroneous; and even had they been cortect, there were no landmarks which could be distinctly recognized, on account of the densely wooded background of the hills in the rear of Sitka, into whieh the many wooded islands blended.

We ran to sea, and remained in the offing until the 14th of June, when a northwest wind cleared the weather and we ran in until seen and signalized by the United States steamer Alaska, which came out and towed us in to the eastern anchorage of Sitka.

But for her services the Jamestown would have been compelled either to run great risks or to again run to sea, for of the three channels into the harbor at that time known, in one the wind was dead ahead, and the channel too narrow for working to windward, and in the others high land produced calms, and the water was too deep for anchoring.

It became at once evident that the order to "execute surveys," &c., would be well obeyed by a careful and thorough survey of these approaches, the establishment of suitable beacons and buoys, and the construction of a correct chart.

During the summer and autumn of 1879 these surveys were accomplished, the beacons built, and the chart prepared.

The Alaska was relieved by the Jamestown, and on the 16th of June she sailed for San Francisco.

The eastern harbor, where we were lying, was superior to the western one, in that the holding ground was good, and there was plenty of room to swing at single anchor, but inferior in that it was exposed to the force of the seas in southeasterly gales, and that from it our guns could not reach the Indian village should necessity arise, there being government houses in range.

Therefore, on the 18th of June, the ship was warped into the western harbor and moored with six anchors, head and stern, heading southeast, our port battery bearing upon the Indian village, distant about five hundred yards.

We remained at these moorings during the fifteen months of my command, except when occasionally blown from them by the southerly gales.

As instructed, I began at once to study the situation of affairs at Sitka and to familiarize myself with the customs, laws, and superstitions of the Indians, in order that I might be able, through knowledge thus acquired, to reduce the hostility which had arisen between them and the whites, and to bring the two races into harmonious relations.

I communicated to the department by every opportunity, as instructed, these opportunities being, with but few exceptions, monthly. A portion of the dispatches sent by me covering a period of seven months, viz, from June 15, 1879, to January 22, 1880, have been published in Senate Ex. Doc. No. 145, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.

This report will consist principally of the matter contained in subsequent dispatches, with such additions and comments as may seem advisable upon a review of the whole subject, together with such repetition of the matter already published as may prove necessary to make of this a complete and connected document, in which the various subjects touched upon will be treated separately in due chronological sequence, instead of as in the dispatches on file, being subject to the interruptions due to the necessity of reporting on sundry matters connected with the ship alone, and having no bearing on Alaskan affairs.

I will first describe briefly the situation of affairs in Sitka and vicinity at the date of our arrival, in June, 1879.

We found a community consisting of 360 persons, who, through birth, naturalization, or statement, and by the terms of our treaty with Russia, were to be considered as citizens of the United States. Of these, 34 were so by birth, 79 by naturalization or statement, and 247 by our treaty, of which a large proportion were women and children.

This community was living side by side with a tribe of Indians, whose village was divided from the white settlement by the remains of a stockade, now forming the garden fence of the westernmost government building, occupied by the collector of customs. These Indians, having for many years been governed, first by the Russians and subsequently by our Army, had been kept down with a strong hand.

The successive withdrawal of all military force, and the failure to substitute in its stead any form of civil government, had left these two communities to get along with each other as best they might.

The Indians, who are not naturally savages, greatly outnumbered the male whites (there being from 100 to 200 of them in summer, and from 500 to 600 in winter, of whom, however, over half were women and children), and through their tribal and family relations they were able at any time to greatly increase their force, by drawing upon other tribes located at several villages upon the islands of the Alexander Archipelago, within two or three days' canoe distance.

Petty quarrels and disputes had from time arisen between the two races, and the Indians had learned that while with them there would be, in case of trouble with the whites, a unity of cause and action, with the latter there would not, for as a general thing each white man acted for himself, there being no such thing as public spirit or community of interest in Sitka at that time.

The general character of the whites was not such as would tend to produce or maintain in the Indians any great respect or fear, and they were regarded by the Indians as outlaws and cast-offs of their country, many of the Creoles being but little above the Indians in their qualifications and despised by them, while of the white settlers, the traders and saloon keepers were in strong opposition and in general hated each other cordially.

These quarrels were aggravated by drunkenness, the Indians having learned from the whites the secret of making very powerful rum from flour and molasses, which materials the whites shop-keepers furnished them freely in exchange for their pelts and produce, thus, for sake of gain, bringing upon themselves the dangers which they feared.

These quarrels had culminated in November, 1878, in the killing of a white man named Brown, at the Hot Springs, by Kot-ko-wot, an Indian of the Kaksati family, which family is second in power of the Sitka Indians, it consisting of about 40 men and 125 women and children.

The murderer and an accomplice named Okh-o-not were arrested by Indians of the Kok-wa-ton family, sent out by Annahootz, their chief, brought to Sitka and lodged in the guard-house on the 6th of February, 1879.

This arrest naturally caused great excitement among the Indians, and a big potalatch, or drunk, began in the ranch, during which some of the Kaksatis attempted to release the prisoners. They were prevented from entering the white settlement by the Kok-wa-tons, headed by Annahootz, and assisted by some of the Kaksatis.

The citizens formed themselves into a company, and for three days stood guard, and there can be no doubt that during this period a very slight inciting cause would have produced a night attack upon the settlement, which would have resulted in a massacre; but the unexpected combination of the whites in self defense deterred the Indians (who are cowardly when not drunk), as did also the influence of the more prudent men among them.

No further attempt was made by the Kaksatis to give trouble; and on the 9th both the prisoners were placed on board of the mail steamer California, which on the 10th started with them for Portland, carrying also some of the Kok-wa-ton Indians as witnesses to testify before the United States court of Oregon.

This steamer bore also an appeal from the thoroughly alarmed citizens of Sitka, to the captain of any of Her Majesty's ships at Esquimault, for immediate assistance, which appeal was at once responded to by Capt. H. Holmes A'Court, who was, at the date of the arrival of the California at Victoria, in command of H. M. ship Osprey, lying at Esquimault, where the English maintain a naval station, with dry-dock, &c.

Captain A'Court, without seeking instructions, started at once for Sitka, and arrived there on the 1st of March, and in his official report he states:

> On my arrival at Sitka, which from bad and thick weather was delayed until March 1, I found the inhabitants in a state of great anxiety and alarm, the chief (Katlaan) being expected back by the computation of the Indians the next day, when there is no doubt an immediate attack would have taken place.
> On Sunday, March 22, the revenue cutter Oliver Wolcott arrived from Port Townshend. The next day I met Captain Selden, by appointment, at the collector's office. After talking it over they both expressed so strong an opinion, in which I fully concurred, that the Oliver Wolcott alone was inadequate for the defense of the place, and that if I left affairs would resume their former state, that I decided to remain at least until the arrival of the California, by which ship I was in hopes some further assistance would be sent. The reason for arriving at the conclusion that the Wolcott is insufficient for the protection of the inhabitants is, that although she would be able to destroy the Indian village, she carrying three 24-pounders, yet in consequence of the small number in her crew, in all, I believe, 36, she would be unable to afford any material assistance for the protection of women and children, or to check the Indians in sacking the town.
> I am also of the opinion that the destruction of the Indian village is a matter that admits of a question, as there are a great number of friendly Indians, who have lodges and property there, the destruction of which, and possibly the loss of some of their lives, would tend to make them cast their lot with the others. * * *
> The Indians are fully aware of the weakness of the Oliver Wolcott, and on her arrival said openly that they were not afraid of her.

In conclusion, I beg to state that I feel certain that the presence of the Oliver Wolcott and this ship has averted a serious calamity, and it is my firm conviction that nothing but permanent protection, and some sort of government having authority, will enable the white people to live here without molestation from the Indians, to carry on their trade and develop the resources of the country; and if I may venture to do so, without being considered presumptuous, I would suggest that the protection should take the form of a man-of-war, in preference to troops (although they might be combined with advantage), as, being movable, a ship could, at various times, visit the numerous tribes and villages scattered along the coast, and also be usefully employed in surveying the inner channels, of which little is known at present.

I have quoted thus at length from the report of Captain A'Court, for two reasons: the first of which is, that the service he rendered to our citizens entitles his views to recognition; and, secondly, his views and suggestions, based upon his experience of a month, coincide closely with my own, formed almost as quickly, and never entirely abandoned during my fifteen months' stay in Alaska (although in some respects modified).

The United States steamer Alaska arrived at Sitka on the 3d of April, and the Osprey returned to her station at Esquimault, and a few days later the Oliver Wolcott left also.

The following petition was sent to Victoria by the Osprey, and thence telegraphed to Washington:

To the President of the United States:

In behalf of 300 residents of this city, we ask protection for our lives. When the ship Alaska leaves us we will be helpless. The Indians are ready now to attack, and may as soon as she goes; the danger is immediate.

(Signed by Alex. Milletich, G. W. Richter, J. Corcoran, T. H. McGuin, J. Schmeig, S. Milletich, Thos. Galleni, Rev. N. G. Metropolsky.)

The United States ship Jamestown was at anchor in Sitka Harbor in a little over two months from the date of the foregoing petition.

From February 6 until March 1, Sitka was without protection other than that afforded by the combination of the whites in self-defense; and again during the temporary absence of the Alaska. During these periods no attempts were made by the Indians to in any way molest the whites, which quiet upon their part convinced me that some strong influence restrained them; this influence I searched for, and in due time discovered.

The news of the execution of the murderer and of the dissection of his body produced considerable excitement among the Indians. The chief of the family, and most of the leading men, admitted that the execution was just, in that the man having taken a life had thus forfeited his own, but they were very dissatisfied with the method, and much more so with the disposition made of the body.

I had this matter brought up to me many times, and it was with great difficulty that I could reconcile the Indians to the state of affairs. They said to me, in substance, "This man was hung upon the testimony of two of his enemies; he was in a strange country where he had no friends, and had he not been guilty it would have been all the same, he could not have proved it. What is to hinder any one of us from being treated in the same way? He was guilty and it is right he was killed, but he should have had a fair trial."

I do not flatter myself that I succeeded at all in my attempts to explain to them about the dissection of the body. By their laws, the man having paid with his life for the life he had taken, the affair was settled, but the subsequent dissection and burial, according to their ideas, inflicted upon him a punishment far beyond his deserts, inasmuch as by this treatment of the body the man's chances for future happiness were entirely annihilated, which would not have been the case could it have been burned with due ceremonies. I endeavored to convince the Indians of the folly of this belief, but failed, as I did whenever I attempted to combat their superstitions, which are too deeply rooted to be eradicated by any efforts except those of consistent missionaries gifted with common sense.

It became evident very soon after our arrival that one of the greatest of the causes which tended to produce the unsettled condition of affairs in the two communities was the want of a leader. There was no one among the whites competent or willing to assume this position, except the collector, Colonel Ball, and he was utterly unprovided with means to carry into effect any exercise of authority which he might deem advisable to assume.

A community composed of Indians, creoles, and white men of various nationalities, including English, Irish, German, Austrian, Italian, Turks, and Jews, among whom were numbers of idle, dissolute characters, and a sprinkling of men who, through experience with law, had learned to have no good opinion of it, and had sought Sitka as a home because there the law could not reach them—could not be governed and kept in order by any person unprovided with physical force sufficient to meet all emergencies. Quite a number of the better class of the whites were content to abide by the decision of the collector upon disputed points, they respecting his position as "sole civil official of the government," and his legal knowledge; but even of these but a very small proportion were ready or willing to give him any assistance, either in person or by contribution of funds to be expended for the public good; and there was a large number, among whom were representatives of both the creoles and whites, who were opposed to any authority which would make efforts to restrain disorder. Stills for the manufacture of hoo-che-noo were in operation in a great many of the houses of both creoles and whites, and the use of this rum was very common with them, and it was dispensed freely to the Indians.

The evil effects of a debauch on hoo-che-noo probably exceed those from the use of any other known liquor; and, when under its influence, men, at other times fairly orderly, become crazy and dangerous.

The creoles, white men, and Indians who manufactured this liquor were able to obtain from all but one or two of the "merchants" all of the necessary ingredients, which were simply flour, molasses, and yeast. And the law, which made it an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment to sell or barter or give liquor to an Indian, had become a dead letter through the easy and lawful substitution of the above ingredients.

The importation of liquor had been to a great extent prevented by the regulations of the Treasury Department, which forbade the clearing from other ports of vessels carrying it to Alaska; but all liquor which escaped the notice of the custom-house officers on the departure of vessels for Alaska stood a very good chance of being landed safely upon its arrival at Sitka, the time and attention of the collector being taken up in the necessary duties of his office, among which those connected with the receiving and delivering of the mail occupied considerable; the deputy collector was an invalid, and the special deputies employed upon the arrival of each steamer men whose experience did not qualify them to discover and outwit the various smuggling devices resorted to.

The arrival of the Jamestown was welcomed by all as furnishing the solution to the various problems. I, as her commanding officer, being provided with sufficient power to control dangerous characters, to suppress illicit distilling and traffic, and to protect those who needed protection, and with orders so broad in their scope that I would be able to pursue any course I might think best to adopt, fell naturally into the position of head to this otherwise headless community.

Both whites and Indians manifested a disposition to rely upon the government forces for everything, and to look upon me, the commanding officer, as a representative of the government sent in answer to their appeal, to supply all of the deficiencies incident to the entire absence of any other governing power or code of laws.

The question as to what extent the peculiar condition of affairs would justify me in stretching the discretionary orders furnished me, whether to that of assuming functions which would properly pertain to civil officers alone, were there such in the Territory, embarrassed me exceedingly, and in assuming such functions, my want of familiarity with duties of this nature exposed me to the risk of making serious errors, the consequence of which might tend to deprive the presence of the Jamestown at Sitka of all value. The problem presented to me was how to govern a mixed community of whites and Indians with no code of laws but the Revised Statutes of the United States, the United States Naval Regulations, and the treaty with Russia.

I was fully cognizant of the fact that neither my commission nor my instructions, broad as were the latter, conferred upon me lawful power to make an arrest of a citizen, or inflict a punishment; yet I was equally certain that unless I did assume the responsibility of doing both, the presence of the Jamestown at Sitka would have been comparatively profitless, for among both the whites and Indians there were men who were dangerous to the rest of the community, and who it was necessary to control by force, and we alone had that. I was fully convinced that an assumption of the functions of governor by myself would prove unsuccessful unless I should receive the consent and support of the people whom I assumed to govern. Should the Indians refuse to recognize my authority, the means at my disposal were not sufficient to enforce obedience; and if the whites refused, there was no method which I could adopt to coerce them which would not render me personally liable to a civil proceeding.

SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT ADOPTED.

Fortunately the white community required but little exercise of authority. Each man, wrapped up in his own affairs, interfered as little as possible with those of his neighbor; and I found that it would be good policy to refrain from in any way interfering with their affairs, except when necessary to prevent or punish crime, or check actions which were liable to produce trouble with the Indians.

The majority of the whites were of the creole class, who are quiet, harmless, apathetic, uneducated, and improvident, as a class; although there are of them a few most estimable people, also a few who were of a very low order, inferior to the average of the Indians, of slightly less pure blood. All had become accustomed to the vigorous government of the Russians, and subsequently of our troops, upon whom they relied for protection and employment; were utterly unaccustomed to governing themselves, and accepted readily the assumption of authority over them, considering themselves well repaid for any sacrifice of pride by the protection which resulted.

Many of the lower class of creoles were, as stated, vile characters, who spent all their earnings in hoo-che-noo, and who when drunk were very brutal and treated their families and other unprotected persons outrageously.

Of the remainder of the whites a portion were shop-keepers, Indian traders, saloon keepers, and loafers, who, with no ostensible employment, supported themselves by distilling hoo-che-noo, which they traded with the Indians for food, rivaled in this respect by most of the shop-keepers, who sold to the Indians molasses and other ingredients of the rum. Another portion was composed of miners, who were engaged in their business at Silver Bay, 12 miles east of Sitka; of salmon canners, at the cannery in Hunter's Bay (Old Sitka), 9 miles to the westward; and of invalids of all classes, more or less of whom congregated at the Hot Springs, 15 miles to the southward, to obtain the benefit of their waters.

As a general thing all of these people were orderly and willing to leave the whole task of governing, as well as all other public business, to whoever would assume it, each occupying himself with his own affairs.

THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

The Alaska was hardly clear of the bay when I was called upon to lend a portion of our strength to the collector, as shown by the following correspondence, in the prevention of smuggling liquor by the mail steamer California. When I received the first letter I had not yet become acquainted with Collector Ball, nor had he consulted me on the subject:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, SITKA, ALASKA,
Collector's Office, June 16, 1879.

CAPTAIN: Having received information that the landing of liquors is going on extensively here through the hands on the steamer California, whenever she is in port, and not having myself the necessary force to stop it effectually, I have to request that you will let me have on her arrival, a force of eight men, under some trustworthy officer, to make the necessary search of the vessel, and to guard her, and superintend the landing of her freight. Captain Brown, of the Alaska, had made arrangements to do this for me, and I hope you will see the importance of carrying it out. Mr. Martin will explain to you the plan we propose to adopt.

Very truly, yours,

M. D. BALL,
Collector.

Captain BEARDSLEE,
United States Steamer Jamestown.

UNITED STATES SHIP JAMESTOWN,
Sitka, Alaska, June 17, 1879.

SIR: Yours of the 16th instant is received. In answer to your request that I should furnish you with the assistance of an officer and men to prevent the smuggling of liquor, &c., from the mail steamer California upon her arrival, I would state that if, after full consultation between ourselves, I shall retain my present intentions, I shall furnish you with the assistance asked for.

I must, however, understand the status of affairs more thoroughly than I now do before giving a positive answer.

Very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, Commanding, Senior Officer Present.

M. D. BALL, Esq., Collector.

UNITED STATES SHIP JAMESTOWN,
Sitka, Alaska, June 17, 1879.

SIR: The consultation between ourselves in regard to the prevention of smuggling from the California has confirmed me in my intention to furnish you with the aid requested.

A party will be detailed with suitable instructions.

Very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, Commanding, Senior Officer Present.

M. D. BALL, Esq., Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, SITKA, ALASKA,
Collector's Office, June 23, 1879—6.30 p. m.

SIR: The inspection of the cargo of the California has just been concluded, and has resulted in the finding of six cases of whisky, improperly or insufficiently marked and without claimant, and which was doubtlessly intended for landing here. It will be forfeited under the law.

Very truly, yours,

M. D. BALL, Collector.

Capt. L. A. BEARDSLEE.

I had, as indicated by the correspondence, detailed an officer and four men, who were sworn in as deputies by the collector. This correspondence was submitted to the department with my dispatch dated June 23, 1879.

During the month of July I requested the collector, unofficially, not to again call upon me, for the following reasons, which were given in my dispatch of July 15, 1879:

By the request of the collector, and in pursuance of an arrangement of his with my predecessor, Captain Brown, I, last month, detailed an officer and men to assist the collector in the prevention of smuggling of liquor by the mail steamer. I have since then had time to weigh the subject, and this time decline to so act. Aside from my apprehension that in so doing I was not acting lawfully, I feel that it is simply ridiculous to take strong measures to stop a little whisky and protect, at the same time, tons of molasses, a gallon of which will do as much harm as a barrel of the former.

My resolve to refrain from interfering in this matter became known, and removed a great check from the traffic, which, as the white population increased by the influx of miners, tradesmen, and others, grew to be a serious evil, and I submitted to the department the following dispatch, in hopes of receiving some instruction for my guidance:

UNITED STATES SHIP JAMESTOWN,
Sitka, April 5, 1880.

SIR: It is very probable that a question will arise here before a great while, in which I shall be called upon to act, and in regard to which I do not feel assured as to the exact nature of my duty.

This question will be in regard to the suppression of, importation of, and traffic in distilled spirits in Sitka and vicinity, including the mining settlement at Silver Bay, and the cannery at Hunter's Bay.

This importation by the steamer California has increased to such an extent that about one-half of the white population of Sitka are more or less engaged in it.

I have studied the problem, and, to facilitate the deliberation of the department, submit herewith a brief history of the question. In September, 1867, General Halleck, with the desire to prevent the sale of whisky to the Indians, requested of the Secretary of War that the President, by proclamation, would declare the newly-acquired Territory of Alaska as Indian territory, and the request being referred to the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, was by him submitted to Mr. E. Peshine Smith, examiner to Court of Claims, who gave his opinion that on the 20th day of June, 1867 (the date of the signing the treaty by President Johnson), "the new territory became a part of the Indian country." Mr. Seward, inclosing this opinion, states that the President would retain the request of General Halleck for further consideration.

February 4, 1870, President Grant, in pursuance of the authority vested in him by the provisions of the second section of the act approved July 27, 1868 (sec. 1955 U. S. Rev. Stat.), issued a proclamation prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits into the district of Alaska, and the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. George S. Boutwell, issued a circular order instructing collectors of customs as to their duty in carrying out the terms of this proclamation.

In March, 1873, the act of 1868 was amended by adding to it two sections, viz, sections 20 and 21 of act of 1834, which forbid the sale of liquor to Indians, and prohibit the setting up of distilleries.

In 1878 the collector of Sitka applied to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for instructions in regard to the importation of molasses: and in reply received a letter in which is incorporated the opinion of Attorney-General Devens (a copy of which is inclosed, marked E), to the effect that, except in the matter referred to in these two sections, Alaska cannot be considered as an Indian country.

My connection with the question is as follows:

Upon the arrival of the ship in June, 1879, I was requested by the collector to detail a force to search the mail steamer California upon arrival, to seize any liquor, &c., which request I complied with. Results are shown by the inclosed correspondence, marked A, B, C, D.

Before the arrival of the next steamer, in July, I having had time to study the subject, concluded it was not consistent with my duty to order those under my command to act as revenue officers, and I declined to repeat the act, and for other reasons given in my letter of July the 15th, which letter met with the approval of the department; and since that time I have in no way interfered in the matter, and the traffic is growing to a magnitude which causes me uneasiness, should it be considered my duty to take steps to suppress it.

My views as to the situation are these: The county is not Indian country, therefore I am not called upon to carry out the provisions of the act of 1834. The collector's duty is indicated by his instructions and by the section 1950 of the Statutes; it is to prevent by all lawful means the importation of liquors, and to seize the California, and place her under bonds if necessary. He has no right to call upon the naval force to preform these duties, but if in so acting be meets with forcible opposition, it is my duty, upon being duly requested, to support him with force sufficient to enable him to do so.

In regard to his authority to act as internal-revenue collector and policeman, by seizing liquor in the possession of citizens on shore, and to call upon me to furnish force to subdue opposition I am not so clear as to his or my duty, and therefore most respectfully request specific instructions from the department.

In this connection it may be well to describe the condition of affairs past and present, and possibly the future. When in 1868 the country was considered as Indian country, there were but few whites, except the Russian creoles, be so counted, and they from habits and education were not such people as would be entitled to be considered as ordinary United States citizens.

At the date of the proclamation of General Grant it was wise and timely; the Indians had not then learned the secret of hoot-che-noo making, and thus its provisions covered the case, and prevented them from getting liquor. Now the Indians do not want whisky; it is too high priced, and not strong enough; molasses, of which they can have all they want, they prefer.

During the occupation of the post by the Army, the provisions of the statute were so far modified that authority was given to the Secretary of War to regulate the introduction of liquor here at Sitka, and he was authorized to delegate that authority to the officer commanding the post, the result of which was that the regulation of the matter was in the hands of said officer. I would respectfully suggest that if the department could procure that the Secretary of War should delegate this authority to the naval officer commanding this station, the matter would be greatly simplified; and should the department procure and entrust to me this authority, I could, with my knowledge of the character of the people here, and of the needs of the steadily increasing population of white United States citizens, so manage matters by selecting trustworthy persons, and calling upon them to pay a high license fee, that in a very short time nine-tenths of the present traffic in liquor could be stopped, and the remainder be caused to provide a revenue.

Any course which a naval commander can adopt under the present complicated position of affairs is as liable to be considered wrong as right.

The arrival of this ship, and the influx of miners, prospectors, tradesmen, and men who prey on them, has increased many hundredfold the demand for liquor, and the collector is powerless to prevent the introduction. I have known of whisky being brought in boxes of eggs, in passengers' valises, in casks nominally of beer, and in countless other forms. If I am to be left in charge here until a civil government is established, my prospects of continuing to maintain the good opinion of the department will be greatly increased if it will, as requested, obtain for me a little more legal power in this respect.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

In a subsequent dispatch, dated April 10, I, having more maturely considered the subject, withdrew the foregoing request for additional authority, and requested that the collector of customs should receive the same instead of the naval commanding officer.

The following opinion of Attorney-General Devens was inclosed:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, September 24, 1878.

SIR: Your letter of the 20th instant informed me that, upon representation received by you from the collector of customs at Sitka, Alaska, it would appear to be for the interest of the white residents of the Territory and the government to prohibit the introduction into that Territory of molasses, which is used for manufacturing distilled spirits for use among the natives, and inquires of me whether under section 3132 of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes the President, "whenever in his opinion the public interest may require, to prohibit the introduction of goods, or any particular article, into the country belonging to any Indian tribe," he will be justified in forbidding the introduction of molasses into said Territory.

The Territory of Alaska was acquired by Congress by virtue of its treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, by which the inhabitants of that Territory were, with the exception of the uncivilized native tribes, to be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and to be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes were to be subject to such laws and regulations as the United States might from time to time adopt in reference to them.

An act was passed on July 27, 1868, to extend the laws of the United States relating to customs, commerce, and navigation over the territory ceded to the United States by Russia, to establish a collection district therein, and for other purposes. This law was amended on the 3d of March, 1873, by extending over this territory two sections of the act of June 30, 1834, which was an act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes and to preserve peace on the frontiers. These two sections are the twentieth and twenty-first, one of which, not necessary to be fully stated, forbids selling or disposing of any spirituous liquors, &c., to any Indian in the Indian country, and the other of which forbids any person within the limits of the Indian country from setting up or continuing any distillery for manufacturing ardent spirits.

In the opinion of my predecessor, Attorney-General Williams, of November 13, 1873, in answer to the inquiry whether the Territory of Alaska was embraced within the term "Indian country," he holds that as to these provisions Alaska is to be regarded as "Indian country"; but it will be observed that he limits his opinion to these two sections, and does not hold that, in the general use of the term, Alaska is to be regarded as "Indian country," and be subjected to all the laws which have been made in relation to such country. The section 2132 of the Revised Statutes, by which the President is authorized to forbid the introduction of goods or any particular article into a country belonging to an Indian tribe, is part of the third section of the act of June 30, 1834. Its provisions therefore are not in terms extended over the Territory of Alaska.

When two sections of the same statute are expressly made applicable to a certain people by extension, it must be inferred that there are no intentions on the part of Congress to extend more than those two sections. Alaska cannot be considered merely as an Indian country. It is inhabited, to a limited extent, by white persons, whose rights, property, and religion, which were guaranteed by the treaty between the United States and Russia, should be protected by the United States, and the whole Territory cannot be subjected to the rules applied to Indian country, unless, at least, Congress shall expressly render it subject to them.

In direct answer to your inquiry, I therefore reply that, in the matter referred to, the Territory of Alaska cannot be considered as a country belonging to an Indian tribe, and that authority is not given to the President, by virtue of the section referred to, to prohibit the introduction of goods or of any particular article into the same when in his opinion the public interest seems to require that he should do so.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

ORIGIN OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF SITKA.

In yielding to the solicitations which called upon me to arbitrate in disputed points, I soon found that the interests and views of the white citizens were so varied, and frequently so conflicting, that the governing duty would become more onerous than honorable, and I determined to make an effort to arouse the citizens of Sitka from their apathetic state, and to induce them to combine together and make such mutual concessions of individual rights as would inure to the public benefit.

It was evidently necessary that the conflicting interests of the whites themselves should be harmonized before I would be able to make much headway in my plans to carry into effect my instructions to "establish harmonious relations between the whites and Indians" upon such a basis that these relations would have a chance of becoming permanent.

I had hopes that if the citizens could be induced to form a compact among themselves to assist each other, and to refrain from the importation of the ingredients of hoo-che-noo, and to delegate to certain of their number power to maintain order, we would have a republic on a small scale which would benefit everybody concerned.

My efforts were, to a certain extent, successful, and in the following extracts from several of my dispatches the rise, career, and demise of this attempt is recorded.

On the 9th instant I called a meeting of the citizens, and, ably assisted by the deputy collector, Dr. Dulaney, and by Mr. John Brady, have, I hope, started a public opinion which will result in the formation of a local government, with police regulations sufficient to restrain disorder and regulate, if not check, the traffic in liquor.

[Dispatch of August 12, 1879.]

After a number of apparent failures, during which, however, public feeling was being aroused, I have at last succeeded in getting the people of Sitka to form a compact which will insure some order and law. An election was held on Saturday, August 1, and the following officers elected, viz: Chief magistrate, M. D. Ball, collector; councilmen, Rev. N. G. Metropolsky, priest; Patrick Corcoran, merchant; Thos. Haltern, merchant; Thomas McCauley, salmon canner.

The miners at Silver Bay, distant some 12 miles, refused, in an offensive letter (copy of which is inclosed), to co-operate. I am informed by the priest that the Russians whose names are signed were led to sign by representations on the part of Mr. Pilz, the superintendent, that the whole thing was a trick upon my part; that should a government be formed the Jamestown would leave at once.

It is my conviction that Mr. Pilz did not himself believe this, but was actuated by other motives.

I inclose a copy of the preamble drawn up by the collector.

The code of laws which are to be adopted are simple, and will effect the purpose of enabling these people to preserve order among themselves, until such time as the government will help them.

The letter from the miners was as follows:

To the Chairman and Members of the so-called Provisional Government of Sitka:

We, the undersigned citizens of Silver Bay district, propose and intend to hold ourselves aloof from all intercourse with the so-called provisional government of Sitka. We deem it an unwise move, and we are all of the unanimous opinion that the men of the Jamestown should preserve the peace. Should this government be established, we look to the early departure of the Jamestown, and then we will be in a far worse condition than ever before.

Geo. E. Pilz.	E. H. Murphy.
Frank L. Burton.	James Holyrood.
* John Prior.	F. Alisky.
* Wm. Stewart.	Peter Startzoff.
* Walter Daily.	Philip Kashenzroff.
* A. Kashenzroff.	John Gorman.
N. Haley.	Wm. Donnelly.
T. S. Smith.	John Leman.

And thirteen unreadable Russian names in the same handwriting. Names marked (*) in Burton's writing.

This letter is introduced as evidence that, although the miners, as a body, refused to recognize the authority of the provisional government or to join in any attempt for public welfare, yet that they relied upon the Jamestown to take care of them.

From the testimony of nearly all who signed this paper, I learned subsequently that the opposition was entirely due to Mr. Pilz having taken offense at a supposed affront, in not having received an earlier notification than he did of the called meeting, the delay being through accident, and so explained to him at the meeting. As superintendent he caused men to sign who were in favor of the government. Mr. Pilz explained to me that fear of taxation influenced him.

The government established is in successful operation. Its existence relieves me of a source of embarrassment; before its formation every citizen applied to me for any action he might think desirable; now all applications are made through the chief magistrate, and we are thus enabled to do as much as possible to assist the civil authorities, instead of exercising arbitrary power.

All offenses committed by Indians outside of the white settlement I take charge of, and apply military government to them alone.

[After having described the condition of affairs in connection with the Indians, I wrote:] While thus the Indian branch is under comparatively good government and discipline, the white settlement, of far inferior numbers, has presented a contrast.

During the month it has been reported that one "discharged soldier," a druggist, who among his drugs keeps barrels of molasses, had shot at his wife with a revolver; that another "discharged soldier," a saloon keeper, had, at midnight, beaten shamefully a woman who occupied temporarily the position of wife to him, and had turned her into the street; that still another, a member of the council, had endangered life by reckless revolver-shooting at dogs on a neighbor's stoop; and many minor offenses.

As there was a civil government established to meet such emergencies, all of which were caused by drunkenness, I took no steps further than to send, in one case, a small guard to stop the row. The "government" took no action in either, the sum of $6 per month set aside for the purpose having been insufficient to provide police force of sufficient ability and courage.

The attempt to form this local government was wise, but the method was not so; the idea was good, but it was badly put into shape; there was not a sufficient consultation and exchange of views, nor a thorough understanding of the relative value of interests involved.

The miners, who now form a strong, and soon will the strongest, part of the community, refused to enter into the arrangement; they had reasons, which I then doubted, but now believe, to think that their interests would not be fairly represented.

The refusal was couched in offensive words, and a quarrel sprung up in which, as is usual, there was wrong and right, upon both sides; under such circumstances, little could be expected of even a capable organization. Such an organization was not made. Some of the men who were elected as councilmen, carried into office an utter ignorance as to their duties, an utter indifference to the welfare of the community, and reputations which did not command respect.

Colonel Ball, the chief magistrate, has done his utmost to effect some good, but with the slight assistance given him by the "councilmen," and hampered by the requirements of his position as collector, has been unable to accomplish anything of value.

For example, the merchants entered into a compact not to order molasses by the September steamer. One of them, Sam Goldstein, a Jew, received by this steamer a large stock; the others, who had kept their compact, were naturally incensed at this breach of faith, and consequent "corner" in molasses, and called upon the "chief magistrate" to seize Goldstein's molasses. He detained it a day in the government warehouse, and called a meeting of the council; they failed to meet, and he, as was his duty as collector, delivered the lawfully imported stuff.

The consequence is a general back down from the compact, and the October steamer will bring large quantities, and drunkenness and riot will rebegin.

In dispatch of October I reported:

The following document, posted on the door of the custom-house, signalizes the fall of the republic, whose rise and progress I have described:

OCTOBER 9, 1879.

To the Residents of Sitka Mining District:

The undersigned, elected under the provisional government of Sitka, have become convinced that their power to act efficiently is greatly impaired by the fact that a large and important element of the population was not represented in the formation of said government; have decided to surrender their offices back to the people; and for the purpose of having them decide upon the action now to be taken, do invite a general meeting of all of the men in the district, to be held at the custom-house, on Sunday, October 12.

M. D. BALL.
PAT. CORCORAN.
T. McCAULEY.
N. G. METROPOLSKY.
F. HALTERN.

This step restores the status to that which existed upon our arrival, with, however, a greatly modified public opinion.

The collector now, in virtue of his office as such, represents the civil, and this ship the military, elements of the government.

The cause which operated to extinguish this attempt at government was one which taxed it beyond its abilities, and in the end proved to be beyond the power of the entire governing power which could be applied to a serious case in Alaska, viz, the civil and military as above indicated, and in addition, that of the United States district court at Portland, Oreg., to which it was referred. This was a case of shooting which, at the time, was presumed would be followed by the death of the shot man. This shooting occurred on the morning of October 9, the notice on the custom-house appearing later in the day, and being supplemented by a letter from the collector, as follows:

CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Sitka, Alaska, October 9, 1879—11 a. m.

CAPTAIN: You have before this hour learned the fact that a miner was dangerously, probably fatally, shot in the city last night, the offending party having, as I understand, surrendered himself to you.

The provisional government having failed in sustaining itself, and its officers having called a meeting to resign their trust, there is just at this time no form of civil authority here strictly empowered to take charge of the case, unless I assume it as collector.

I, therefore, request that you, representing the other branch of the government, cooperate with me in the steps necessary to preserve the matter in proper form for justice to be administered, when we shall be instructed from Washington as to the manner in which it is to be accomplished.

I have called a commission of three citizens to meet this afternoon at two o'clock, and take the wounded man's testimony, and such other evidence as may be obtainable, and would be pleased if you would send a jury of your officers to assist them, and produce the offender for identification.

M. D. BALL, Collector.

To which I replied as follows:

OCTOBER 9, 1879.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date a board of officers, of which Lieut. F. M. Symonds is senior member, has been directed to co-operate with the jury called together by yourself.

The prisoner is, and will remain, under military control, and will be sent, suitably guarded, to be identified by the wounded man.

I must urge upon you the necessity of exerting your influence at once to allay the excitement among the miners, to such extent that no person or persons will make any attempt at lawless proceedings. Such a course would deal Alaskan interests a severe blow; the contrary will inure to its benefit.

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, U. S. N.

The following instructions were referred to Lieutenant Symonds:

U. S. SHIP JAMESTOWN,
Sitka, October 9, 1879.

SIR: You are hereby appointed senior member of a board of officers, who, in compliance with the request of Collector M. D. Ball, the only representative of civil authority in Sitka, will co-operate with a jury of citizens called together by Colonel Ball, in investigating the circumstances connected with the affray which last night took place between two miners named (as reported) John Williams and Edward Roy.

Passed Asst. Surg. N. M. Ferebee, and Master G. C. Hanus, U. S. N., will be associated with you in this duty.

The investigation will take place as early as possible on account of the dangerous condition of one of the parties.

Respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, Commanding.

The commission met at an appointed hour, and the man Williams, who had, immediately after the affray, run to our guard-house and surrendered himself to the sergeant in charge, and who, soon after, was brought on board of the ship as a prisoner, was sent ashore for identification by the wounded, and supposed to be dying, man Roy.

Lieutenant Symonds, with a strong armed body of marines, was detailed to escort the prisoner through the streets of Sitka, with instructions to proceed, if necessary, to any extreme in preventing the execution of an expressed purpose, by numbers of the miners, to hang the supposed murderer.

He was in no way interfered with in the performance of this duty, the miners yielding readily to our authority. There can, however, be no doubt that the presence of the Jamestown prevented a resort to Lynch law, as the whole community was intensely excited.

The commission appointed to investigate this case, found as follows:

The undersigned, a mixed commission of officers of the United States ship Jamestown and citizens of Sitka, convened by order of Commander L. A. Beardslee, and request of M. D. Ball, to inquire into the circumstances of the shooting of Edwin Roy on the night of October 8, 1879, having taken all of the evidence available in the case, do certify, that from the same we are of the opinion that John Williams should be held to await the issue of the wounds of said Roy, and for trial for the said shooting, subject to such orders as may be received from the authorities at Washington.

F. M. SYMONDS, Lieutenant, U. S. N.
N. M. FEREBEE, Passed Assistant Surgeon, U. S. N.
G. C. HANUS, Master, U. S. N.
M. P. BERRY.
G. E. PILZ.
JOHN G. BRADY.

This finding, &c., was transmitted to me by the collector, accompanied by the following letter:

CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Sitka, October 9, 1879—5 p. m.

CAPTAIN: As notified by you in your letter of this date, the board of officers appointed to co-operate with one of the citizens in investigating the case of the shooting of Edwin R. Roy, reported and entered upon the examination which is just closed.

I inclose you herewith a copy of their finding, also of the deposition of Roy taken by me, and in full consciousness of his situation and under oath; also copy of other evidence.

I shall report the case to my department also.

I gather from your letter that you will keep charge of the prisoner until the result of the wounds of Roy is known, and instructions received from Washington. I hope such is your intention.

M. D. BALL,
Collector.

The inclosed deposition, which was the only evidence taken under oath by the commission, was as follows:

Deposition of Edward Robert Roy.

My name is Edward Robert Roy; was born in Manchester, England; am thirty-seven years old; married; my wife resides in Newry, Ireland.

Scotty and I were at Mooney's saloon singing and enjoying ourselves last night. My song was well liked, but Scotty's disapproved, so he commenced calling me names, such as "sons of b——s." Afterwards I went home, and to bed, and had been there about three-quarters of an hour when he came to my cabin and demanded admittance calling me "sons of b——" again, which I refused.

He then kicked the door panel in, and I went to replace and secure it, and he jumped on me, and grabbed my throat and threw me down, and commenced emptying his revolver into my body. I think he fired five shots.

(John Williams, or "Scotty," was here brought in, and fully identified by Roy as the man who shot him.) Roy continued:

I never carried a weapon in my life. Had a small pocket-knife in my pocket to cut tobacco with. Did not use it in the scuffle, or cut "Scotty" with it.

The statement of the accused, John Williams, was not taken under oath, and differed from that of Roy, in that he asserted that Roy began the fight by attacking him with a knife, and that after being cut he fired at Roy in self-defense. (There were several, not serious, cuts in various portions of his body.)

The testimony of the two witnesses summoned by the commission had no bearing upon the actual fight, and no oath was administered to either. And had such form been complied with, one of the two, viz, John Platoff, a creole member of the Greek Church, would not have considered it binding upon him unless administered by the Greek priest.

Upon subsequent investigation I found reason to believe that the commission had not examined into the case very thoroughly; and that the cabin where the affray took place was equally the home of Roy and Williams, and that the row probably started through the act of Roy in locking Williams out of his own quarters. There was nothing in the character of either of the men, who were "chums," to cause a doubt in my mind as to the true nature of the affair; it was simply a fight between two drunken men, who when sober were friends; and in it both men got hurt. Had Roy's knife gone in an inch deeper into Williams, or the bullets from Williams' revolver done less damage, the relative position of the parties would have been reversed, and Roy would have been tried for the assault on Williams; for, as far as can be judged by the evidence, the two men were equally to blame.

The wounded man Roy was taken charge of by Dr. Frerrebee, of the Jamestown, who in course of time succeeded in restoring him to a sanitary condition, which was hardly to have been hoped for in a man whose body had been made a receptacle for five bullets, caliber .34.

The prisoner Williams was held as such on board of the Jamestown until November 10, when he was delivered to a deputy United States marshal, upon warrant of the United States marshal at Portland, Oreg. and carried by him to Portland for trial.

By the steamer arriving at Sitka December 25, the collector received a subpœna which called him to Portland to give testimony in the case, in regard to which he had no knowledge beyond that obtained from taking the supposed-to-be-dying man's deposition, and hearsay.

The man Williams was tried before the United States court of the district, and discharged by Justice Drady, who held that as the assault was made with a deadly weapon, there was no law by which it could be punished. This action of the court caused me embarrassment, as, with my slight knowledge of law, it seemed to conflict with previous actions by the same court in regard to Alaska affairs. The Indian murderer, Kot-ko-wot, was hung at Portland for a murder committed in Alaska, and Major Campbell, United States Army, when in command at Sitka, having, in pursuance of what he considered his duty, committed an act of punishment of a blackleg, which by the Oregon court was held to be illegal, was by it tried and sentenced to pay a heavy fine.

Very uncertain as to my own position in case this court might differ with me as to right, and as to my duty in the event of my being at any time subpœned to Portland, which would necessitate, if obeyed, several weeks of absence from my command, I requested from the department instructions as to my duty, under similar circumstances.

The history of this case has been thus given in detail, not because it was in itself of much importance, but because it illustrates very completely the situation of affairs at Sitka, and the great necessity which exists that the community should receive some recognition from the law-making powers. In reporting the case to the department, I commented thus:

The whole lawful power of the United States Government, with full co-operation of all respectable citizens, has been brought to bear upon a serious offense against public safety and human life (the wounded man will probably die), and the utmost we can do is to hold the offender a prisoner, to be tried by somebody at some indefinite time, and this only because I, having the power, am willing to assume the responsibility, believing that in so doing I am acting in the interests of right.

The accused man probably committed a crime, and had the Jamestown not been present he would have been lynched. With the ship to furnish force, the man was saved from this fate to eventually escape from the clutches of the law.

ENDING OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

On the 25th of October the meeting called by the officials of the late provisional government was held, and on the following day I received from the collector the following:

CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Sitka, Alaska, October 25, 1879.

CAPTAIN: It becomes my duty to inform you that at the meeting held this evening in the custom-house, called to consider the subject of the formation of some civil government for this section, the only action taken was the appointment of a committee to prepare and forward a petition to Congress.

The failure of the lately attempted "provisional government" to sustain itself was announced, and the meeting (which was very small) decided that it was unadvisable to repeat the experiment.

I had, on the 15th of September last, presented my own resignation as chief magistrate to the "council," having found the position incompatible with my official duties as collector.

I was induced to withhold it until the people had an opportunity to decide on some other arrangement to take the place of that they had unsuccessfully tried, by the assurance that my resignation would be followed by that of all the other members.

As I cannot, consistently with known and defined duties, continue the effort to discharge those which are both uncertain and uncongenial, I shall make no further attempt to assert any authority with which the late action of the people may be supposed to have clothed me.

The people having had full opportunity to frame another organization, and having failed to do so, I must consider myself released from further action in behalf of the movement.

In making this announcement, I will add my conviction that only a condition of extreme personal danger from lawless whites or threatening Indians (either of which the presence of your ship prevents) can arouse the community to such action as would impart the necessary vitality to any form of government, self-organized, and lacking the authority of that organic law to which this people have long, rightfully but vainly, looked for some organization charged with the protection of their persons, and the administration of their property.

M. D. BALL, Collector.

The foregoing letter was inclosed to the department with my dispatch dated November 19, and in regard to its contents, I wrote:

In my last I reported the demise of the provisional government. I find that I was premature in so reporting. It was still in existence at that date (October 9), as I subsequently learned by a letter from Colonel Ball, the chief magistrate. I may be pardoned for my error, inasmuch as the character of the government was not one the existence or non-existence of which would attract attention. At the meeting referred to, the miners attended, prepared to co-operate with the merchants, but the latter, having for various reasons (among which was the necessity of taxation, the possible interference with the traffic in molasses, of drunken or disorderly persons being arrested and confined, and probably some others best known to themselves), concluded that they did not wish any government, did not attend, so no new one was formed, and the experiment has proved a dead failure, principally for lack of suitable material.

In addition to the reasons assigned by Colonel Ball as operating against the successful formation of any kind of a home government in either, I would give, as bearing upon it:

First. A general impression that any effort made by themselves would, if successful, lessen their chances of recognition by the United States.

Second. A general disinclination to take any steps which might involve an expenditure of any money, and consequent taxation.

Third. A general timidity which caused most of the citizens to fear to come in contact with the disorderly portion of the community.

Fourth. A general unwillingness among the shopkeepers to give up traffic in molasses.

Fifth. A general condition of apathy and lethargy peculiar to Sitka, enlivened only by a selfishness which caused nearly every man's interests to be in opposition to those of others.

The letter from Collector Ball dated October 25, gave me reason, which was confirmed by subsequent conversation with him, to believe that, in considering that the provisional government had at last come to an end, he and I were in full accord.

Henceforth the governing of the people was left, as much as was practicable, in their own hands, arrangements being made between the collector and myself that he should notify me of the occurrence of any irregularities on shore which might make the intervention of the forces under my command desirable, I undertaking to respond to such notification by giving all aid required, reserving to myself, however, the final judgment in any case involving arrest, the necessity for which was not of immediate urgency, and the confinement in the guard-house, either for restraint or punishment.

Early in December the collector notified me by letter that he had arrested a Russian for stealing sashes from the hospital building, and requested that I should grant him—

> The privilege of the services of the guard in keeping him in duress for some time; which authority I will assume under my present official and late provisional position.

This action upon his part was considered by me as a wide and unjustifiable departure from the line of action we had agreed upon. The Russian arrested was a harmless, half-witted creole man, whom extreme poverty had driven to the larceny. Many others, both Indians and creoles, had been from time to time reported to me for similar offenses, and upon investigation I had found them to be objects more worthy of charity than punishment; and, had I deemed it advisable, he could have been arrested at any time and no harm be done by the delay. And it was not in accordance with my ideas to recognize this assumption of authority through power derived from the late attempt at government which, during its existence, had proved a clog to the advancement of the interests of the people.

I therefore so expressed myself by letter to the collector. But as he had in this case requested one of the lieutenants of the Jamestown to give orders to the guard to imprison the man, I did not think it advisable to undo what had been done, and gave orders for the retention of the prisoner.

Correspondence upon this and subsequent events showed that I was mistaken in my idea that the collector agreed with me as to the status of the late government, and on December 19 he addressed to me an official letter, in which he presented an argument by which he maintained a claim to act as a provisional official, and to hold authority to prevent or punish any offenses. This letter was signed, "M. D. Ball, Collector and C. J., Sitka Prov. Govt."

Failing to be convinced by the arguments presented that the collector or any other person possessed a right to call upon me as senior naval officer present, for any official action, through any title or office derived from the late provisional government, I so informed the collector; and this failure upon my part to concur with his views in an official matter led to a breach in the plans of co-operation which we had established, which was however temporarily checked by the departure of the collector in the steamer leaving Sitka December 21. Which departure left the entire management of affairs, afloat and ashore, in my hands until May 15, 1880, when Collector Ball returned from Washington, he having previously returned from Portland by the steamer of 25th of January, and again left by the steamer of 27th January. During these four months I received however much valuable aid and counsel from the deputy collector, Dr. Dulaney.

Before the departure of Collector Ball in December a question arose, in regard to which it was necessary that we should hold consultation, as to our respective duties. Our views differed, and the question was by me referred to the Navy Department for instructions, and I presume by the collector to his department also, I having informed him as to my proposed action.

The question was as to the rights of United States citizens to attempt to obtain an ownership to any of the public land in Alaska, by pre-emption, and as to our relative duties in connection with such attempts.

For a full understanding of the merits of this question, it will be necessary for me to relate the history of the same up to this date.

HOMESTEAD AND PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS.

One of the first services asked of me by the citizens of Sitka was that I should represent to the department the great necessity which existed of some method being provided by which settlers could acquire homes, and a legal title to them; and in August, 1879, I wrote as follows:

> I would request instructions in regard to a method by which homes can be procured here. There are a number of miners, mining engineers, and others who are desirous of settling in Sitka and bringing their families. If they could pre-empt land or purchase land or houses from the government, the place would take a step forward; this they cannot do.
> By the decision of Hon. O. H. Browning, Secretary of the Interior, dated October 26, 1867, and directed to the Hon. Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State, "such claims and settlements are not only without the sanction of law, but are in direct violation of the provisions of the laws of Congress applicable to public domain secured to the United States by a treaty made with a foreign nation."
> The government owns within the precincts of this town 3,000 acres of land, which could be made valuable, and the island of Biorca would furnish grazing ground for 500 cattle. A short distance to the northward are the Katliansky plains, where are about 250 acres of good grazing ground.

In dispatch dated October 11, 1879, I said:

A number of miners arrived by the steamer yesterday, men who had been at work at the Capiar mines, and most of whom had been unsuccessful.

These men find themselves upon arrival houseless. I have sanctioned their taking possession of, putting in order, and dwelling in the Army hospital building, which is commodious and empty. I think I can safely count upon their services should I need any extra force.

In my dispatch dated January 22, 1880, I wrote, in connection with suggestions as to government necessary:

The land here should be surveyed and existing titles perfected and protected, and it made possible to transfer real estate. The government owns much land and a number of buildings (the latter going to ruin), which could be sold at good prices. Dilapidated as they are, many of the buildings are now rented by the collector, and they are eagerly sought. The development of Alaska would be greatly advanced if the public land could be thrown open to pre-emption, and section 2258 of the Revised Statutes not be considered as bearing upon it. In such an event the rights of the native Indians should be considered as are those referred to in section 2310.

The circumstances which made it necessary for me to ask instructions from the department are detailed in the following dispatch, to which the notice referred to is appended:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN, THIRD RATE,
Off Sitka, December 19, 1879.

SIR: I feel it my duty, acting as the senior representative of the government here, to call your attention to certain illegal acts which are being committed, but which do not properly come within the province of naval forces to prevent, unless duly called upon by competent authority. In apparent ignorance of all laws upon the subject, as given in the Revised Statutes of the United States, sec. 2258, many parties here are going through a series of forms, by which they imagine that they obtain pre-emption rights over such plots of public land in this vicinity as they may fancy. The forms are simple, the plots selected are staked, and in some cases fenced, notices are put up, and copies of said notices, together with a "claim," recorded by the collector in a blank-book kept for the purpose, and for recording mining claims.

So long as these processes were confined to the wild land I could see no harm in it, and did not feel called upon to interfere; but lately two parties have, so far as these processes go, taken possession of part of the ground reserved by the government as a parade ground and for officers' quarters.

In this emergency it seemed proper that some one here representing the government should protest. After consultation with Colonel Ball, and receiving from him the assurance that he did not consider it to be his duty so to act, I prepared a notice, copy of which is inclosed, and posted it on the door of the custom-house, and in person notified the two claimants of the illegality of their acts. Both yielded and expressed willingness to remove all obstructions. As I had no desire to commit the department to the assumption of a responsibility which does not probably belong to it, and which it might be unwilling to assume, I simply directed that no obstruction should be caused by fences, and that all "notices" of "claiming" should be removed, and that all building, &c., should be postponed until I should receive from the department instructions as to its views, which I now respectfully request.

I make this report with reluctance, for my sympathies are with those who are thus trying to obtain homes in Sitka, and I feel that after doing what it has for Sitka, the department may be unwilling to take any step which may not be its duty, which would tend to retard the advancement of the place.

I also regret being compelled to perform a duty the non-performance of which may reflect upon the collector, for whom I, with every one else here, have the greatest esteem. By force of character he has acquired a leadership here, and has settled wisely many embarrassing questions, and my duties have been made comparatively easy by his course. In justice to him I should say that he informs me that upon each occasion he has informed claimants that his recording had no legal status, and simply amounted to a written history of the affair. And he had, previous to my knowing of the last case of "pre-emption," himself posted a notice warning against "further encroachments." We differ only in that I think the first encroachment should be included in the warning. His notice was taken down when mine was posted.

I am very averse to using a particle of authority here which is unnecessary, or to entangling the forces under my command in any domestic complication; but having been honored by the department with discretionary orders, I cannot see that I can do less than fully apprise it of the state of affairs, and ask for its instructions, so that I may make no mistake.

Very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, U. S. N.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

NOTICE.

In pursuance with the duties with which I am intrusted by the government, I would call the attention of the public to the following extract from the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 2258, page 417:

"The following classes of land, unless otherwise especially provided for by law, shall not be subject to the rights of pre emption:

"First. Lands included in any reservation, by any treaty, law, or proclamation of the President, for any purpose.

"Second. Lands included within the limits of any incorporated town or city."

And to the following extract from letter of Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, to General U. S. Grant, Acting Secretary of War:

"Claims of pre-emption and settlement of the land districts of Alaska are in direct violation of laws applicable to the public domain, and military force may be used, if necessary, to remove intruders."

All are therefore notified that the parade ground, and other pieces of land reserved by the government, as per map in the custom-house, are, by the above-quoted sections, exempt from pre-emption.

Commander, U. S. N., Senior Government Officer Present.

To this request for instructions the department answered as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 17, 1880.

SIR: Your letter of the 19th ultimo, in regard to the rights of pre-emption of public lands at Sitka, Alaska, has been received.

Your course in reference to the pre-emption of lands or lots occupied by the public authorities is approved.

You are not expected to resort to force in such cases as those referred to, but will, as you have done, notify settlers that such lands are occupied exclusively for the use of the United States.

As regards other lands, the department is of opinion that they cannot be embraced within the pre-emption laws of the United States; but upon this subject you will leave the collector to act upon his own responsibility, as decisions in regard to questions of this kind do not properly pertain to the jurisdiction of the commanding officer of the Jamestown.

Whether parties whose claims are recorded by the collector get their titles hereafter must depend upon what Congress may do in regard to this matter.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Upon receipt of the above letter, its contents were made known to the parties who had made the claims which were the origin of the question, and they at once complied with its requirements. And so far as the Navy Department had power the question was settled; and to this day no man can obtain a legal right to any property, except mineral land, in Alaska.

Although not in my power to assist any person in this connection, I was called upon often for such assistance.

I will give one typical case, which will illustrate the needs of the people and the position I occupied in the matter.

A druggist in the town (one of the number who signed the petition to the President in April, 1879) saw fit to begin the erection of a building across one of the streets of the town. The people who occupied property which would be injured by such a building very naturally objected to his carrying out his plans, but their objections were not heeded; several hard-up miners, who were known to be men who would fight if necessary, were employed to dig foundations, &c., and no one in Sitka had legal right to stop the building, or courage enough to take any steps. In this emergency a public meeting was called, at which the following letter was prepared and forwarded to me:

SITKA, ALASKA, June 18, 1880.

SIR: We, citizens and property-owners of Sitka, respectfully request you to prevent James Schmeig from erecting a building on the street in front of George Cozian's, as he is about to do.

This street has been open for one hundred years, and has always been a street of this town, and by putting up the building proposed the rights of many property-owners will be damaged.

Respectfully, yours,

George Kastromitenoff.	N. A. Fuller.	L. Petalin.
A. J. Linden.	D. Martin.	N. Chichineff.
Nat. Hilton.	A. Cohen.	P. Murphey.
A. G. Cozian.	H. E. Cutter.	Pat Corcoran.

And others with unreadable signatures.

Capt. L. A. BEARDSLEE.

REPLY.

GEORGE KASTROMITENOFF and others:

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your communication of yesterday, in which you, as citizens and property-owners of Sitka, request that I should prevent Mr. James Schmeig from erecting a building upon a certain location designated, I would state that I cannot comply with your request.

It is not the province of the United States Government, certainly not that of the naval branch of the same, to interfere with the private affairs of the citizens of Sitka; nor to undertake, without law to back it, the settlement of disputes which do not involve a disturbance of the public peace.

The pre-emption or taking possession of any land whatever (except mineral) in Alaska, is an act which violates the laws of the United States. It is not for me to say that one man may and another may not violate this law.

I have already referred the question involved to the Navy Department, and have received instructions that "decisions in regard to questions of this nature do not properly pertain to the jurisdiction of the commanding officer of the Jamestown."

The history of the foregoing case has been thus given in detail, not because of any inherent importance, but because it adds to the evidence heretofore given as to the helpless condition of the citizens of the United States who have sought Alaska for homes, and shows plainly the inefficiency of military or naval laws to furnish the required help.

The only step that I could be justified in taking was to suppress riot; and in so doing I gave protection to a man engaged in violating the rights of the entire community. I fully sympathized with these people. Mr. Schmeig was attempting to commit an act which in any other civilized place in the world could be prevented by lawful proceedings; but there was not a power in Sitka to prevent him.

Public feeling was much excited, and threats of forcible measures were made. The people were warned by me that in such an event, as a street fight would probably endanger the lives of persons not engaged, troops would be landed immediately upon the start of a riot, and all persons engaged in such riot arrested.

That night the building, as far as it had progressed, was pulled down by "unknown parties," and Mr. Schmeig yielded to the advice given to him by the collector, myself, and others, and to his fear of consequences, and gave up the attempt.

EXPEDITION FOR RELIEF OF MAIL STEAMER CALIFORNIA.

The monthly mail steamer due at Sitka June 7, 1879, failing to arrive, and grave apprehensions being entertained that she had met with some accident in the inland waters—in which case, judging by the fate of the passengers who were lost on the steamer George Wright a year before, those on board of the California would also be exposed to great perils—I resolved to take all steps in my power to give them assistance.

A small steamer, the Rose, belonging to a merchant in Sitka, was chartered, outfitted, and armed with howitzer and Gatling gun, and under the command of Ensign N. R. Usher, who volunteered for the duty, dispatched to Wrangell on the 18th of June to search en route.

The steamer was chartered because I had no confidence in the ability of either of our steam launches to perform with safety the journey of 160 miles, until we should have been able to effect considerable alterations in both.

The Rose was represented by every one as seaworthy and well adapted for the voyage. The trip should have been performed in a week or ten days, allowing ample time for the search of various places on the route, which Mr. Usher was directed to make.

The mail steamer arrived on the 23d June, having been detained at Portland. She had met the Rose just outside of Wrangell Harbor on the 22d; had made endeavor to tow her back to Sitka, but found that such effort would probably result in the swamping of the Rose, which, it was reported, would go into Wrangell for fuel, and start back immediately. She should have reached Sitka by the 26th or 27th. Failing to do so, anxiety in regard to her sprung up, which was increased by many tales, now brought forward for the first time, as to the unseaworthiness of the Rose.

On the 2d of July I thought it advisable to make some effort to hunt her up, and, fitting out the largest steam launch, went myself in search, finding her at anchor, broken down, in a harbor in the eastern part of Revil Straits, on the evening of the 3d July; and after effecting repairs, both boats returned to Sitka on the 5th.

From the report of Mr. Ushur, I became convinced that the condition of the boiler, &c., of the Rose was such that I would not be justified in ever again using her for any purpose, she having narrowly escaped loss on this trip; and my own experience in our best launch showed me that I could not depend upon these boats for any distant service. We were thus reduced to oars and sails as our only propelling power to reach any part of Alaska, beyond a few miles from Sitka Harbor, and under date of July 15 I reported:

> Our steam launches are good boats, but with both of them we have had more or less trouble with the engine and boilers, and when we get them both into trustworthy condition they would still be unequal to the work of making surveys far from the ship. They cannot carry coal, water, provisions, arms, instruments, &c., sufficient to do the work. For winter work here a small steamer, such as those known as the "ninety-day gunboats," is required. She could run with ease to any point where American interests were threatened; while, should I hear of troubles at Wrangell, or the Stikiene River, the most probable places, I should be helpless; for, although I should wish to, I could not go to the rescue. Such a position would be a most painful one, and I would earnestly request either that in the fall this ship may be relieved by a steamer, or, if it be considered necessary that she should stay here, a suitable steamer may be sent to co-operate. I cannot again send the Rose; she is hopelessly used up.

During the next summer, as will be described in due sequence, a few weeks, work in a small chartered steamer, the Favorite, resulted in the accomplishment of much valuable work.

SCHOOLS.

There were in Sitka about sixty or seventy children, of whom the larger number were those of the creoles. Many of them were bright and intelligent, but all were growing up in ignorance and vice.

I felt that in carrying out my instructions to advance the interests of the United States in Alaska, the establishment of a school at which these children could be fitted to occupy their future position as United States citizens would be justified. By my request a gentleman well qualified for the duties, Mr. Alonzo E. Austin, of New York, then residing temporarily at Sitka, undertook the superintendence of a school, and by personal canvass a subscription of sufficient amount to recompense him was raised, and a room in the barracks building, which had already been partially fitted by agents of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, Mr. John G. Brady and Miss Kellogg, and in which a school had been kept for a short time by them two years before, was assigned again to the purpose; and during the remainder of my stay in Sitka, and until this date, this school has been in successful operation, supported partially by subscription and partially by your office, which allows to it the services of one of the interpreters who are necessarily employed by the commanding officer at Sitka.

I have, since beginning this report, received from Sitka the programme of an exhibition and examination of this school, and by it I see tha children who could not speak a word of English, or read and write in their own native Russian, are now capable of doing all these things in good English, in which they recite and write compositions.

The training these children received in the school exerted a strong influence over their parents and other adults, and thus it became a great help to me in preserving order in the town.

The school was from time to time visited by arriving passengers, among whom were several capitalists from San Francisco, and clergymen. All expressed approbation, and all promised assistance. Bishop Nestor, of the Greek Church, alone kept this promise.

During the autumn and winter of 1879 the white population of Sitka was greatly increased, and, as many of the new arrivals were of a far higher class than the average of the residents at the date of our arrival, the tone of the community was greatly improved. Missionaries had been sent by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, and their work soon began to be apparent upon the Indians.

Business men, and miners who had been deterred from bringing their families to Sitka on account of the absence of all law, became satisfied that it was safe to send for them, and a church for whites, another for Indians, and Sunday-schools sprang into existence.

In April, 1880, I caused a census to be taken, with the following result, in which I have not thought necessary to include the names of the creole population:

Citizens of Sitka, April, 1880, classified by occupations.

Miners	82	Mariners	3
Saloon-keepers	16	Butchers	2
Traders	11	Barbers	2
Carpenters	7	Brewers	2
Clerks	6	Gardeners	2
Government officials	3	Laborers	2
Blacksmiths	3	Baker	1
Lumbermen	3	Druggist	1
Teachers	3	Unemployed	45
Engineers	3

In the above classification, only those not creoles are counted. Among them there were various trades represented, such as fishermen, fur-cleaners, tanners, tinsmiths, carpenters, tailors, mariners, and hoo-che-noo makers; and there was also one Russian, the priest.

Shortly after the taking of the census, most of the miners left Sitka for the purpose of prospecting the country in various directions, but nearly all remained in Alaska.

During the summer and fall of 1880, the population increased gradually, most of the persons arriving coming to stay. Among the arrivals were the Rev. G. W. Lyon and wife; the former a missionary sent by the Presbyterian board of home missions.

Upon the arrival of Mr. Lyon it was necessary to provide him with a home and a suitable room for a church and school; this was done by setting aside for his use rooms in government buildings, viz, the barracks and hospital.

But for the assistance thus given by the government, the object of the mission board could not have been attained.

Coincident with the increase of population business revived. Several new houses and places of business were erected, and a number of small vessels were constructed in an extemporized ship-yard, fronting the government parade ground. As this business tended to advance the interests of the country, I made no opposition to the use of the government reserve, it being understood that such use was but temporary and subject to discontinuation if necessary.

Some little commerce sprung up, and during the summer several vessels arrived with freight, principally lumber; for although the surrounding country was rich in valuable timber, there was no mill by which it could be utilized. One belonging to a company in San Francisco being so dilapidated that it could not be used economically, and the company neglecting to operate it held it at so high a price that parties desiring to purchase and put it in running order were unable to do so.

A small steamer, the Favorite, belonging to the Northwest Trading Company, began making monthly trips to various places in the Archipelago, where the company had established trading posts; and Sitka having been selected as her port of departure, the family of Captain Vanderbilt, who commanded her, became residents, and were also furnished with quarters in government buildings, the collector having authority to rent such buildings, of which there are eight or ten of considerable value, besides others of comparatively little. The valuable ones are custom-house, barracks, castle, hospital, two warehouses, clubhouse, boat-house, and two dwellings, occupied by the collector and deputy collector. All of these buildings are becoming dilapidated; they not being founded on stone, the foundation timbers have become very rotten, and the roofs have become water-soaked and leaky.

A survey of these buildings, and an estimate as to the amount of repairs absolutely necessary to preserve them from destruction, was made during the summer of 1880 by officials of the Treasury Department, assisted by the carpenter of the Jamestown, Mr. Martin, which, I presume, has been submitted to the Treasury Department. I was not furnished with a copy.

WHARF.

Among other property of the government was a large wharf, which had been built by the Army. Upon our arrival we found this wharf so nearly destroyed that it was determined to place it in order as far as practicable.

A board of officers, of which Lieutenant-Commander Rockwell was senior member, was detailed to devise a plan for its restoration, which plan was approved by the collector and myself, and operations were at once begun by a working force from the Jamestown; and at the expense of the Navy Department the wharf was put into comparatively good and safe condition.

As a part of the plan it was arranged that a pile of stones should be so placed that they would give support to short preventer-piles, the bases of which should be above the water-mark, and thus safe from the action of teredos. This pile was to be placed at the expense of the town, or rather such persons as should use the wharf for landing freight, upon which wharfage should be charged.

Collector Ball undertook this part of the work.

Owing to reasons with which I was not made acquainted, the collector was not able to carry out his arrangement, and up to the date of my detachment, in September, 1880, the stone pile had not been built.

The wharf stood the heavy gales of the winter of 1879–'80, but owing to a radical defect in its original construction, was considerably weakened by them. This defect was in the foundation, which consisted of crib work of timber filled with heavy stones, and built on a steep incline. The teredos honey-combed the woodwork, and the stones rolled down the hill.

In the spring of 1880, it became evident that the wharf must be rebuilt, and I addressed to the collector the following letter:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN, July 29, 1880.

SIR: I would respectfully notify you that unless steps are soon taken tending to the preservation of the government wharf, the deterioration which is now taking place will have increased to such an extent as to render it impracticable to attempt to save it; and that in my judgment it will not stand through another winter.

Whenever you will cause to be completed the portion of the work undertaken by you, viz, the construction of a stone pile, of dimensions sufficient to insure a firm foundation, I will carry out the arrangements made last year, and cause piles to be erected which will greatly increase the security of those already placed by my orders.

M. D. BALL, Esq., Collector.

To which letter the collector replied in a letter which contained, beside personal matters not necessary to quote here, a history of the various effort which had been made by him for the preservation of the wharf, and a statement that lack of the necessary funds alone prevented him from completing the work.

This work never was completed, and, as I had predicted, the wharf was utterly destroyed by a severe gale of wind last October.

Up to this point this report has been confined to such subjects as served best to illustrate the position and condition of the citizens of the United States dwelling at Sitka, the relationship existing between them and the Indian natives, and the position assumed by the government through its representatives, Collector Ball and myself, in connection with their affairs.

The duties involved were irksome and uninteresting, and the responsibility great, inasmuch as it was frequently necessary, as has been shown, that acts should be performed by us which could not be justified by any law except the natural law by which might becomes right.

Our duties were rendered more complicated by uncertainty as to the jurisdiction of the United States district court of Oregon, and the strong possibility that its views might differ so seriously from ours that we would become personally responsible to the law for the performance of what seemed plainly to be duty.

In regard to the frequent violation of the two sections of the act of July 27, 1868, as amended in March, 1873, it would seem that we were possessed of full power to lawfully secure the punishment of offenders, but there were practical obstacles not contemplated by the law.

A trial at Portland involved a great expense to the government, which there was no chance of reducing by the proceeds of the fines, as not one hoo-che-noo maker in Sitka was able to pay the tenth of the amount.

Our relations with the Indian tribes were very interesting, and through the operations of the Jamestown, in connection with them, much improvement has been made in their condition and in their relationship with the whites. These operations will be now described.

PART II.

OPERATIONS OF THE JAMESTOWN IN CONNECTION WITH THE INDIAN TRIBES OF SOUTHEAST ALASKA.

PART II.

THE INDIAN TRIBES OF ALASKA, AND THE OPERATIONS OF THE JAMESTOWN IN CONNECTION THEREWITH.

It had been made my duty to restore harmonious relations between the whites and Indians of Southeast Alaska, and the steps taken to this end, in the preliminary effort to establish harmony among the whites themselves, have been detailed.

My position in regard to the Indians would have been very complicated had I made effort to control them in accordance with the provisions of the Revised Statutes bearing upon Indian affairs, for nearly all of the sections presuppose a very different condition of affairs than prevailed in Alaska.

The question whether the country was or was not Indian territory was an open one, on which learned authorities differed, and if it was so considered, I could not find authority for me to assume the functions which would have pertained to an Indian agent had there been one; and there had never been made with these Indians any treaty, the fulfillment of the provisions of which I could demand.

As far as I could understand the situation, I was left untrammeled to devise such scheme as should prove best adapted to restore the harmonious relations on a permanent basis.

The only sections of the Revised Statutes which were of service to me were section 2145:

> Except as to crimes, the punishment of which is expressly provided for in this title, the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, excepting the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country.

Also section 2146:

> The preceding section shall not be considered to extend to (crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to) any Indian committing an offense in the Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or to any case where, by treaty stipulation, theex clusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the tribes respectively.

From these I deduced—

First. The United States had exclusive jurisdiction over Alaska.

Second. As the senior government official present, it was my duty to maintain this jurisdiction.

Third. There were no complications due to treaties.

Fourth. The laws of the United States recognized the local laws of tribes as competent to inflict punishment.

Fifth. That as such jurisdiction had been turned over to sundry tribes by treaty stipulations, I would be justified in making use of the precedent when such action should seem to me advisable.

It was important that I should familiarize myself with their local laws, and while so engaged, I found that a study of their customs, character, and especially their superstitions, was equally necessary.

Before attempting any control over them, I had resolved upon two vital principles to be guided by:

First. To, under every circumstance, treat the Indians with perfect justice, to the best of my judgment; and, second, to avoid, unless forced to act otherwise, all attempts to govern by force, and to substitute, as far as possible, leading for driving.

INDIANS AT SITKA AND VICINITY.

Upon our arrival we found at the Sitka ranch about 150, mostly women, children, and old people; but within two to three days' canoe distance 300 or 400 more of the Sitka Indians were scattered, sea-otter hunting and fishing.

These could very soon concentrate in Sitka, and passing by the villages of other tribes with whom they were more or less connected, twice as many more could be collected, all provided with great canoes in which war parties of from 20 to 50 are carried. It was therefore necessary that we should acquire control of these tribes also.

If by a mistake we won the ill-will of the Indians, it would have been impossible for me, with the force at my disposal, to prevent outrages or punish the perpetrators.

The channels of the archipelago are marked by rapids and other dangers, which would effectually prevent a sailing ship from threading them; and our steam launches were not as suitable for the work as we had expected to find them. The engines, boilers, fuel, and water occupied so much space that there was not enough left to carry to any great distance, with provisions and outfit, an armed party of sufficient size to prove formidable upon arrival.

The launches were not provided with condensers, therefore could not use salt water, and were compelled to stop every four hours or oftener to obtain water at creeks and waterfalls, and while thus engaged at the mouth of a creek issuing from a dense forest the working party would be exposed to attack from concealed enemies.

Fully conscious that, should our course in handling them be such as to excite the opposition of the Indians, our physical force would not prove equal to the task of subduing them, it was deemed advisable that our efforts should be directed to obtain control of them with their good will and consent, instead of trying to do so against it, and to avoid taking any steps which would redound to the injury of the whites at Sitka if left again without protection, or which would tend to increase the dangers to such men as sought the interior on prospecting trips.

Further, any bombardment of an Indian village, especially the one at Sitka, would inflict injury upon friends and foes alike, for in nearly every tribe there are some families who are friendly, and these are generally the most powerful, they having amassed riches through trade with the whites.

I first sought for the causes which had produced the hostility between the whites and the Indians. I found a wide-spread fear of the Indians existing among the whites; this fear, however, was not as great as it had been, for the whites had begun again to furnish to the Indians the materials for making rum, a traffic which they had suspended during the worst of their scare.

Furnished with liquor, the Indians became dangerous, and every night wild orgies occurred in the ranch, accompanied by fights in which knives were freely used.

INDIAN LAWS.

According to Indian law the man who gets another drunk is responsible for the acts committed by him while in that state, and for his life if he dies or is killed. Thus at the very root of the difficulty I found the acts of bad white men.

The Indians have a code of laws based upon their ideas of strict justice. If one Indian inflicts a blow or any other injury upon another the matter can be, and frequently is, adjusted at a consultation in which both families are represented either by the inflicting of an equal injury or by the payment to the injured party of an equivalent. Even a life taken can be settled for in this way, payments being made, according to the amount assessed, in slaves, furs, or blankets. By the unwritten but thoroughly established provisions of this law a man who sells or gives to another liquor. from the effects of which death ensues, is responsible for the death, and must pay the assessed value. If an Indian dies while in the house of another, or if killed in any way while in the employ of another, the house-owner or employer is responsible- The Indians seldom fail to yield to this, the very foundation of their laws, and a refusal to make equitable reparation is always a cause of war.

ORIGIN OF TROUBLE WITH WHITES.

They had this cause against the whites: Five of the Kaksatis had been drowned while serving on board the American schooner San Diego, which was lost in Bering Straits.

Through their chief, Katlaan, they pressed the whites at Sitka for compensation for these men, at the rate of $200 each. After several conferences with the collector, who explained to them that by our laws this payment could not be made, the claim was reduced to one for the wages due the drowned men at the date of their death. I have been informed that these wages were collected at San Francisco, but swallowed up in fees and expenses. The Indians got nothing, and, naturally, could not comprehend the situation, and considered themselves as greatly wronged by the whites.

As chief of the tribe, it was the duty of Katlaan to act for them in this matter, and he, being angered by what he and they considered injustice, made threats against the whites "to get even."

He left Sitka immediately after the affray in February, and, being absent, all responsibility for it was laid upon his shoulders, and his name became a terror to the whites, who anticipated all sorts of trouble "when Katlaan came back," and some of whom, probably the same parties in all cases, furnished to Captain A'Court, of the Osprey, to Captain Selden, of the revenue-cutter Wolcott, and to me, when I took charge, statements to the effect that Katlaan had led the attacking party, having originated the outbreak, and that he endeavored to induce the Indians to sack the town; that, failing in this, he had gone down the coast to incite the other tribes to attack Sitka.

These statements were incorporated in their official reports.

Statements made to me by other reliable parties led me to doubt the truth of all of these accusations, and, after careful investigation, I became convinced that the man was not guilty of a very large percentage of the offenses charged against him.

I came to believe that on the night of the affray Katlaan was perfectly sober, and used his utmost influence to assist Annahootz in quieting the drunken Indians. Had he headed that party, every Kaksati in the ranch would have been in it; and instead of a broil between half a dozen drunken Kaksatis on one side and a large force of Kok-wa-tons on the other, there would have been a fight of considerable magnitude. I learned, too, from creole families that Katlaan had that night sent to their protection trusty members of his family, and that he himself went to the house of a white friend to defend him and his family if molested by any drunken Indians. In short, I became convinced that he was not in any way responsible for the affray, further than the effect which may have been produced by the threats made by him when angered by his failure to obtain compensation for the lost members of his family.

Annahootz testified to this effect, as did several of the leading Kok-wa-ton Indians; and the deputy collector, Dr. Dulaney, informed me that this chief offered his services in having the murderers hung at once in Sitka.

All agreed that Katlaan was brave, powerful, and intelligent, and I considered that it was well worth while to turn such a man from an enemy into a friend.

I have gone thus into detail in regard to this man because I believe that his influence was the power which restrained the disorderly men of his family on the night of the affray; also, because my subsequent treatment of him, based upon this belief, has been made the subject of considerable adverse criticism.

STEPS TAKEN TO PRESERVE ORDER.

Soon after our arrival, it became necessary that steps should be taken to preserve order on shore.

Wild orgies took place nightly at the ranch, accompanied frequently by fighting and stabbing, and in the white settlement certain dissolute and desperate characters endangered the lives of all citizens by their frequent drunken assaults, generally upon women and children.

The Army guard-house, which was well fitted for our purpose, with cells, &c., was put in order, and a guard of trustworthy marines there stationed.

It did not, however, seem to me good policy to employ the marines in arresting Indians. The least evil from such a course would have been the engendering of ill-feeling; and there was the risk that, in case of resistance by drunken Indians, the small arresting party might be overpowered, or forced to extreme measures in making arrests, the former of which would seriously injure their prestige, and the latter produce a blood feud that some time or other would be settled. A corporal with a couple of men would be in bad company if a dozen or more crazy Indians attacked them, in their own ranch.

I determined to teach the Indians to control themselves, and to obey primarily their own laws, and to this end appointed as policemen five of the most trustworthy and influential, to whom the duties of preserving order in the ranch and of arresting all disorderly or drunken Indians who came into the white settlement, were assigned. They were instructed to in no emergency attempt to arrest or molest any white man, and they were particularly cautioned that rewards offered for the apprehension of deserters were not to be earned by them; for such action upon their part would have drawn upon them the hatred of the crew, and drunken liberty men would have instigated troubles.

Annahootz was appointed chief, with four assistants, all of whom had helped subdue the riot in February.

These appointments were made at a meeting of the leading Indians, which I had called, to whom I explained my intentions and desire that they should learn to govern themselves. They all expressed approbation of the plan; but the leaders of the Kaksatis were not satisfied that all of the appointments should be given to Kak-wa-tous, and asked one for their family; this I declined to give, telling them that they had, by their conduct, forfeited any claims to such consideration, but that, if after six months' probation the conduct of the family had been such as to merit it, an appointment would be made from it. This satisfied them, and they promised to try to earn it.

During our stay at Sitka these policemen did all duties required of them, and it was never necessary for us to use our own men in arresting Indians or preserving order among them. Although we several times have landed armed parties with orders to assist the Indian policemen, if requested to by them, in suppressing riots among the Indians, their services were never required, the policemen receiving all needed aid from other sober Indians, among whom were notably those employed on board of the Jamestown as landsmen, and never failed to quiet disturbances. They were so successful in the sundry raids made by them upon the illicit distilleries, which sprung up like mushrooms at the least expected times and most unsuspected places in and near Sitka, that I determined to give them a thorough trial a little farther from home.

RAID UPON INDIAN RANCHES AT HUNTER'S BAY.

In August, 1879, Mr. Hunter, superintendent of the salmon canning establishment at Old Sitka (now called Hunter's Bay), wrote to the collector requesting him as chief magistrate to call upon me to send a force to destroy the distilleries surrounding the cannery, which gave him great annoyance, and through the drunkenness produced interfered seriously with his business.

Hunter's Bay is 6 miles from Sitka, and not visible from the town or harbor. In the neighborhood of the cannery there are three ranches, occupied by about 80 employés and their families, all Indians. I did not consider it wise or my duty to comply with his request.

A raid upon the villages by our men would probably be resented by the Indians, who would have undoubtedly done injury to the property, after we should have finished and returned to Sitka. Besides, I considered that in thus surrounding himself with Indians Mr. Hunter took a business risk; his increased profits through the employment of cheap labor should recompense him for some annoyances and drawbacks.

No outrages were charged, and therefore I could not interfere and place myself in the position of keeping his servants orderly by force. But the occasion suggested to me that this would furnish me with a valuable test of the correctness of my views as to the best method of managing Indians; also, of the estimation in which the ship was held and how strong our influence was.

Accompanied by Colonel Ball, whom I invited, three Indian policemen, and an interpreter, I went in one of the steam launches to the cannery.

On our approach there was great excitement in the ranches, and we could plainly see many stills and kegs being transported to the woods in the rear.

I assembled the Indians and addressed them, explaining my views as to hoo-che-noo, and warning them of the probable troubles which its use would entail upon them. I told them that I had come without soldiers, because I believed I could get them to do right when they understood it.

Calling for volunteers to smash up all the distilleries, over twenty Indians stepped forward, and as they insisted upon my going to see for myself, I did so, and in a few minutes I found myself the director of an excited crowd, who with axes, clubs, halibut killers, and stones, smashed up about forty stills, and destroyed great quantities of mash and liquor.

We went through all three of the ranches, our party rapidly increasing in force, every Indian whose still was discovered and destroyed becoming at once active in hunting up those of his neighbors.

During the whole affair I was treated with great respect, and apparently ran no risk, except perhaps from some enraged squaws, from whose impending clutches "Little Jack" rescued me.

After the raid a number of the Indians of the better sort thanked me for not bringing the soldiers, and begged me to stop the storekeepers from selling molasses. I found it very difficult to make them understand that, while the government condemned hoo-che-noo, it approved molasses.

The foregoing description is quoted from my dispatch of September 6, 1879.

During this raid an influential Indian, who is also a great rascal, "Sitka Jack," was very prominent, following my remarks by a fiery address to the multitude, and leading the destroying party to his own house where, first of all, his own still was smashed under his supervision.

By a note received from Mr. Hunter the next day, I learned that after our departure the Indians completed the work by destroying two other stills belonging to "Sitka Jack," which were located a short way off, and to save which valuable ones he had zealously sacrificed one of little value.

FIRST PUNISHMENT ADMINISTERED.

I did not think it advisable to begin a system of punishment of Indians for offenses, until I had taken every available method to cause them to understand our views of right and wrong, and for a considerable time after arrival contented myself with giving advice and admonition; but I found that an impression was growing up among the Indians that we were afraid of them; they had never been subjected to a government not mixed with force, and could not comprehend it. It became necessary to disabuse them of this erroneous impression, and a suitable opportunity presenting itself it was taken advantage of.

An outrageous assault upon a woman was committed by "Big Charlie," a very powerful, and, when drunk, dangerous Indian, who had, upon occasion of being punished by order of General Davis when in command, attempted to kill a sentry for revenge. All of the leading Indians were summoned by me to a council. "Charlie" was given a fair trial and opportunity to question witnesses and make a defense, found guilty, and punished severely.

The story of this trial, I afterward learned, spread throughout the archipelago; the fairness of it and the justice of the sentence were admitted by all; and the subsequent relieving the man from all disgrace on account of his punishment, by taking him upon our rolls and giving him employment, had a good effect. The man himself admitted that he deserved what he had received, promised to leave off hoo-che-noo, and for a year was one of the best behaved Indians in Sitka. I attribute this reformation, and the influence I gradually acquired over most of the tribes in the archipelago, to their appreciation of strict justice, upon which their own laws are based.

At the end of six months Katlaan returned, and reported on board of the ship. He said that he had learned from his people that the man-of-war treated all with justice—that it was a friend and not an enemy, and that he had resolved to stay away in exile no longer, but to deliver himself to me that justice might be done. I was favorably impressed with his manners, and after a short conversation, remembering my promise to the Kaksatis, I offered to him the position of policeman. This display of confidence won him, and from that day until I left, he was the most faithful and reliable of all, and upon one occasion risked his life in disarming two Indians, crazy with hoo-che-noo, who rushed toward our armed party, which was standing ready to back the policeman if necessary.

In appointing Katlaan, I not only did justice to a falsely accused man, but secured the services and friendship of one of the most powerful and rising Indians in Alaska, whose power and influence it was decidedly worth while to secure to the whites, instead of leaving him in hostility. And this appointment relieved me from another trouble. The Kaksatis, while yielding to the authority of Annahootz and other Kok-wa-ton policemen, did so with reluctance, and there was arising a possibility of trouble between the two families.

In dispatches dated January 20 and 22, 1880, I reported in regard to this appointment:

The experiment of keeping the Indians under control through the aid of their leaders has proved a success, but not a perfect one; they have done good service and I have never regretted the step, but there was a difficulty growing up which in time might prove of magnitude. In the original appointments (of policemen) I had been guided in selection by the records of the applicants, and not understanding the family arrangements and feelings, appointed Kok-wa-tons alone. The Kaksatis asked for one of the appointments, but were refused, with, however, the condition that if, for six months the conduct of the family was such as to merit it, I would select from it and appoint a man.

The six months have passed; their conduct has been equally as good as that of the Kok-wa-tons; they have submitted to Annahootz, and some have assisted him; but there was a bitter feeling arising, and charges that Annahootz was not impartial (which I do not believe) were circulating.

It was a bitter dose to a Kaksati to submit to arrest by a Kok-wa-ton. I found that to keep my promise, and to extinguish the spark, I needed a reliable and powerful Kaksati. Katlaan was beyond question the man, and he is now so serving, and has already proved very useful in bringing into the traces some young bucks who had resented Annahootz's interference; they won't dare to question an act of Katlaan, and he does just as I direct.

I am fully satisfied that it is the best policy, looking to the future, to win him and his tribe to loyalty to the government and friendship to the whites.

In this dispatch I reported also the results of a census of the Indians which I had procured on Christmas Day by the device of offering to distribute on that day a ration of beef and bread to every Indian in Sitka, making this offer early enough to permit the gathering in of all who belonged to Sitka, and not early enough for it to spread to other tribes.

By this census I found that, all told, there were not over five hundred Indians living at Sitka or in immediate vicinity, who were divided thus: Kok-wa-tons, 40 families, 80 men, 120 women and children, total, 200; Kaksatis, 30 families, 40 men, 85 women and children, total, 125; and about 175 more, belonging to several minor families.

Of this total of 500 people not over 200 were men and grown boys; but to this effective force in case of trouble may be added a large proportion of the women, who are more disorderly and dangerous than the men, and are experts in the use of stabbing-knives.

The term "family" has been used several times in this report. It may be advisable to explain clearly its meaning. Nearly all of the tribes who dwell among the islands of the Alexander Archipelago are apparently of a common origin, having the same language, superstitions, and customs.

Each tribe is independent of all of the others, but connected with most of the others by intermarriage, a relationship through the mothers being considered more intimate than through fathers.

These tribes have no chief who has authority over all of its members, but they are subdivided into families, each consisting of all persons related, of whom as many as possible occupy the same house. In each of these families some man with superior brains, force, or wealth, and frequently from combination of all, becomes its leader. Singular as it may seem, "blood" goes a long way in the establishment of this position, from which an Indian having any trace of slave blood in his veins, no matter how slight, is vigorously tabooed.

These leaders are looked up to, and their advice generally accepted and their orders obeyed, but not always, for domestic revolts by aspiring young bucks are not uncommon. Generally these leaders own several slaves, who add to their dignity and importance. These slaves, of whom there are quite a number at Sitka, are either persons who, when children, have been paid by one tribe to another in settling a war, or by one family to another in payment of some claim.

Every person in every family is bound to assist any member of it who has received injury from any member of another family in obtaining compensation from the injurer, or, failing in that, from his family.

The most sacred duty is retaliation; the wo d in their language which expresses it is "to get even." Their code would necessarily involve them in endless feuds, were it not that all injuries have their prices, and can be paid for.

After due consultation at a pow-wow between the leaders of the two families, a certain price is fixed, which is paid either in slaves, furs, or blankets, according to its amount. I have been called upon several times to investigate and act as arbiter, and have permitted this atonement, which satisfied all parties, in preference to inflicting punishments, which would make all parties dissatisfied.

The difficulties between the Indians and whites are greatly due to this custom, and I became fully satisfied very soon after my arrival at Sitka that the two principal causes of difficulty between the whites and the Indians originate with the former.

The whites turn peaceable Indians into crazy devils by furnishing rum to them, and friendly Indians into enemies by assaults upon them, for which the Indians cannot obtain redress.

Thus, even from the Indian stand-point, the one thing necessary to preserve peace in Southeastern Alaska is a government with strength enough to restrain and fully punish disorderly persons, either white or red, and thus furnish to each an equally needed protection.

TROUBLES AT WRANGEL.

The mail steamer arriving at Sitka January 25, 1880, brought news that a war was in progress at Wrangel between the Stahkine and Kootznoo Indians. The former are natives of the town, and number about 120; the latter live on Admiralty Island, and are a much more powerful tribe.

Just to the westward of the white settlement at Wrangel are a number of houses which are appropriated to the use of visiting tribes who come to Wrangel to trade with the whites there located.

The village of the Stahkines is to the eastward of the white settlement, which is thus exposed to danger by being between the contestants.

I received a letter from a Mr. Woodcock, the chairman of a committee of safety—the resident males having formed themselves into such an organization.

Collector Ball returned to Sitka by the steamer, and in answer to my request, he gave me a written statement as to condition of affairs at Wrangel. I received also a letter from the pilot of the steamer.

[Letter from Mr. Woodcock.]

FORT WRANGEL,
January 24, 1880.

SIR: As chairman of the committee appointed by the residents of Wrangel, I have furnished Captain Ball with a statement of the situation of affairs here in pencil, and would have communicated with you in person if I had time. The committee respectfully ask for their protection, that we should have 25 or 30 soldiers sent here; and their services would not be required any longer than the next trip of the California.

As we are very short of arms, I respectfully request that 75 stand of arms, with ammunition, and a gatling-gun be forwarded by the California.

W. H. WOODCOCK.

Capt. L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commanding United States Steamer Jamestown.

[Letter from Collector Ball.]

CUSTOM-HOUSE, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
Sitka, Alaska, January 26, 1880.

CAPTAIN: On my way back to Sitka, I have met, at Wrangel, a committee of safety, formed of the citizens there, whose chairman has addressed you a letter on the subject of the Indian trouble now existing there. There was no time during the short stay of the steamer there, for them to write you a full account, which I was requested to give, but must make it more brief than they desired.

The trouble arose from a personal difficulty between an Indian of the Stickeen tribe, with some of the Hoo-che-noo tribe, which occupy respectively the shores east and west of the white settlement there. The Stickeen being beaten by some of the Hoo-che-noos, went with a party of his friends to their ranch and took retaliation in kind on the Hoo-che-noos, with interest.

Thereupon a party of Hoo-che-noos attached the Stickeens family, which made the assault on them in regular armed fashion, and a fight occurred, resulting in the death of two Hoo-che-noos and three Stickeens, and the wounding of a number, some mortally.

After the fight the parties kept up a skirmish for several days, which, from the shape of the town, &c., was a very dangerous thing for the citizens, many houses being struck, and some persons narrowly missed by the bullets. They, at last, make threats to seize the powder in the stores.

The trouble commenced on the 11th instant; the fight occurred on the 14th, and on the 15th the citizens met and appointed a committee of safety, organized a guard, and have established military orders, forbidding the Indians to enter the town armed (they were running through with arms freely during the skirmishing), and keeping them out after ten entirely.

The deputy collector at Wrangell concurs with the committee in the danger of the situation, and has been active in the organization of means of defense.

I may add that the testimony of all the citizens there asserts the coolness and determination and good judgment of his course in dealing with the situation, to which is in my opinion to be attributed the comparative safety of the place now.

While, as at present organized, the white population at Wrangell is perhaps secured from serious present trouble, yet I am confident they should be furnished, if possible, with better means of defense, and I hope you will respond to their request as far as in your power.

M. D. BALL, Collector.

[Letter from Captain George, coast pilot.]

JANUARY 25, 1880.

SIR: I beg to submit to you a general report of the state of affairs at Wrangell.

On the arrival of the steamer California at Wrangell on the 24th instant, we found the whole population under arms to guard against encroachments of the Indians, who were at war.

It appears from the reports that a number of Hoo-che noo Indians (about 50), visiting Wrangell on a trading expedition, had engaged in the manufacture of the liquor which bears their name.

This traffic the Sticheen Indians tried to suppress by force, which finally resulted in a fight between them; several were killed and wounded on both sides. The Hoo-che-noo Indians sent off a canoe to their village, 60 miles distant, for re-enforcements, and further trouble was anticipated. The whites had stored their powder and ammunition in a storehouse, and established a system of guards for the town.

So the matter rests since the steamer left, but it shows the necessity of some government authority to take precedence.

W. E. GEORGE.

The foregoing letters were inclosed to the department with my monthly dispatch, dated January 25, 1880, in which I wrote in the connection:

I find that the outside number of Stahkines is 120, of the Kootznoos not over 50, but it is supposed that the latter have sent up the straits to their village (on Admiralty Island) for re-enforcements. Allowing such to be the case, and the forces made equal, 80 well-armed whites (the number enrolled for military service) ought to be able to take care of themselves, by maintaining an "armed neutrality," or by backing one side or the other, and thus making a thorough affair of it; they, however, lack arms, and I consider that I ought to furnish them. I shall therefore send them to-morrow a Gatling gun and 50 rifles, and shall send an officer and suitable gunner to take care of them.

I shall instruct the officer to return by the next steamer, unless at that time the situation of affairs is such as to require his longer stay.

This affair could be quickly settled if I had a steamer instead of this ship, which would lose herself before she got half way there.

And the gunner, Mr. Charles Stewart, was sent, with an assistant, taking with him the arms indicated.

Mr. Stewart returned by the steamer arriving March 26, the usual February trip of the steamer not having been made on account of her having struck on Columbia River bar and being so injured that it was necessary for her to go into dock at Victoria, where she arrived on her way north, after a voyage which had been a very perilous one.

Mr. Stewart reported that shortly after his arrival at Wrangell he had a talk with the Kootznoo Indians, who soon returned to their village. From him and other reliable sources I learned for the first time the true history of the difficulty at Wrangell and its origin.

The efforts of the missionaries at this place have been rewarded by considerable advancement of the Stahkines Indians in civilization, and some are considered to have adopted Christianity. Among the reforms effected has been the lessening of the production of hoo-che-noo, and the missionaries had employed certain of the leading Indians as policemen, and these men have fulfilled, when required, the duty of breaking up hoo-che-noo stills.

A party of Kootznoo Indians had come to Wrangell on a trading trip, and were occupying the guest houses, which are appropriated to such purposes. Not having been subjected to the influence of the missionaries, which do not, under the present system, extend beyond the boundaries of Wrangell, these men set up a hoo-che-noo still in their camp, and some of them got drunk.

Among the missionary force there is a Dr. Corlies, who, however, is not sent to Alaska by any organization, but has been led by zeal to undertake the duties of his own accord.

Unfortunately, his zeal is not tempered with discretion and familiarity with Indian affairs, and he called upon one of the policemen of the mission to go and capture the still in the Kootznoo ranch.

The policeman, who was a convert, tried to get clear of the task on account of its being Sunday—his real reason being, undoubtedly, that he was fully aware that a Stickiene (Stahkine) Indian, who should attempt to exercise authority over the Kootznoos would, beyond doubt, get into trouble. Dr. Corlies, however, insisted upon the attempt being made.

His demand was complied with, and the natural result followed; and this imprudent act of this self-constituted missionary was the true cause of the trouble and the bloodshed.

In support of this statement, I will quote from a letter written to the editor of the Alaska Appeal, and published in that paper February 15, the writer being Dr. Corlies himself.

FORT WRANGELL, ALASKA,
January 27, 1880.

Hoo-che-noo, the bane of Alaska Indians, has again been the cause of the shedding of innocent blood.

When will the United States government, with a strong hand put down this terrible scourge?

The missionaries at Fort Wrangell have used every means in their power to free the Indians from this their worst enemy.

On January 11, I was informed that there was a still in full operation, and immediately dispatched the police to capture it, which they did successfully, but a Stahkine who accompanied them lost his temper, and blows were exchanged to the damage of said Stahkine's face and clothes. He thirsted for revenge, but Mr. Young and myself positively forbade him to return with his friends.

Two days later, without our knowledge, some thirty unarmed Stahkines went to the Kootznoo village, and demanded redress, which was given by a young man who came out and received a blow.

All would now have ended happily had not some rash fellow struck him again, when immediately there was a general fight, the Kootznoos bringing out their hatchets, &c., which were wrested from their grasp and used against them, wounding seven persons badly.

After this the Kootznoos threatened the lives of the Stahkines.

I went to both parties, dressed their wounds, and succeeded in obtaining their promises to meet in council at Mr. Young's house the next morning.

Alas for promises! Early the next day the Kootznoos rushed well armed to the Stahkine village; Mr. Young made heroic efforts to prevent bloodshed, and would have succeeded if the Kootznoo's had not broken into one of the houses, which so enraged the Stahkines that they rushed out; the Kootznoos fired, killing Toyatt, a chief, and two others. The Stahkines returned the fire, killing two men. The Kootznoos then retreated, and the day was spent in skirmishing. The Stahkines demand the death of a chief for Toyatt, which the Kootznoos refuse; so the matter stands at this writing.

W. H. R. CORLIES,
Missionary to the Indians of Alaska.

It is very evident to any reader of the foregoing letter, without bias for or against either of the two tribes, that throughout this difficulty the Kootznoos were not to blame.

The Stahkines violated Indian law at the outset, and subsequently by one of their party striking a second blow after the affair had been "made even" by the first. And the ignorance of Indian laws and customs, or disregard for them, exhibited by Dr. Corlies, makes it very evident that in the attempt to help Alaska the mission board should intrust their affairs to a man who, with zealous Christianity, combines common sense, courage, and thorough knowledge of the character, customs, laws, and needs of the Indians. Such a combination, I feel safe in saying, would be found in the Rev. S. Hall Young, to whose good conduct that day, both as a man and missionary, the people of Wrangell owe as much as to the deputy collector, whose conduct also was good.

This difficulty at Wrangell came to the surface on several occasions, which will be described. Omitting them for the moment, I will say that upon my arrival at Wrangell in September, 1880, on my way east, some new facts in the connection came to me for the first time, which are as follows:

After the Kootznoos left Wrangell in January, the Stahkines destroyed all of the guest houses, and at the time of my visit the ground which they had occupied was in use as a garden by the deputy collector, Colonel Crittenden, he having fenced it in for that purpose.

This action had become known by all of the Indians throughout the inland waters, and was resented by them to such extent that they refused to visit Wrangell for trading purposes, which refusal had inflicted a severe blow to the welfare of the place. Had this fact been communicated to me during the time I was in command, I should, in connection with interviews with the Kootznoo Indians, have taken all means in my power to have the houses restored.

It is very poor policy to quarrel with or tantalize Indians. They should either be well whipped, or treated with perfect friendship, according to circumstances.

During the winter there existed grave apprehension upon the minds of the missionaries that the Kootznoos who had left home would return, as they threatened, with a large force; but up to the date of this present writing no such event has occurred.

I think that I may fairly claim that the suspension of this war was due to the influence of the Jamestown.

On the 3d of March, 1880, three large canoe loads of Kootznoo Indians (about 40) arrived at Sitka, their object being to demand of Katlaan compensation for the death of a Kootznoo woman, to whom he had sold or given hoo-che-noo some five months before. As Katlaan had been greatly blamed for the part he had taken in insisting upon compensation from the whites for the loss of the members of his family who were on the San Diego, I watched with interest his conduct in this matter. He knew very well that no fighting would be permitted in the ranch, and his family was stronger than the visiting party; therefore, if he did not choose to comply with the demand he could refuse with impunity. This, however, he did not do, but paid at once the value of the woman as assessed at a pow-wow of the two families, viz, twenty blankets. This action convinced me that I was not mistaken in judging his previous acts, as claimant, to have been perfectly justifiable from the Indian point of view.

I took advantage of the presence of these people, and of the good feeling which existed, to interview them in regard to the troubles at Wrangell. They denied a report which had been brought to me a few days before, by a Stahkine chief, that they intended to go from Sitka to Wrangell to renew the war; and this Stahkine being still in town, I caused him and the leaders of the Kootznoos to meet with me, and obtained from both parties promises to keep the peace. The Kootznoos kept the promise to this extent, that they did not go to Wrangell, but staid a week in Sitka and returned home.

VISIT OF THE KAKE INDIANS.

During the same month (March) a large delegation of Kake Indians, from Kou Island, came to Sitka in four large war canoes, entering the harbor in line abreast, with flags flying and all singing a war song. These were caused to remain in their boats until they gave satisfactory assurances of good conduct. This tribe has for many years been justly considered troublesome and dangerous.

In January, 1869, they murdered without provocation two white men named Ludwig Madger and William Walker, who were encamped for the night at a small cove near Fort Gardner, the southwest point of Admiralty Island, and, after murdering these men, mutilated the remains. For this offense they received prompt punishment, for on the 14th and 15th of January, Lieutenant-Commander Meade, commanding United States steamer Saginaw, burned and destroyed one town and three villages (thirty-five homes in all), and a number of their canoes, at Saginaw and Security Bays, Kou Island; also, two stockade forts which were "about 100 feet square and from 15 to 17 feet feet high, and built of logs from 9 to 15 inches thick." (Meade's report of February 24, 1869.)

They have not rebuilt these villages, but have since led wandering lives, forcing themselves upon the hospitality of other tribes, who both dislike and fear them.

Their object in the present visit was to settle a dispute between their tribe and that of Sitka Jack.

At the pow-wow and ensuing dance, I took care to station the whole force of Indian policemen and assistants.

The dispute was settled without disorder, and they begged permission to remain a few days, giving strong promises at an interview I had with them.

In spite of these pledges they soon required disciplining.

A series of potalatches was begun in the Kaksati portion of the ranch, which became the source not only of annoyance to the families of whites in the vicinity, among whom was that of the collector, but of actual danger, inasmuch as, having no houses upon which reprisals might be made, the Kakes were liable, when drunk, to enter the white settlement and do mischief. The Indian policemen were called upon each night to suppress disorder, or, more properly, did so of their own accord; but the nuisance continued until it finally culminated in a fight, in which considerable cutting and stabbing took place. At about 10 o'clock at night of the third day of their visit, an armed party was sent ashore to support, if necessary, the Indian policemen, who, however, arrested the disorderly persons, with no further assistance than was furnished by the Indian boat's crew of the Jamestown. The offending Indians were subjected to punishment of imprisonment on bread and water diet, and compelled to compensate all persons they had injured, and the Kake party directed to leave Sitka and not to return, permission however being given to them to encamp at a short distance away, to await the release of their incarcerated comrades.

REGULATION OF HOO-CHE-NOO.

This event was followed by one of our periodical raids upon the illicit distilleries, by which much contraband property was captured and destroyed. At the date of the arrivals of the Kakes an experiment was in progress, the results of which were undoubtedly modified by their visit.

This experiment was the regulation of the use of hoo-che-noo, which had been substituted for attempts to suppress the evil entirely, simply because experience had taught me that such efforts would result in failure, if made without the co-operation of the white traders, to the extent of ceasing altogether from selling the ingredients of hoo-che-noo. Two powerful reasons prevented my receiving this assistance: the first was the temptation to increase their profits, the risk being eliminated by the presence of the Jamestown; the second, a feeling of hostility to myself, which sprung up while I was at high-tide in leading them, through the publication in the Alaska Appeal of garbled extracts from one of my official reports, in which I described these men in terms which were true, but not flattering. This feeling was forcibly exemplified by a remark of Mr. Caplin, one of the leading "merchants," in whose store barrels of molasses were always on tap, "De captain may go to hell wid his tam gov'ment; I'll bay no daxes."

This feeling of hostility, however, did not remain throughout my stay, but I feel assured that but for it hoo-che-noo and its attendant evils could have been eradicated.

As I could not control the situation, I determined to accept and modify it as far as possible by establishing restrictions. In so determining, I was influenced partially by the extreme cheapness of the ingredients and apparatus necessary, and by my knowledge of the love of the Indians for the drink; also by reasoning of some of the leading men among them, who said to me: "Why do you permit the white men to sell liquor to each other, and to sell molasses to us, and then forbid us from using it in any way that we see fit? Why do you let them drink liquor and forbid us? Your sailors get very drunk sometimes, why should not we? They have plenty of food and clothes, and can pass their time in bad weather with books; we are poor and have only our feasts to enjoy ourselves. When we have visitors we must treat them politely; if we do not give them anything to drink they will be offended, and they would be more offended if we did not drink with them."

Some of these arguments were hard to controvert. I endeavored to explain to them that white men were permitted to sell knives and ammunition; that there was not more harm in their selling molasses; but that while I would not take from them knives or ammunition they had purchased, if they did no harm with them, yet if they used them to hurt people I should. The same rule I concluded to make apply to molasses, and to take their hint about the conduct of white men and sailors, and so informed them that I would try the experiment of treating them all alike; that I would not prevent their obtaining molasses, of which they use considerable as food, but that any person who abused the privilege and got drunk and made trouble, which was the course adopted with the sailors, and I called upon them to bring to me all persons who offended. This plan for a time worked very well, but it gradually weakened, and the advent of the Kakes gave a finishing blow. I therefore substituted more stringent measures; the policemen were directed to go through the ranch thoroughly and destroy every vestige of hoo-che-noo, &c., and to, in future, prohibit the introduction into the ranch of more than one pint of molasses by any one person, and to cause such importer to obtain permission before bringing it; and all lights were ordered out at 10 o'clock, after which no noise was permitted.

I considered that these stringent measures would prove a good adjunct to the moral reforms which were being introduced by the missionaries, of whom two had been sent to Sitka to establish schools and church for the Indians. The influence brought to bear upon the Indians by them was of such great assistance to me, that I thought it but proper to acknowledge it, which I did in my dispatch of April 10, 1880, in these words:

> I have now some encouragement in making attempts to reform these people; previous to this the only influence brought to bear upon them was such as I could myself bring through force. Now my force is being well backed by missionaries working under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions of New York, who have sent out here as teacher Miss Linda Austin, a young lady who seems to be well adapted to her task. I have had fitted up for her a large room in the third story of the barracks building, where she has an Indian school at which there is an average of eighty pupils. Mr. John Brady, also, formerly a missionary, now a storekeeper, has resumed the work which he had nearly abandoned, and conducts an Indian church and Sunday-school in the same room, which are largely attended.
> There is every reason to believe that these Indians are very anxious to become civilized, and that they are worth trying to save. But for liquor there would be no trouble with them, and that liquor they get from the whites as molasses.
> I arranged with a quite civilized Indian woman, who speaks English very well, and is a member of the Greek church, and married to an American named Holyrood, to assist Miss Austin in inaugurating the school. She agreed to come every afternoon, and I then offered to pay her for her services. Her reply was, "Captain, I do not wish pay. I shall be too glad to help civilize my poor people, and make them Christians." Several of the Indian men have voluntarily formed a Bible class, and come every evening to be taught to read, and make good progress. Our school for the Creole children and our Sunday school and church are doing finely. All are conducted by Mr. Alonzo Austin, whose labors are recompensed by the very uncertain amount raised by voluntary subscription.

The services of the interpreter furnished by your office are very valuable, and many of the children are learning to speak, read, and write English.

Our institutions are strictly non-sectarian; among the Sunday-school scholars are children whose parents are members of the Greek, Catholic, and Protestant churches, and the priest of the Greek church attends ours occasionally and assists in the school, towards the support of which the Greek Bishop, Nestor, pays a monthly subscription.

VISITS OF INDIAN DELEGATIONS.

In addition to the parties of Kootznoos and Kakes, whose visits have been referred to, there arrived at Sitka during the month of February, 1880, several large delegations of other tribes, among which was one of Hoonah Indians from Cross Sound.

The Hoonahs were on a trading voyage, and brought the skins of sea otters, hair seals, bears, and minks; also whale, and seal oil, the former of which is obtained from hump-backed whales which are very plentiful in this sound. The cows, generally accompanied by the bull, seeking the lagoons to give birth to calves, are there frequently caught by receding tide leaving a bar, and are shot by the Indians, who obtain for the rudely refined oil about twenty-five cents a gallon in trade at Sitka. They carry the oil in bladders of seals and walruses, the former holding one, the latter five gallons, and in oil-tight tubs which they carve out of solid blocks of wood. They brought also specimens of various ores, among which were those of silver, galena, copper, and iron. Some of these specimens were very rich in iron pyrites, which they judged to be pure gold, and valued so highly that I was unable to procure them at reasonable prices, which I was desirous of doing for the National Museum. I did procure some of the specimens, also stone tools, such as axes, leather dressers, tobacco grinders, &c., which were sent to the Museum.

The Hoonahs were very orderly, and their presence in the ranch not objectionable. They proved to be very intelligent men and shrewd traders. They expressed a desire that white men should come to their country to teach their children and build them a saw-mill; both of which benefits they assured me had been promised them by a teacher who had visited them, and whom I afterwards learned was Mr. Brady, when under the employment of the Board of Home Missions.

The Hoonahs are skillful workers in wood, their houses being built of timbers which are from 10 to 15 inches square, and so smoothly dressed by axes that at a little distance they appear to be planed. They also understand making "shakes," and are the best canoe-makers on the coast; and in their country there is plenty of excellent timber.

They complained of inroads made by English Indians upon their sea-otter hunting grounds, and requested that we should prevent such inroads in future, as they would lead to war. Not being able to see exactly how I could help them in this matter, not having any boat suitable to send an armed party so far, I could only promise to do what I could, and exacted from them a promise that they would avoid war with the English Indians, and report to me if they came again.

CANOE EXPEDITION TO WRANGELL.

On the 14th of March, the mail steamer California being then overdue forty-four days, it was considered likely that she might have met with some accident, and if such had occurred between Wrangell and Sitka her people might be in need of assistance, which we could give them; and it was also possible that a renewal of the troubles between the Kootznoos and Stahkines at Wrangell might have detained her there. I determined to send a search party.

Having no boat suitable for the trip of two hundred miles, and the Rose being no longer available, I caused a large war canoe which we had hired for surveying purposes to be outfitted, and sent her with fourteen of our shipped Indians, to whom instructions were given to make thorough search along the route, and inquiries of all Indians met; to report on arrival to the deputy collector, and if he needed their services, to assist him in every way.

On the 25th of March the California arrived. She had met with an accident by striking on the Columbia River bar, and was subsequently detained in Victoria for repairs. Her officers and passengers reported that our canoe arrived at Wrangell on the 21st, after a very stormy voyage, and that the conduct of her crew was excellent; that they had refrained from drunkenness, and that on landing they had dressed in their sailor's uniforms, marched in a body to the collector's office, and reported as directed. Their conduct presents good evidence that these Indians can be improved by contact with civilization, and it made a good impression upon the Wrangell Indians, whom they entertained by exhibitions of small-arm and broadsword drill, substituting sticks for arms, they having become quite expert at these drills, through watching our sailors and marines. This, however, was not a desirable result, and was due to my having underestimated their intelligence, for they had never been permitted to join in the exercises on board or receive instructions in these points.

The party returned to the ship on the 28th March; the canoe, which was a very large one (about forty feet long), had been considerably injured by being driven ashore during a heavy gale in Chatham Straits. It was worth over $200, but a payment of $25 for her use and damages was satisfactory settlement.

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN APRIL, 1880.

WITCHCRAFT.

Nothing of importance in connection with Indian affairs occurred during April, except a case of witchcraft.

The stringent regulations and restrictions which had been placed upon hoo-che-noo, and its origin, molasses, had caused many of the Indians to start out on their spring fishing and seal hunting voyages at a much earlier period than usual, and the season for spring visiting was over.

The Indians who remained at the ranch were very orderly and sober, and most of them were busy repairing damages to their houses, caused by the winter storms, and in preparing for canoe voyages.

About this time there occurred, for the second time during our stay, an occasion when it became necessary for me to interfere to prevent the torture of a person accused of witchcraft.

Stickeesh, a wealthy trader, and one of those sent to Chilkat the preceding fall, returned broken down by inflammatory rheumatism. The shaman (Indian doctor), failing to relieve him, charged the sickness to the effect of witchcraft, as is usual in such cases, and pretended to earn the fee of ten blankets paid him by discovering the witch—who, as is usual, proved to be a simple young Indian, belonging to an unimportant family. This man had been caught and bound for torture, when Annabootz heard of it, and the Indian policemen put a stop to further proceedings until they could report the case to me. They did not dare to do more than simply interfere themselves, for they shared in the superstitious fear of the shaman's power, common to all of the Indians.

By my direction the shaman, witch, and sick man were brought to the guard-house, where, after (I have no doubt vain) efforts to teach them, I caused the shaman to be confined in a cell until he returned the blankets to Stickeesh sent the latter to the medical officer of the Jamestown for treatment, and placed the accused witch under the care of himself and family, assuring them that whatever happened to him would also happen to Stickeesh. Many Indians being present, I availed myself of the opportunity to weaken, if possible, their faith in witchcraft, and gave the shaman full permission to exercise upon me all of the sorceries of his profession while occupying a cell to which he was assigned until he should restore to Stickeesh the blankets he had received from him; and to this end he was permitted to carry into his seclusion such implements of his art as he had with him. Whether he tried or not I do not know; the sentry reported that he saw no such attempt; but after release, which took place when the blankets were restored, he told the other Indians that his spirits had no power over the white man—which was a good point gained, as it lessened the possibilities of any white man being suspected of witchcraft.

Upon release, the shaman was assured that upon repetition of the offense his head should be shaved and his person subjected to a Russian bath; which, as they never wash themselves, nor comb or cut their hair (by which process, it is believed, they would lose their supernatural power), so frightened him that he at once left Sitka, with the threat that he would never again return; and neither he nor any of his professional brethren ever again attempted to practice in Sitka. The experiment involved a serious risk, and such Indians as were friendly to me personally expressed great grief and apprehensions for my safety. And had any misfortune occurred to me the belief in witchcraft and the powers of the shaman would have been greatly strengthened. As nothing did happen to me, I have hopes that the result was a weakening of this superstition.

OPENING OF THE CHILKHAT AND CHILKHOOT COUNTRY TO THE WHITES.

In September, 1879, certain events took place among the Indians, which were duly reported in my October dispatch, but which have been omitted from their chronological position in this report, because, although apparently at the time of slight importance, they proved to be the starting point of the most valuable results which sprung from our intercourse with the Indians, namely, the removal by the chiefs of the Chilkhat and Chilkhoot tribes of all prohibition to the white men from entering their territory, which prohibition had been always strictly maintained; and the bringing of these tribes and the Hoonah Indians into a most friendly intercourse with the whites.

These events were reported as follows, in my dispatch dated October 5, 1879:

> The month of September has been marked by perfect freedom from drunkenness, fighting, or disorder of any kind in the Indian ranch.
> A great number of Indians have returned from hunting, &c., and the ranch is no longer deserted, but the returns have ceased to be celebrated by pot-a-latches; the Indians throng the white settlement, but there are no disturbances. The residents state that there has never been so quiet a month. When we first arrived every night was made hideous by drunken orgies and many fights. I have not had cause to even censure an Indian since the raid made by themselves upon the cannery ranches. I attribute the change to the influence of the Indians in our employ. * * * There has been an unusually exciting cause for sprees: About the 25th of September news was brought by Indian canoes that there had been a big fight up in the Chilkhat country, between two families of the Chilkhats, viz, the Klockwatories (warriors) and the Onochtades, and that the chief of the former, Klotz-kutch (who is head chief of the tribe), was seriously wounded, and that a number on both sides had been killed; the inciting cause having been a barrel of molasses with which Klotz-Kutch had given a pot-a-latch.

There are quite a number of Chilkhats living in Sitka, among whom is Dick, one of my policemen, who is a nephew of Klotz-kutch, and a very intelligent Indian, speaking considerable English and reading and writing a little.

He, assisted by the other policemen and "Sitka Jack," restrained the usual drunk which takes place on such excitements, and except that for a couple of days the miners could obtain no packers (they having all come into town to a caucus), no untoward event occurred.

They have organized an expedition to visit the scene of contemplated trouble, and on the 3d of October three canoe loads, about 30 Indians in all, started for the Chilkhat country (up Chatham Straits). If this vessel were a steamer I should have gone too, for these Indian wars are almost interminable and will do much to hazard American interests here. I did the next best thing in my power; judging that the influence of such men as Sitka Jack, Dick, Stickeesh, and others, who knew us and could explain to those who did not the value of white friendship and danger of the opposite, would be very powerful, I resolved to secure it for our side, so helped to fit out the expedition, furnishing them with flags, provisions, &c., , and receiving from them the promise that they would do their best to prevent trouble.

The party, over whom I hoped through the leaders I had appointed to exercise some control, were directed to report to Klotz-kutch, and say that I had sent them to help him keep his people in order, and that in return I expected him to always use his influence to secure good treatment to any white men who should come to his country to trade, and that I would be pleased if he would let white miners go into the interior to prospect the country for precious metals, which, if found, would enrich the Indians also. This privilege had never been accorded, the Indians (Chilkhats) fearing that the whites would interfere with the trade with the Stich Indians who live in the interior, and whose trade the coast Indians monopolize. The Chilkhats were estimated as from two to four thousand in number, and considered the most warlike of all the tribes. The country was reported to be rich in minerals, and the miners were very desirous of penetrating it, and it seemed more than likely that, sooner or later, bodies of them would undertake to force their way in, in which case serious troubles would probably have occurred.

On the 12th of February, 1880, Dick, Stickeesh, and most of the party returned, Sitka Jack, with the remainder, having stopped at Swanson's Harbor, in Cross Sound, where he has a village at which he dwells in summer. Stickeesh was much broken down by inflammatory rheumatism, contracted during the voyage down, which sickness gave rise to the case of witchcraft reported. They brought an invitation from Klotz-Kutch for the white miners to come, and promises of welcome, and thanks to me. This invitation I extended to the miners, of whom there were a number in town deterred from work on Baranoff Island by the great amount of snow still remaining on the mountains, the fall during the previous winter being unprecedented in amount. These men were ready to undertake such an expedition, and were of such characters as were best adapted. The project was freely discussed, meetings held, and an expedition to the Chilkhat country organized; and for the ensuing two months Sitka was quite lively with the preparations for the expedition.

Several boats were built, some from timber which was growing in the forest when the idea was conceived, and in May the party of pioneers were ready to start.

On the evening of the 11th May, a public meeting was held, and a full understanding between the miners and myself arrived at, which is embodied in the following paper, drawn up by Mr. Bean:

SITKA, ALASKA TERRITORY, May 11, 1880.

We, the undersigned miners, do hereby pledge ourselves, to accept and be guided by Edmund Bean, as our captain or leader of the consolidated parties of prospectors now in Sitka, and proposing to search for gold in the interior of Alaska Territory, going by water up Chatham Straits and landing at the Indian village of Chilkat. We hereby pledge ourselves to behave orderly, accept and obey the lawful commands of our leader, and otherwise acquit ourselves as becomes orderly, sober, reasonable men. We also agree that no spiritnous liquor shall be carried by any of us into the Indian country for the purpose of trade or barter with the natives. We furthermore do agree and pledge ourselves that if Captain Beardslee, commander of United States ship "Jamestown," will furnish us with such escort as in his judgement is proper to Chilkat, that we will be guided by him or his officer or representative with us, and afterward by our mining leader, Edmund Bean.

I agreed to furnish them with escort and letters of introduction.

The second launch was fitted for the trip by removing her boiler, engine, &c., and Lieut. E. P. McClellan assigned to the duty of escort. He was provided with the following letter to the Chilkhat chiefs, apparently an unnecessary move, as they neither read nor write, but really one of importance, as the Indians have a superstitious respect for written words, and there were with the expedition capable interpreters:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN,
Off Sitka, May 20, 1880.

To the Chiefs of the Chilkhats, Klotz-Kutch and Elquesah.

CHIEFS: You have sent to me through Skeenga-Stocheen and Stickeesh, Indians in whom you and I place confidence, an invitation to the white men to come and prospect your country, and have promised to be their friends. The men who now come are those I have invited in your name. I feel sure from what I know of the bravery and honesty of the Chilkhats that you will keep those promises; therefore I send them, and the Great Father at Washington will be greatly pleased to hear that they have gone, and more pleased to hear next fall that you have all remained friends.

The officer who delivers this acts as my representative.

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, U. S. N., and Senior Representative of the Government.

The following instructions were given to Lieutenant McClellan, and on the morning of the 20th of May the expedition, consisting of five sail boats carrying nineteen miners and their help, and our launch, started under sail:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN (3d rate),
Off Sitka, May 20, 1880.

SIR: You will proceed in command of the second launch of this ship, and in company with a number of boats carrying miners and prospectors, a list of whom is herewith furnished to you, to the Chilkhat village, for purpose hereinafter specified. In starting from this place you will so arrange that you will be able to get through the rapids in Peril Straits before dark. On the eastern side of said rapids you will find a good harbor. Mr. George Cozian will accompany you as pilot. I have great confidence in his knowledge of the dangers of the inland waters. He will also act as Russian interpreter.

Passed Assistant Surgeon N. M. Ferrabee, U. S. N., Ensign N. R. Usher, U. S. N., and Midshipman Woodworth are ordered to report to you for duty upon this expedition.

Your crew will consist of 13 sailors of this ship, and Indians, Dick and Shukoff. Your boat will be armed with the Gatling gun, and small arms for each person. You will, under sail or oar, keep company with the boats of the miners, unless you find their progress so slow as to greatly retard you, in which case you will push ahead and make the best of your way under canvas or oar, as shall be most expedient. You will use your own judgment as to anchoring for the night, tide, or weather. The miners have, as per agreement—a copy of which is furnished you—promised obedience to your orders and instructions, and have elected Edmund Bean as their captain, with whom you will confer. On reaching the Chilkhat village, you will allow no one to land until permitted by yourself; and will, through an officer and Indian Dick, arrange with the Chilkhat chiefs for an interview as soon as possible. If for any reason this interview is delayed, you will obtain permission for the landing of such persons as may so wish, cautioning all persons obtaining such permission to commit no acts which will tend to create difficulties.

At this interview you and such officers as may accompany you will wear uniform and side arms. During this interview, and at all times, the boat must be left in charge of an officer and sufficient force to guard it. The nature of this interview will be as follows: Say to them that last fall, when Klotz-Kutch was wounded, I sent with a party of Indians who wished to come to help him, Dick, his nephew, in whom both he and I have confidence; I also instructed Sitlsa Jack and Stickeesh to talk with the Indians and advise them to stop drinking hoo-che-noo and fighting.

That when these men came back, they informed me that the Chilkhat chiefs invited the white men to come among them and prospect their country, and promised them welcome and assistance. This invitation and promise I have given in their name to the miners, and they now come in consequence. Tell them that had they not sent this invitation, these people would not have come, therefore they must treat them as guests; and that all the miners have promised me to live peaceably and friendly with the Indians. Act throughout on the assumption that you have no doubt as to their keeping their promise. If, however, it becomes manifest that they will not do so, inform them that you will return and report to the government their failure to keep their word, and that in future no Chilkhat Indian will be a lowed to land at Sitka for trade or other purposes; that I will not give those who are here employment. You will then notify the miners of the failure of the mission, and request them to return with you, informing them that any or all who fail so to do forfeit their claim to your protection, and act entirely upon their own responsibility.

After the completion of the business with the chiefs, you will return to this ship, making, en route, such stops at any ranch of importance as your time will permit, explaining at each to the people the object of your so doing, which will be to assure them of the friendliness of the whites to them, and to caution them against committing at any time any aggressive act against white men, warning them of the probable consequences. Should your voyage to the Chilkhat village and return to the eastern mouth of the Peril Straits have been accomplished in fifteen days or less, say by June 1, you will visit the Kootznoo settlement on Admiralty Island, and there arrange for and hold interview with the chiefs, at which you will express to them strongly the disapprobation of the government in regard to the recent fight between themselves and the Stickiene (Stahkine) Indians at Wrangell. Make it plain to them that Wrangell is a town belonging to the United States, and that no fight between Indian tribes can be permitted in its vicinity. Tell them that it has been reported to me that they intend to return to Wrangell to renew the trouble, and that if they so do they will be punished. That for what has already occurred no penalty will be exacted—assigning as your reason your knowledge that by Indian customs they had suffered a grievance, which neither you nor the government you represent approved. Obtain from them a promise to refrain from future hostilities, and return to the ship. These instructions are based upon the assumption that the results of your interview with the Chilkhat chiefs are satisfactory. Should, however, they refuse to grant the privilege requested, you will, after exhausting all amicable means, return as already directed.

I leave to your own judgment the explanation to the various tribes of the advantages which will accrue to them by the presence of the whites. Make, however, no promises. Unless unavoidably delayed (in which case endeavor to communicate with me by canoe, promising payment by me from $10 to $30, according to the distance), return to this ship by the 1st day of June, at the farthest, and as much earlier as possible. Keep a full journal of the events of this expedition, obtaining all useful information possible. I have invited Mr. Marcus Baker, of the Coast Survey, to accompany you. He will assist you in every branch of science. Wishing you a pleasant and profitable trip, and that the results will be the opening of the interior of the country to the whites,

I am, very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander Commanding.

Lieut. E. P. McClellan, U. S. N.

The launch returned to the ship on the 5th of June, and the report of Lieutenant McClellan indicated that the result was a success, and that the Chilkhat country was now fairly opened to the whites. This result was particularly gratifying, inasmuch as on the 3d of June a small trading steamer, the Favorite, the captain of which was well liked by the Indians, returned to Sitka from a trading voyage up Chatham Straits, and Captain Vanderbilt reported having spoken our party about 40 miles from Chilkhat, en route to that place; and that he, while at Chilkhat, had endeavored to persuade the chiefs to remove the restrictions and allow whites to enter the country, in which effort he had completely failed, the chiefs refusing, and assigning as their reasons for so doing the risk of the whites interfering with their trade with the Sticks, and also that they did not wish the whites to come to them because they would bring liquor and debauch their women.

The first of these objections we have met; the second is one which cannot be met, and no attempt was made—they take their chances.

Through our efforts all prohibitions were removed, and the miners were not only permitted to go prospecting, but were furnished with slave packers at moderate wages, to be increased in case of success.

The Chilkhat chief, Klotz-Kutch, had in this connection shown such evident good faith and character that I considered that I could, with propriety, break through a rule which had hitherto guided my actions, which was to in no case give any presents to the Indians when I wanted anything of them, considering that such action tended to increase their ideas of their own importance, and lead them to think that the whites alone were benefited by such changes as were made. I therefore sent him a present which, upon my subsequent meeting with him, I found was highly appreciated, and with it the following letter:

UNITED STATES WAR-SHIP JAMESTOWN,
Off Sitka, June 10, 1880.

CHIEF: The Great Father in Washington, who is father of the Alaska Indians and the white men, will be greatly pleased when he receives the letter which I have sent, telling him of the good conduct of the chiefs of the Chilkhats, and that they have become so wise that they can see that it is best to be friends with the white men, through whom the Indians will be able to make money by selling all of their furs, oil, and other things, and who will bring them things which they need and cannot make themselves.

I am glad that you kept your promises, and I felt sure that you would. Brave men of all colors are alike; they will not lie.

I send you a present of a valuable pipe and some American tobacco. Keep the pipe as long as you live, then give it to the next chief, to be used always as a pipe of peace, and smoked when you hold pow-wow with your white friends. Teach all of the Indians that Mr. Vanderbilt is their friend, and that if they treat him well other steamers besides the Favorite will come to trade with them, and that if bad Indians should trouble him or his steamboat, the government will be angry.

Your friend,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, U. S. N.

To KLOTZ-KUTCH,
Chief of Chilkhats.

On the return, Lieutenant McClellan stopped, as instructed, at Kootznoo, on Admiralty Island, and made it clear to the Indians that they would be punished if they resumed the war with the Stahkines at Wrangell. In promising to refrain, the Kootznoos requested permission to whip the Stahkines if they came to their neighborhood, which request was granted.

The report of Lieutenant McClellan is herewith given; also a card of thanks from the miners:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN (3d rate),
Sitka, Alaska, June 7, 1880.

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 20th of May, I took command of the second launch of this vessel and proceeded to the Chilkhat village in company with four boats, containing miners and prospectors. Left here at 9 a. m. of May 20, and arrived at Pyramid Island Harbor, 4 miles from the Chilkhat village, on the morning of 26th May; sent an officer ashore to make arrangements for an interview with the head men. He returned, reporting that the chiefs were 15 miles inland, that a messenger had been sent for them, and that they would be present at noon the following day. On the 27th I borrowed one of the boats of the miners, the water for 1½ miles below the village being so shoal that it would have been imprudent to take the launch in. I had previously spent several hours in searching for a navigable channel without success, the flats being bare at low water. I invited such of the miners as wished to be present at the interview to accompany me to the village. Seven of them accepted the invitation, and I proceeded with Passed Assistant Surgeon N. M. Ferrebee, Ensign N. R. Usher, Mr. Marcus Baker, of the Coast Survey, Pilot George Cozian, and the two Indian interpreters to the landing. Found three chiefs, Klotz-Kutch, Elquesah, and Unacoa, who had come down from the upper villages; shook hands with them as I noted each one's name, and told them I was a bearer of a message from the commander of the Jamestown, and then proceeded to read your letter to Klotz-Kutch and Elquesah, and then such portions of your instructions as related to the Chilkhats, sentence by sentence, having Indian Dick translate it to them, and having Indian Shukoff check it by translating it from Indian to Russian, and through Pilot Cozian from Russian to English. I explained the advantage it would be to them to have the white people come. Klotz-Kutch said he had lost father, grandfather, and brothers, and was an orphan, and therefore he gladly welcomed the white people, for they would be fathers and brothers to him. Two other Indians then came in, Rakee and Tawawah, head men of the lower villages. I repeated to them the substance of the interview, and told them the miners had come by invitation and that they must treat them as guests. They said they were glad the whites had come. A general talk then ensued, the miners offering fair wages, and an arrangement was made by which the Indians were to pack some of the goods across the land to the Chilkhat Inlet, instead of up the Chilkhat River and across the divide by that way. Having finished everything satisfactorily, and the best of feelings seeming between the miners and the Indians, I returned to the launch. Having finished my business with the Chilkhats, I bid farewell to the miners, and wishing them luck in their search for gold, proceeded with the launch to the Indian village at Hootchenoo, on the west side of Admiralty Island. I arrived there on June 3. Found only one chief, Kichiral, or Hootchenoo Jack, in the village. I communicated to him your instructions, and warned him that the Indians would not be permitted to fight in the American town of Wrangell or its vicinity. I obtained from him a promise to abstain from any further hostilities against the Stickiene Indians at Wrangell; he saying he had meetings with the other two chiefs of the village and would answer for them. At this village each house had a small garden plot about it, well fenced in and well cultivated. Potatoes principally raised; they are small, but good. They keep the seed over winter. Fish seemed plentiful. Two canoes came in with numbers of codfish and halibut. On the way down Chatham Straits spoke several canoes, and ran into a cove on Admiralty Island, opposite Cross Sound, where there was a ranch of Auk Indians. Expressed to them our friendliness and cautioned them that if any white people were seen about during the summer to treat them well. I arrived at the ship at 7 p. m. of June 5, having been absent sixteen days and ten hours; all well and without any accident having occurred. The crew, in spite of head winds and hard labor at the oars, remained cheerful to the last. Mr. Cozian, the pilot, I found of great use. Mr. Baker had a fund of information on every topic, and was a genial and instructive companion; he was of great service to me in taking bearings, taking observations for position, and correcting our chart. At every opportunity I landed him, with artificial horizon, sextant, and dip-circle, to get the position and magnetic dip, the results of which observations we have not had, as yet, time to work up. We also made some collections in natural history, looking out for bird skins, collecting fish in alcohol, &c.

I inclose card from the miners, thanking you for sending the launch up to the Chilkhat country, and remain,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. P. McCLELLAN,
Lieutenant, U. S. N.

Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. N.

CARD OF THANKS.

We, the undersigned miners of Alaska, tender our sincere thanks to Captain Beardslee, of U. S. S. Jamestown, for the kind interest he has taken in our welfare, in giving us protection and conveying us to our landing point, which gives us confidence in undertaking to prospect the country we are going to. Such action on the part of a government officer will have a beneficial effect on the Indians, and will induce other prospectors to come here and unlock the hidden treasures of Alaska, and develop its vast and unlimited resources.

Having made the passage from Sitka to the head of Lynn Channel, also a satisfactory interview being conducted by the officer in charge of the Cutter, Lieutenant McClellan, we wish hereby to tender him our sincere thanks for his kindness and attention during visit, also the other officers and men with him. The pilot, Mr. Cozian, also we thank sincerely.

OCCURRENCES DURING JULY, 1880.

On the 4th day of July I received a letter from Mr. Edmund Bean, leader of the pioneer party. It was dated from the headwaters of Yukon, June 17th, and brought by an Indian doctor, who is a chief of the Chilkhoots, and who had done the party good service. Mr. Bean stated that the party had "crossed the divide and are now camped on the banks of a lake, building boats preparatory to descending the Yukon"; that they had received good treatment and good service from the Indians, and that several other miners had joined them.

On the 28th of June Aunahootz returned from a trip to Taku, to which place I had sent him a month before to check a war impending there, he having great influence with the Takus, with whom he is connected. He brought word that all was quiet.

During July a trader named Errassan made a trading trip to Chilkhat, and on return reported good treatment. And during the same month a miner named Willoughby, who, having seen the ores brought by the Hoonahs in March, had accompanied them on their return home, arrived in Sitka, and stated that he had been well treated by the Indians during a two months' stay among them. He reported that frequently he heard them, while conversing, speak of the Jamestown; and Errassan reported the same; and it was thus evident that the influence of the ship extended a long way beyond the range of her guns.

During the three months of summer there were not over two hundred Indians in the ranch, and they were orderly and well-behaved, except upon one occasion.

On the 5th of July they participated in the general hilarity, and old Aunahootz, having allowed his patriotism to overcome his sense of duty, gave a potalatch, and nearly all of the Kok-wa-tons got drunk, and several were badly cut in the ensuing fight. Upon this occasion Katlaan did most excellent service, and fully confirmed the good opinion I had formed of him. Unarmed himself, he disarmed a crazy drunken Indian who was slashing at random with a large knife, and who threatened our armed party which was landed to back the policemen. But for Katlaan's action the man would have been killed by our men, which was a result I did not wish, as when sober he was a good enough Indian.

On this occasion I punished several of the leaders quite severely, and had thoughts of discharging Aunahootz, but changed my mind, inasmuch as his influence is very great throughout all the tribes and worth some sacrifice, to retain.

The steamer arriving July 12, brought news of another trouble at Wrangell; this time between a visiting Chilkhat Indian, nephew of the chief Klatz-Kutch, and a white trader. The first named was drunk, and on being turned out of the store of the trader received a wound in the face, which by Indian logic is, until atoned for, a great disgrace. This affair was settled by the white man paying a demanded sum; but news of this settlement was not brought by this steamer. The affair came to the surface again subsequently.

On the 30th of July, I received from the miner Willoughby, living with the Hoonahs, a letter, of which the following is a copy:

NORTHWEST GLACIER,
Cross Sound, Hoonah, July 11, 1880.

DEAR SIR: The head chief of the Hoonahs, and the majority of the leading men here, desire me to inform you that there is a party of Indians from Fort Simpson, British Columbia, now killing and destroying their sea otters, young and old. They think it is not right for foreigners to come to their hunting grounds and do so—kill their valuable animals and take their skins to a foreign market. These Fort Simpson Indians made some kind of arrangement with some of the Hoonah Indians to go there and hunt, I believe, gave them some guns and coats and other articles for a hunting right, unbeknown to the chief and leaders of the Cross Sound Indians. They want to know if you will protect them in making them return to British Columbia where they belong. You will excuse me if my information is useless. I was bothered day after day to give you this information.

I remain, yours, most respectfully,

R. G. WILLOUGHBY.

Captain BEARDSLEE,
Commander of the U. S. man-of-war, Sitka, Alaska Territory.

This letter was brought by a Hootnah canoe. I questioned the bearers, who stated that the Sim-Sims were still on the otter grounds, and I became satisfied that but for the promises made to me on the occasion of the visit in March, already reported, the Hoonahs would have driven the Sim-Sims away by force, in which case a war would have been inaugurated between the two tribes, which, as both were more or less closely connected with the other coast tribes of Southeastern Alaska and British Columbia, would have drawn them in, and proved very difficult to check. Such a war would undoubtedly endanger the life of every unprotected white man or woman in the Archipelago, inasmuch as the Alaska Indians believed, and I think the English Indians knew, that the marauding expedition had been sent out well outfitted by white men at Fort Simpson; and I felt that the government, having through myself, its representative, been instrumental in sending away from the protection of its forces the men who were now living among the Chilkhats and Hoonahs, and from whose efforts, should they prove successful in finding valuable deposits of precious metals, the value of this portion of our country would be greatly increased, should do something toward suppressing this war.

It was also good policy to show to the Indians that the conduct of the Hoonahs in maintaining peace under wrong, and appealing to the government instead of redressing their own grievances, was appreciated.

I, therefore, in a dispatch dated July 31, 1880, requested permission to charter a small trading steamer, the Favorite, expected daily at Sitka, for the purpose of going in person with an armed force to the Hoonah country, to settle the impending troubles and to prevent the illegal destruction of the sea-otters of Alaska by English Indians with fire-arms, the statutes of the United States reserving these animals to Alaska natives, and forbidding the use of fire-arms.

The steamer Favorite arrived a few days after, bringing as a passenger from Chilkhat one of the miners who had belonged to the pioneer party, who reported to me that the Chilkhat and Chilkhoot Indians were very much incensed by the action of two men who, not originally members of the party, had joined it subsequently, and, not being bound by the pledge given by the others, had undertaken to trade with the Stick Indians.

These men had been with the pioneers long enough to be identified with them by the Indians, who were impressed with the idea that the whites had been guilty of bad faith.

This man brought me a message from Klotz-Kutch, begging that I would send or come and take these men away, for he was afraid they would be killed.

The captain of the steamer, upon being consulted by me in regard to this affair, addressed to me the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE NORTHWEST TRADING COMPANY,
On board the steamer Favorite,
Sitka, Alaska, August 4, 1880.

SIR: By request of the Hoonah, Chilkhat, and Chilkhoot Indians, we beg to lay before you the following facts as represented by them:

Hoonah, Cross Sound.—On June 30, while anchored at Adolphus Bay, in the vicinity of which were camped some 300 Hoonah Indians, we were informed by them that three large canoes had just arrived, manned by 27 Indians from Fort Simpson, B. C. The nature of business of these British Columbia Indians we could not ascertain ourselves, as they left at night in a very suspicious way, seemingly to avoid us. Of course our steamer being unarmed and having but a small crew of white men aboard, and being among Indians whose characters were unknown to us, we did not feel safe in overhauling them through the inspector of customs temporarily attached to the steamer.

On our return to the same place on July 21, we found a still greater number of Hoonah Indians gathered there who seemed to be rather excited, reporting to us that the Fort Simpson Indians, mentioned above, were on their favorite sea-otter grounds, killing sea-otters with rifles, thus interfering with their own hunting. They openly stated that their intention was to take and kill the entire Fort Simpson expedition on their return from the sea-otter grounds.

The Hoonah Indians requested us to advise you of the situation, hoping to hear from you before the Fort Simpson Indians could leave the country with their booty.

Chilkhat and Chilkhoot.—On our arrival at Chilkhat, on July 24, we found the Indians gathered at our anchorage, very much worked up over the action of a miner named Steel, who, it seems, followed the large party of miners bound for the interior. The Indians report that Steel, while on his way up, was advising the interior Indians not to trade with the Chilkhats and Chilkhoots, as has been their custom for generations, but to hold their furs for him, as he intended on his return to trade with them. This the Chilkhats and Chilkhoots cannot understand, as the body of miners that left Sitka for Chilkhat carried a paper to them in which the miners bound themselves not to trade with the interior Indians or to interfere with any of the privileges enjoyed by the Chilkhat and Chilkhoot Indians heretofore.

We were particularly requested to report this matter to you as soon as we reached Sitka, as the Indians wished to have an understanding in regard to this affair.

We have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

CARL SPUHN,
J. M. VANDERBILT,
Managers Northwest Trading Company.

Commander L. A. BEARDSLEE,
U. S. Ship Jamestown, Sitka.

The receipt of this information caused me to decide that it was my duty to go to this place at once, and not await the instructions of the department, which I could not receive in less than a month, even were I to telegraph full particulars.

Our steam launches were not suitable, and I therefore made partial arrangements with Captain Vanderbilt to take myself and party to Hoonah, Chilkhat, and Kootznoo, hoping at the latter place to keep smothered the embers of war between the Stahkines and Kootznoos.

The Favorite was not available until after the arrival of the mail steamer California, which came in on the 10th day of August. She brought as passengers Justice Deady, of the United States court at Oregon, and Maj. William Gouveneur Morris, special agent of the Treasury Department.

I submitted to the latter all of the information I had obtained as to the troubles already described; also as to certain illegal traffic in fire-arms and liquor which had been reported to me as occurring at various places in the northern country; in a letter of which the following is a copy:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN,
Sitka, August 10, 1880.

SIR: I have received, from various sources, information upon which I rely, which indicates that unless some steps are taken by the government to prevent, serious trouble between the Alaska Indians at Hoonah and the British Columbia Indians from Fort Simpson is liable to occur, a large number of the latter Indians being at the latest dates actively engaged in killing with rifles the sea otter and fur seal on the hunting ground of the Hoonahs. By letters received by me from miners, and the owners of the steamer Favorite, I am requested by the chiefs of the Hoonahs to either take steps to drive off these strange Indians or give them permission so to do.

I have also received information that complications are arising in the Chilkhat country through the acts of two United States citizens, named Steele and Hilton, who have followed in the wake of the pioneer party to whom I furnished escort, and are by the Indians confounded with said party, and, as such, are held to be guilty of violating the pledge given by the mining party, to refrain from trading with the Indians of the interior. The Chilkhat chief Klotz-Kutch, or "Hole-in-the-Face," and others send to me for advice, and express anxiety lest the men may be killed.

Under these circumstances, I should be very glad to co operate in any steps it might be in your judgment advisable to take towards suppressing these growing troubles.

I think it a wise policy to recognize and encourage these Indians in thus submitting their wrongs to the government, and that a ceremonial visit from ourselves in person, accompanied by an armed force, will produce excellent effects.

If you feel justified in furnishing a steam vessel, I will undertake to man, arm, and provision her for such a trip.

I inclose letters bearing upon the subject.

Respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE, Commander.

Maj. WM. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS,
Special Agent Treasury Department.

My reasons for addressing the foregoing to Major Morris were that I deemed it but courtesy to the Treasury Department to offer to its representative all assistance in my power to enable him to fulfill his duties, in lieu of undertaking myself to perform them.

I addressed the special agent instead of the collector, as the latter had notified me that he should not call upon the Jamestown for any assistance whatever, our official difficulties having degenerated into a cessation of intercourse upon his part.

Had Major Morris not have arrived as he did I should not have hesitated to undertake the duty upon my own responsibility in my capacity of senior representative of the government in Alaska.

After thorough study of the situation, Major Morris wrote to me the following letter:

OFFICE OF SPECIAL AGENT, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Sitka, Alaska, August 11, 1880.

CAPTAIN: In reply to your communication of yesterday, informing me of the presence of certain canoes manned by Indians from British Columbia in the waters adjacent to this port, engaged in the unlawful killing of the sea-otter, in contravention with section 1956 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I have the honor to say:

Thanking you very much for the information conveyed, and more particularly for your kind offer of assistance in the premises, it will afford me pleasure to take such steps as may be available for the purpose of putting a stop to these illegal practices and expeditions.

Accordingly I have made arrangements with the managers of the Northwest Trading Company for the use of their steamer, the Favorite, at a certain per diem compensation. It will certainly be necessary to have an armed force on the vessel, not only for my own protection, but for the purpose of intimidating these Indians from a recurrence of these practices. A visit also from yourself personally would have a very healthy effect in preserving order throughout this archipelago.

I have the honor, therefore, to request that you may be able to accompany me, with a portion of your command, at an early date, to Cross Sound and Chilkhat country. All details incident to the voyage, armament of the steamer, force, subsistence, &c., can be arranged between us personally.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS,
Special Agent.

Commander L. A. BEARDSLEE, U. S. N.,
Commanding U. S. Ship Jamestown, Harbor Sitka, Alaska.

In pursuance of the arrangements made between Major Morris, as representative of the Treasury, and myself, as senior naval officer, the proposed trip was made, and its objects and results reported to the Navy Department in the following dispatch:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN, Sitka, September 1, 1880.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: In compliance with the request of special agent of Treasury Department, Wm. Gouverneur Morris, which request was based upon information given to him by me, as reported in my letter of August 11, as to many violations of the revenue laws, and intrusion upon our waters of English Indians, hunting sea-otter, I have during the month of August accompanied him, with an escort of officers and men, upon a tour among the most prominent Indian tribes who inhabit the inland coasts of Alaska.

Our trip was made in the steamer Favorite, belonging to the Northwest Trading Company, and beginning on the 14th day of August, extended over fourteen days, we arriving in Sitka on the 28th ultimo.

The objects of the trip were, first, to visit the Hoonah villages in Cross Sound, and to there take steps to prevent a threatened war between the Hoonahs and the British Columbia Indians of Fort Simpson, the latter having trespassed upon the rights of the former by killing sea-otter upon the hunting grounds of the Hoonahs; second, to visit the Kootznoo tribe on Admiralty Island, to prevent a renewal of troubles between them and the Stickienes at Wrangell, reports having been brought in that such troubles were about to occur; third, to visit the Chilkhat country, for the purpose of strengthening and encouraging that tribe and the Chilkhoots in their advanced step of opening their country to miners and traders, which step was taken by my request, and is the legitimate growth from the successive steps of mine, in sending, in September, 1879, several of our Indians to Chilkhat, upon the occasion of a big fight, which resulted in an invitation to the whites to come, in response to which, I, in May, furnished a party of pioneers with escort (see report of June 7, 1880); and in general terms, to have interviews with as many as possible of the leading tribes, among whom white men are now beginning to penetrate, and to establish with them a feeling which would cause them to receive the whites with favor, and treat them friendly.

My reasons for going in person were, first, I am convinced that as "captain of the Jamestown" I have more influence with the Indians, from one end of Alaska to the other, than any other person; I do not speak boastingly, but simply state a fact, which is believed by all here, and confirmed by much evidence.

From Hoonah, Chilkhat, and Kootznoo I had received requests from the chiefs for advice and assistance upon important matters, and I was assured by returning pioneers that I could, by a personal visit, mold the Indians as I wished. Second, as the period during which white men clung to the settlement of Sitka, and called for "protection" was so far terminated that they were now penetrating the country in all directions in safety, and starting various businesses, it was advisable that a civil officer of the government, versed in trade and business matters, and familiar with the laws relating to such, should visit and teach them, and it was, I thought, proper that this representative of advancing peace should be introduced by the retiring representative of war.

In making up my party for this trip I selected Master G. C. Hanus, Dr. N. M. Ferebee, and ten of the best men of the ship. Mr. Hanus, because our voyage would carry us into unknown seas, where there existed many uncharted shoals and dangers, and where the safety of navigation required many corrections of all existing charts, and there is no young officer in the service better adapted for this duty than Mr. Hanus. He is observant, accurate, has a passion for surveying, and is indefatigable, and I feel confident that an examination of the sailing directions, surveys of harbors, locations of dangers, &c., which are incorporated in his report to me, and which I forward to the Bureau of Navigation, will fully justify my encomium.

The vessel was armed with a howitzer and Gatling gun, and rifles for the crew. I, acting for the Navy Department, furnished fuel, at first relying upon the government coal-pile, but finding it, eventually, to be necessary to purchase wood en route and to use the steamer's stock of soft coal, our hard coal not making sufficient steam.

Our first visit was to Koteosok Harbor, on Admiralty Island, where we arrived on the 16th of August, having been detained at an anchorage in Peril Straits by a southeast gale for two days. About the center of Peril Straits there exists a dangerous, uncharted rock, upon which several vessels have struck. Mr. Hanus was sent to search for it, and although it was nearly high water, succeeded in finding and locating it. It is directly on the track of the U. S. S. Ossipee, as given on chart 223 corrected by Meade. At this place, Koteosok Harbor, the Northwest Company have established a trading post, and the agent, Mr. Edward DeGroff, reports that during his two months' sojourn alone among the Indians he has been well treated by them. This is the home of the Kootznoo Indians.

Our interview with the Indians was held on the 17th, it having been necessary to send for a leading chief to a salmon river, some 25 miles away. This chief, named Kitchnath (Jake), was one of the Indians who were, in 1869, carried away as hostages by Lieutenant-Commander Mitchell, in the Saginaw, and I found him a prisoner when I assumed command of that vessel at Mare Island. My treatment of him and the other Indian prisoners on the Saginaw was fortunately such that as soon as Jake recognized me he was ready to comply with all that I should ask. The other chief, Gandshana (Andrew), had a most excellent letter from Lieutenant-Commander (now Captain) Meade, and from all I can learn of him he has continued to deserve it.

In this and all subsequent interviews I took the lead, and endeavored to impress upon the Indians that the war-ship was sent because the government had reason to believe that the Indians were dangerous and unfriendly to the whites; that I had found considerable misunderstanding and bad feeling at first, and that I had been compelled to punish a great many bad Indians; that at first the better Indians looked on and neither helped nor hindered me, but that of late we had got to understand each other, and that bad Indians gave me very little trouble because other Indians restrained them. All of which and much more of importance here, but which would seem in description puerile, led up to my telling them that the Great Tyhee in Washington was pleased and had now sent a peace tyhee, as I had told him the time had come for such officer to take hold.

Throughout all the interviews it was considered inadvisable to make presents; such policy tends to lead the Indians to think that we are afraid of them and willing to buy their good-will. My plan is to impress them that they are the ones benefited, and that it is a great favor to them that the whites come. Major Morris then took charge and explained to them about business matters. The results of this interview with the Kootznoos were, promises of welcome and good treatment to the whites, not to renew the war at Wrangell, and to report to me, instead of redressing themselves, in case of any difficulty with whites.

Leaving Koteosok at 4 a. m. August 17, we steered into Cross Sound, and at 3 p. m. anchored in Port Frederick Harbor (Komtockon), latitude 58° 09′ north, longitude 135° 30′ west, abreast the largest village of the Hoonah tribe. But very few Indians were at this ranch, which is the winter home of about 800, who during the summer are scattered among the inlets and on the coast, fishing for halibut and salmon, and hunting sea-otters. The hunting ground of the latter is about 30 miles northwest of Cape Spencer, and it was upon these grounds that a company (thirty canoes carrying three men each) of Fort Simpson Indians had been depredating. As there were no chiefs at the main village, we left there on the morning of the 18th, and ran to a harbor on an island, not named on charts, but called by the Indians Tesich. As we surveyed and made a chart of this harbor, we have called the island "Sherman Island," and the harbor "Willoughby Cove"—a man named Willoughby making his home here among the Indians. It was on information sent by Willoughby (confirmed by others) that Morris has acted. Willoughby arrived in Sitka the day before we started and accompanied us, and was quite useful through his local knowledge. We left him at his cove. In passing Point Adolphus, latitude 58° 18′ north, longitude 135° 41′, and thence to Willoughby Harbor, we encountered many icebergs.

At this place (Willoughby Cove) we held interviews with the Hoonah chiefs, Kahlodushak, Klaratoosah, and Kahemuk, who were the men who induced Willoughby to write me. The first named is a venerable and very eloquent man, and has great authority with his tribe. We learned from them that the "King George" Indians had gone home a few days before; that he had sent to them a letter which I had sent him by Willoughby, and that when they read it (the Fort Simpson Indians are educated and can read and write) they went away, but said they would return in September, with sixty canoes, and would not care then for the Jamestown, that they were "King George" Indians, and the "Bostons" could not touch them.

After the usual interview, conducted by myself as war tyhee, Major Morris continued the talk, and arranged a great deal of business in his own department. The Hoonahs were very much pleased at the attention paid to their request, and have promised not to fight the "King George" Indians, but to report to me if they come again,

Major Morris promising them to endeavor to get the English authorities at Victoria to stop the projected raid. I trust that he will be successful, for otherwise I shall have a very difficult task in endeavoring to stop a war which will involve the home governments. A deep bay, named by me "Glacier Bay," which is not on the chart, penetrates the northern coast of Cross Sound, between longitude 35° 38′ west, and 135° 56′ west. This bay is 35 miles deep, and at its head are five immense glaciers, from which the icebergs we have encountered are derived.

As this bay is entirely unknown, and as a branch of the Hoonas were in the upper part of it, we, depending upon the local knowledge of Willoughby and an old Russian of our crew, who had been up it in command of a schooner, concluded to try to interview the Indians, and make a running survey. We failed in the former, as, when we reached the inlet up which they lived, we found a bar which prevented our reaching them; but we got a pretty fair chart of the bay, and returned that night to an anchorage to the eastward of Point Adolphus.

On the 22d we left this anchorage and at 2 p. m. anchored in Swanson's Harbor, latitude 58° 13′ north, longitude 135° 13′ west, just inside Cordova Point, to await low-water, to enable us to locate a dangerous shoal.

There is here an Indian ranch, the head chief of which is Sitka Jack, who was absent. We obtained wood, and a chief named Karshle was in charge, whom we interviewed.

At 6 a. m., 23d, we started for the above named shoal, which is so conspicuous at low-water that I cannot conceive how it has escaped notice. We stopped and landed Mr. Hanus with instruments on it at 8 a. m. This shoal is in latitude 58° 09′ north, longitude 135° 08′ west, just in the fairway of the junction of Cross Sound and Chatham Straits, and was from 3 to 7 feet out of water, and at low-water fully one-fourth of a mile square. At high-water it would cover from 11 to 15 feet, according to tides. As this rock is not on any chart, nor described in any sailing directions, its locating is of great importance, and I named it "Hanus Rocks."

We then proceeded up Lynn Canal for Chilkat. The day was fine and warm, and the mountain scenery, which included hundreds of glaciers, magnificent. Before passing into Chatham Straits we had a fine view of Mounts Fairweather, Crillon, and Perouse. At 6 p. m. we anchored in William Henry Bay, on west side of Lynn Canal, latitude 58° 44′ north, longitude 135° 19′ west, to procure wood, which the Indians cut and cord for the company for $2 per cord, and it is most excellent fuel (hemlock). We made survey of harbor, &c. On 23d, 6 p. m., we arrived at the trading post between the Chilkat and Chilkoot villages. We here found that our visit was very opportune, as it was at once reported to us that a war had started between the Chilkats and Chilkoots. The Chilkats and Chilkoots have for generations claimed the exclusive right to trade with the Stick Indians, who live in the interior and are not allowed to come to the coast, and it was to prevent trespass upon the trade that they have hitherto objected to the whites coming among them; and their consent to the going into the interior of the miners was based upon promises made by the latter to refrain from trading with the Sticks. Their suspicion that Mr. Steele (who was not bound by promise) was endeavoring to establish the forbidden trade, had led them to appeal to me for assistance to prevent his so doing.

The inclosed sketch * will, with brief description, enable you to understand the situation.

The northern extremity of Lynn Canal is bisected by a narrow tongue, which produces two deep inlets, called, respectively, Chikat and Chilkoot Inlets. These are the most powerful and warlike tribes on the coast and their main villages are situated about 20 miles up rivers which empty into the inlets.

The mouth of the Chilkat River is obstructed by flats which can be passed only by canoes. Just below these flats, on the western side of the peninsula, there is a village called the "Lower Chilkat Village," but as it is inhabited by about equal numbers of Chilkats and Chilkoots, and governed by a chief of the latter tribe, it is more properly a Chilkoot village, and at it the two tribes meet for trade, &c., a trail crossing the peninsula. At the eastern end of this trail there is a good harbor, Portage Bay, and the Northwest Trading Company have built a house and established a trading post at this point, around which a new village will soon grow. The trader, a Mr. George Dickenson, is married to a Tongas Indian woman, who speaks, reads, and writes English, and is a missionary. Through the Dickensons we learned as follows:

A few days before a nephew of Klotz-Kutch, named Yakekoko, being drunk, desired to attack and kill a Frenchman named Pierre Erassard, who was at the Chilkat village, in a boat from Sitka on a trading voyage. Yakekoko has what is termed a "blood feud" with the whites, he having been stabbed last winter in Wrangell by a white man named John Currie, and in consequence has sworn to kill a white man to "get even." The attack upon Erassard was prevented by Klotz-Kutch, but as a barrel of molasses had been sold to the Indians (probably by the same Frenchman) many were drunk and a big fight ensued, during which Yakekoko shot and killed a Chilcoot Indian named Kootsnatz, the man who last fall wounded Klotz-Kutch (see letter of October 1), creating then a riot, which I had stopped temporarily by sending up Dick, Sitka Jack, &c.

Klotz-Kutch is getting old, and a class of young fellows are disposed to rebel against his authority, his ideas being in advance of theirs as regards the admission of miners, traders, and missionaries. All of the Indians of the lower village side with the Chilkoots, and after several days of skirmishing at the main Chilkat village, the side opposed to Klotz-Kutch, which was headed by Danawak, chief of lower village, sent to the main Chilkoot village for re-enforcements. The day before we arrived two canoes carrying over forty men had passed the trading post bound to Chilkoot from Chilkat, and every man belonging to the lower village had gone to the meeting, at which a big potalatch or drunk was taking place.

I learned also that Mr. Steele, the miner who was believed by the Indians to have endeavored to trade with the Sticks, was stranded about 15 miles by water above the Chilkoot village, and that the Indians refused to bring him down. Messengers were at once dispatched to Chilkat and Chilkoot to the head men, requesting them to declare a truce, and to meet us in council at Portage Bay on board the Favorite; also to the Chilkoot chief, requesting him to send at once a canoe for Mr. Steele and bring him down to us if he wished.

On the 24th Klotz-Kutch and Colchica, chiefs of the Chilkhats, accompanied by the trader Erassard, arrived; also, from Chilkhoot, Mr. Steele. Erassard confirmed the story of the Dickensons as to state of affairs in Chilkhat, saying that every night the fighting, which was suspended during the day, was renewed. This is Indian custom, their system of "getting even" making it very dangerous to a man to be identified as the killer of another, even in battle, and Steele reported that the entire Chilkhoot village was drunk when he left. Steele denied the reports which had been made, but did not convince me that he was entirely blameless.

That evening an interview was held with the two chiefs, and the matter of difficulty between Steele and the Chilkhats adjusted satisfactorily. We declined to talk of the war now progressing, until the Chilkhoots should be present. August 25, in the morning, a light canoe, with the American flag flying, came down from Chilkhoot. In her were several Chilkhoot chiefs. We appointed a conference at 10 a. m., and they went to the beach to breakfast, refusing to go to the trading post because the Chilkhats were there.

At 10 a. m. we fired a gun, and soon after all came on board. As this was a very important interview, we all dressed in uniform and epaulets, and the Indians, as far as in their power, vied with our splendor. Major Morris also donned a uniform, as it was necessary to add to our strength everything which could impress the natives. There were present, Chilkhats: Klotz-Kutch and Colchica, chiefs of main village; Chilkhoots, Danawak, chief of lower village; Karskarz (Indian shaman), chief of Chilkhoot village, and a young fellow, brother of Danawak, and his probable successor, who is very influential, and who has made lots of trouble. The following is a synopsis of the interview:

Interview between Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. Navy; Major Wm. Gouverneur Morris, special agent Treasury Department; Chilkhat chiefs, Klotz-Kutch and Colchica; Chilkhoot chiefs, Danawak, Karskarz, and others, at Trading Post, Portage Bay, Chilkhoot Channel, August 25, 1880.

Geo. Cozian and Shukoff, Interpreters.

Past Assistant Surgeon Ferrabee and Master G. C. Hanus, U. S. Navy, were present.

Commander BEARDSLEE: "I have sent for you to talk with you on a subject of great importance. I do not wish you to interrupt me, but to wait till I have finished, and then I will hear you. Many years ago a great Tyhee of the United States, Mr. Wm. H. Seward, came to this country. He traveled all over it, and when he reached Chilkhat he was the guest of Klotz-Kutch, and he writes in this paper you have shown me that Klotz-Kutch, and all of the Chilkhats used him well. He was greatly pleased with what he saw of the country, and when he got home he told his government that it was good; that the lands were rich in furs, minerals, and timber; the waters teeming with valuable fish, and the Indian tribes brave, intelligent, and disposed to be friendly; and by his advice the great Tyhee in Washington bought Alaska, and paid many millions of blankets.

"White men began to come to this country, among them both good and bad men; the last, seeing the riches of the country, wished to keep it to themselves, so they wrote false letters and the white men read that the country of Alaska was 'bad land' and the Indians a dangerous, treacherous lot of men, and that the whites could not stay here unless the government sent a war-ship or soldiers to protect them. Some of these reports were true, for the white men and Indians did not understand each other, nor how to get along together.

"The government sent the war-ship asked for, and selected me to command it, and it told me to protect the whites, and Indians who desired it, from the bad Indians.

"I have been on this duty over fifteen months. At first my work was very hard. Bad Indians and bad white men gave me much trouble, and the good men would not assist me, but stood and looked on, because they did not know me; but as time passed, and they saw that the war-ship was the enemy of the bad men only, and the friend of the good ones, these last began to help me, and when I asked the old men to make the young men do right, they did so. Then they began to send to me to advise and help them when they had troubles, and I did so, and by my request the Kootznoos and Stickienes, the Hoonahs, and Sim-Sims (Fort Simpson Indians), and the Chilkhats and Chilkhoots stopped wars that had started, and all sent me word that they wanted the white man to come among them and teach them. So I wrote to the Great Father that war times were over, and that it was now time to send teachers for the children, traders to do business, and a peace Tyhee to teach the Indians how to do business with the whites. Such a Tyhee has come with me. I came myself that I might get acquainted with all of the chiefs who have helped me so much, and that I might introduce to them the business Tyhee as my friend, that they might know that the war and peace Tyhees of the white men worked together.

"At Koeteosok, Kootznoo, Hoonah, Tink-ha-tah and other places, we found all quiet and peaceful, and we talked with the chiefs—I about such matters as I had charge of, and the business Tyhee instructed them how to carry on their business with the whites; but, now we have arrived at Chilkhat, the business Tyhee cannot talk, for there is war, and my work is not yet finished.

"Unless this war is stopped at once I shall leave here to-day and go back to the Jamestown and tell the Great Tyhee in Washington that the Chilkhats and Chilkhoots are not yet ready for a talk with the business Tyhee, and that the white men must not come beyond Cross Sound. I am very grieved and mortified. Cannot you four men, and will you not, stop this trouble, which is now but like a little fire which has started, and which can easily be put out by a cool breath, but which, if it gathers headway, will destroy the country. Will you not help me to blow it out?"

At this point a conversation between themselves was followed by a request that we should hear the story of the war and act as arbitrators; this we refused to do. Such action would have been highly impolitic. It would be impossible for any white man to place just the right weight on the various points which would arise. From an Indian point of view, in which both parties would coincide, acts which we might condemn would be considered as right, and vice versa, and I said to them:

"That we cannot do; we did not come here to interfere in your affairs; we came in a little boat, as friends, to pay a visit; we know that you Indians have laws, and that by them this dispute can be settled better by your chiefs in cool deliberate council than by young men, crazy with hoo-che-noo, killing each other."

KLOTZ-KUTCH. "We have listened to what you have said, and we agree that it is better that we should do what you say, but we cannot settle the affair without consulting the family of (?) (the shot man). I would rather pay two hundred blankets than have a long war about a bad man that was not worth a hundred. We are the rulers of all the Indians, and we promise you that the war shall stop now, and that such payment as a council decides is just shall be paid by me."

Danawak and Karskarz, the Chilkoot chiefs, indorsed the promise of Klotz-Kutch, and the two parties who, up to this time, had held aloof from each other, began a friendly consultation.

I then said to them: "Now that you have all joined in this promise, am I to understand that, except as to the amount to be paid, the whole affair is settled, and that the war is over?" All assured me that such was the case, and I then said: "I know that you will keep your word, for you are warriors, and brave, and only cowards lie, and I know that you old men have wisdom enough to see that it is best to settle a trouble without anger."

Then I introduced Major Morris, who had a long talk with them on business matters—smuggling, whisky dealing, &c. They manifested much interest in the subject-matter of the major's address, asked a number of questions, and promised to be guided by his instructions. Both of the tribes were greatly pleased by an offer that Mr. Vanderbilt, the agent of the Northwest Company, had authorized Major Morris to make, viz, to build at the trading post a comfortable school-house, where those who wished could be taught by Mrs. Dickenson, the wife of the post trader, and they said that they would not only send their children, but would build a new village around the post so that the children could be with their parents; and after consulting together the Chilkhats selected a site to the westward and the Chilkoots one to the eastward of the store.

They received, with considerable amusement, a proposition made by Major Morris that on future trips of the Favorite good, wholesome beer, which we whites drank and got fat and healthy on (illustrating by his own person as an example), should be substituted for the trouble-brewing molasses.

It is my belief that if this change can be made gradually, the use of molasses, as a beverage, can be greatly reduced; and so thought the chiefs, who are very willing to have the experiment tried.

After the interview we exhibited to them the howitzer and Gatling, firing a number of rounds from both; the action of the Gatling, which was mounted on a pivot block aft, so that we could sweep two-thirds of the horizon, was particularly interesting to them, as it taught them what one man could do to a fleet of canoes coming from all directions.

After this they all went ashore together to hold a pow-wow, and finish up the business. Klotz-Kutch, who had evidently anticipated that the case would go against him, one of his family having taken a life, which must be atoned for by another, or payment, had brought with him a bale of furs and blankets; and we having thus accomplished all of the objects of our mission, including a treaty of peace, and the quelling of a war which had already put a stop to all trade, and had endangered the lives of United States citizens, and which might have been prolonged indefinitely, started August 25, at 1 p. m., for Sitka, arriving at that place on the 29th.

During the trip the Northwest Trading Company, through its agent, Capt. J. M. Vanderbilt, extended to us every facility in its power, and Mr. Hanus sustained his reputation not only as a valuable executive, but by his hydrographic work, in carrying out which he displayed unusual zeal and ability.

The principal results of our hydrographic work are incorporated in hydrographic No. 97, 1880, and in Hydrographic Office chart No. 882, which are appended to this report; also, an extensive and important corrections to Hydrographic Office chart No. 225.

At each place visited Mr. Morris made arrangements with the most trustworthy Indians, through which we believed such offenses against the laws as importation by white traders of liquor would be reported to the Treasury official at Sitka. And we left at each place an ardent desire upon the part of the natives that white men should come and live among them.

ORIGIN OF THE FORAY OF THE ENGLISH INDIANS UPON THE ALASKA WATERS.

After our return to Sitka I received information from a reliable source that the expedition of the Fort Simpson Indians to the sea-otter hunting grounds of the Hoonahs, had been planned and outfitted by white residents of British Columbia, and that the marauding Indians were in the employ of these whites.

The Hoonah Indians had told me the same story, and had stated that the "Sim-Sims" boasted of their white allies. Their story being thus confirmed, I at once communicated to the department the information in the following dispatch:

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN,
Sitka, September 11, 1880.

SIR: Since our return to Sitka from our trip to Chilkat, Hoonah, &c., I have received information that the Fort Simpson Indians who have been engaged hunting for sea-otters on the grounds claimed by the Hoonahs, were fitted out by ——— Hall, the factor of the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Simpson. This man expresses great indignation at the course of the United States Government in taking steps to preserve the Alaska waters for Alaska Indians, and declares that the British Indians shall go when and where they please, and that he will supply them with food, ammunition, and arms, with instructions to fight if necessary.

The Rev. Mr. Crosby, a missionary of the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Fort Simpson, is very violent in his support of the views of Mr. Hall, and as he has a great influence among the Indians, exerts it in this direction.

Both parties claim that there is "nothing in the treaty" which takes from the Fort Simpson Indians a right which they have always held, of killing fur-bearing animals in Alaska, and trading, with English goods, with Alaska Indians; and Mr, Crosby declares that he will so instruct them, and to go to war with any Indians or other persons who attempt to molest them while so engaged.

In the event of the expected raid this fall, I shall simply act as an adviser to the Indians, urging them not to go to war, but to await patiently until the letters I have written upon the subject shall have been received in Washington.

I shall not tell them not to fight, for I am utterly unable to see that my orders are carried out, and do not care to expose weakness.

Very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, U. S. N.

HON. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

EVENTS IN AUGUST, 1880.

During the month of August three police cases which were acted upon by me were reported to the department in my dispatch of September 12, 1880.

Early in the month a Creole named Sinakoff, who has several times been subjected to discipline for similar offenses, got drunk and beat severely his father and mother, who are old people, and also a little brother. The parents complained to me and asked for protection.

Later in the month another equally disorderly Creole, named Velasse, committed a similar offense, and was reported by those he had beaten.

In both of these cases, after careful investigation, I punished these men by confinement on bread and water diet, taking this step simply because I was fully assured that they deserved punishment; that unless punished so that a fear of repetition would restrain them, the lives of those who had reported them would be in danger, and because I had the power and will to so act, which no one else in Sitka had. I therefore carried into execution the dictates of natural law, and used our strength to protect the weak.

In handling another case which arose during the same month, I found that it was not advisable to depend upon natural laws, and was reduced to accepting the only law existing in the country which could meet the exigency, viz, Indian law.

On the 20th of August one Indian caught another committing adultery with his wife, and shot him. The brother of the shot man, as soon after as possible, shot the shooter. All of this occurred at the ranch near the cannery.

Mr. Rockwell sent an armed party, arrested the living murderer, and held him in confinement, with an accomplice, until my return, when the matter was submitted to me.

I was greatly puzzled how to handle it. While I had no scruple in arbitrarily punishing a case of assault and battery upon women and children, and felt competent to do so, yet I could not strain my authority to such extent as to punish properly the crime of murder. The two deaths left the two families even; the quarrel had been settled, and the two corpses burned under one blanket on the same pile.

I have no method of sending criminals to Oregon, and no funds from which the expenses of their transportation and that of witnesses can be paid; and I am sure that it is not in the power of any United States judge to decide justly a case involving Indian customs, laws, and evidence, unless he has made a careful study of such matters, and is furnished with full and complete evidence; and I believe that the settlement of one such case in accordance with our laws would do more harm than good, unless the precedent thus established could be consistently followed up, not only on Indians within reach of the Jamestown, but with all throughout the country of Alaska.

With no law nearer than Oregon, nor forces except at Sitka, the execution of an Indian at Portland would probably be supplemented by the murder of one or more of the whites in the interior.

I considered it my duty to complete what I had begun, and insure the safety of these men, even if to do so I was compelled to act as I have in this case and shall in future, unless I am otherwise instructed by the department, namely, until Congress sees fit to furnish a substitute, to recognize the only law of this country—the Indian law, founded on the old Mosaic—and, when a murder among themselves is fully atoned for, according to their ideas, either by the death of the murderer or payment for the life, and I am assured that all parties interested are satisfied, and no further troubles will spring up, to do as I did in this case, lecture the criminals and let them go.

Thus the anomalous case was presented that the only governing power in Southeastern Alaska, viz, the will and judgment of a naval commander, could not, without being stretched beyond the limit that even the most full discretionary instructions could give him, prove equal to the administration of justice in case of murder. A man who committed simple assault and battery could be and was punished, but if he committed this assault to the extent of killing his adversary, he was safe.

From the date of my return to Sitka, August 28, until my detachment September 13, 1880, no further event of importance in connection with Indian affairs occurred, and when I left, "harmonious relations had been established between the whites and Indians" throughout the country.

I considered the information communicated to me and reported in my dispatch of September 11 of sufficient importance to justify my stopping at Victoria, while on passage southward, and seeking an interview with the British Indian commissioner, Colonel Powell, R. A., on the subject of the letter, and also in regard to possible causes of future trouble, due o uncertainty as to the location of the boundary line.

The consultation between Colonel Powell and myself, is reported in a dispatch, as follows:

PORT TOWNSEND, W. T.,
September 23, 1880.

SIR: While at Victo.ia, B. C., where I remained three days, I held consultation with Dr. J. W. Powell, superintendent of Indian affairs of British Columbia, in regard o the status of Indian affairs in Alaska, in connection with those of the adjacent ritish Columbia tribes, &c. I explained fully to him the evil results which would necesarily follow a persistence upon the part of Messrs. Hall and Crosby in carrying out heir design of sending English Indians, fitted out for war, to hunt in Alaskan waters, nd gave him such information as I had obtained duri.g my personal visits to Hoonah and other Indian villages.

Dr. Powell, who has full power to carry into effect any course he may adopt—hav- i ng a steam gunboat, the Rocket, at his service—assured me that he would at once ake all necessary steps to prevent another expedition by the English Indians to the Hoonah grounds, and that he would at once report the matter to the Dominion Gov- e rnment at Ottawa, reporting also such information as I gave him, and my views, in which he coincided, in regard to the Chilkhat and Chilkoot Indians.

These Indians have several villages, some of which may be (no one knows positively) on the English side of the boundary line, while the others are unquestionably n the American side. All of these villages, belonging to one tribe, should belong to, nd be governed by, the same power, preferably that of the United States, inasmuch s the tribe is connected by marriage and emigration with several of the American ribes, notably the Sitkas, Stickienes, Hoonahs, Hoo-che-noos, and Auks.

This admixture would produce pernicious effects if part of the Chilkhats, or Chilkoots were to be led to consider that they were King George Indians, and not subject o our control; and secondly, should it ever be necessary to send armed forces to the hilkhat country, England could not do so without passing them through United tates waters, and making a base of operations upon United States soil.

In accordance with the request of Dr. Powell, I wrote a letter, copy of which is inclosed, upon which, and our conversation, he will base his actions.

I had also an interview with the Rev. William Duncan, missionary at Metletcatlah, who possesses great influence among the British Indians. Our conversation was informal, but I am fully convinced that he will use his influence to prevent the threatened troubles.

Very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander, U. S. N.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

[Inclosure.]

VICTORIA, B. C.,
September, 21, 1880.

DEAR SIR: In connection with our conversation in regard to Indian affairs in Alaska and the adjacent English territory, I would inform you that in July last the Hoonah Indians, who live in Cross Sound, sent word to me, then in command of the United States ship Jamestown, at Sitka, that Indians from Fort Simpson, B. C., were engaged in hunting sea-otters on the grounds to the northwest of Cape Spencer, claimed by the Hoonahs to appertain to themselves, and requested my advice and assistance in driving the Fort Simpson Indians away.

I wrote a letter to the chiefs advising against fighting, and soon thereafter paid a visit to the Hoonah villages, and investigated the affair, with results as follows: that three canoes, carrying thirty Fort Simpson Indians, had for a month been hunting upon the grounds of the Hoonahs, against the protest of the leading men of the tribe; that they had established themselves at the first by free distribution of liquor to the few Indians (Hoonahs) who, at the date of their arrival were on the grounds; that upon being shown my letter the Fort Simpson Indians went away, saying that in fall they would return with a large number (sixty) canoes, and that then they would not care for the Jamestown; and that they claimed to have the backing of white men.

After my return to Sitka, I learned from sources in which I have confidence that this party had been outfitted by Mr. Hall, the factor of the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Simpson, and that said Hall had publicly declared his intention to fit out a large party to go again this fall, and that he should furnish them with guns and ammunition, and instruct them to fight if necessary. I learned further that a clergyman named Crosby, who possesses much influence with the Indians, indorsed strongly the views and plans of Hall, and declared his intention to instruct the Indians to the same effect.

In my judgment, a persistence in this course will inevitably result in a war between the Hoonahs and Fort Simpson Indians, which will spread all along the coast.

In regard to the Chilkhat and Chilkoot Indians, there being some uncertainty as to the location of their villages, I would say, that while with each tribe the upper village may be beyond the boundary line, the lower villages are beyond question to the southward of it, and that, should it be decided that the upper villages belonged to one country and the lower to another, the situation of affairs would soon become very complicated.

I give you this information with a view to your taking such steps as may be in your power to prevent any collision between the various tribes, and thus co-operate with me in my endeavors, which have resulted in peace throughout Alaska, and an earnest desire for white men to come to it.

Yours truly,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Commander.

J. W. POWELL, Esq.,
Indian Commissioner.

In anticipation of soon being relieved from the command of the Jamestown, I, early in September, included in my usual monthly report to the department, the following conclusions as to the condition of affairs in Southeastern Alaska:

[Final dispatch of September, 1880.]

I think that the period has arrived when it becomes my duty to report that in my judgment the permanent retention of a vessel of war at this place is no longer a necessity. Such detention could only be required through a duty of protecting helpless whites from the assaults of dangerous Indians, neither of which conditions now exist.

The able-bodied white men, capable of bearing arms, who have spent this summer at Sitka, have in numbers fully equaled the male Indians; and assuming all of the latter to be dangerous, the whites should be fully capable of keeping them under control; but many of the Indians are not men from whom any danger need be anticipated; there are many sober and reliable men among them, who are friendly to the whites, and the division into "families" is nearly a guarantee that in case of difficulty with one "family," the alliance with the whites of others could be depended upon.

Nearly every white man in town gives employment in one way or another to one or more Indians, who, through motives of self interest and friendship, would adhere to them in case of difficulties; and a great many of the white men keep Indian mistresses, who would be faithful to them, and would influence their male friends; the state of morals here being such that these women do not lose caste.

I had been led to believe that in case of troubles arising between the two races here, the unfriendly Indians of the inland waters would eagerly hasten to the aid of the Sitkans. While I still believe it likely that some would, I think from my knowledge of the coast tribes, gained during my trips north, that the danger has been greatly exaggerated; or, perhaps, it has been lately reduced through our influence.

I know that among the Hoonahs, Kotznoos, Chilkhats, Chilkoots, Stahkines, and Sticks, white men who behave themselves are living singly and in small parties, in apparent safety and on friendly terms; and at Wrangell, where there are fewer whites and as many Indians, the presence of a vessel of war has not been necessary.

All of the Indians are begging for protection and a government.

On the other hand, I cannot admit that the whites are so helpless a body as to constantly need armed protection, or rather, that they need remain so, had they, as a mass, one particle of public spirit or pride.

There have been throughout the summer enough white men to whip, if necessary, all of the Indians near Sitka, and as the number of the latter increases by the return of hunters and fishermen, so does that of the former, by the return of prospectors and miners.

A great trouble is that the permanent white residents of Sitka will not combine for any purpose. "Each man for himself" is their motto; and their town becomes filthy; the wooden sidewalks rotten, limb-breaking traps; their bridges ruins; and their schools and church a failure, if unsupported by others; with no effort upon the part of more than two or three to prevent. Dance-houses, gambling hells, rum-selling saloons, and houses of prostitution exist on the main street, and no man puts forth an effort against them. * * *

This place and this country need a civil law and government which shall not too abruptly overturn the laws and customs which the Indians hold sacred. Such governing power should need the support of a small armed steamer, which could, until the law was firmly established, patrol the water—this to be followed up by occasional visits of steamers of the North Pacific squadron. This ship is comparatively helpless, except to swell the gains of the traders. We can very easily subdue any fractious Indians who might come within our reach, but we cannot reach, effectually, any others. Fortunately the moral influence has been considerable, and throughout Alaska the Indians respect and fear the Jamestown and yield to her commanding officer great deference. This, however, would cease should he, through error of judgment, permit to become excited among them a feeling of opposition. Should they once begin to defy us they would speedily discover how powerless the Jamestown would prove to inflict thorough punishment.

I would gladly exchange her for a tug of the Speedwell class, and feel that the country would gain by the change.

The foregoing completes the consolidation of extracts from my dispatches in regard to Indian affairs.

Before closing this portion of the report it seems not out of place that I should avail myself of information furnished to the department by my successor, Commander Glass, which bears upon subjects which have been discussed. Up to the latest dates, March, 1880, the Indians throughout Alaska have kept their promises to me, and have remained on harmonious terms with each other and with the whites.

Shortly after my departure in September, 1879, Lieutenant Symonds continued in the Favorite the system of survey begun by Mr. Hanus Visiting the Chilkhat village he found that the promise of Klotz-Kutch to pay the demanded forfeit had been made good, and that peace was re-established.

Among the important results of this second trip in the Favorite was the hydrographic work embodied in chart and Hydrographic Notice 98, and the locating of the Chilkhat villages, which he finds are beyond doubt in the United States territory; he also obtained a census of the Chilkhats and Chilkhoots, which shows that their numbers have been overestimated.

The privileges granted to the miners of penetrating the country have resulted in the discovery of gold-bearing ledges and silver ore in various places, which, it is thought, are of great value, and these discoveries have attracted to Taku so many whites that a new town called Rockwell has been built, which will undoubtedly soon prove a flourishing settlement.

PART III.

HYDROGRAPHIC.

PART III.

HYDROGRAPHIC WORK.

Beginning in June, 1879, the entire summer and first part of autumn were devoted to a careful survey of Sitka Sound and its approaches.

Our experience in entering had taught us that neither of the charts or sailing directions was reliable or correct, and it was considered advisable to make an entirely new chart instead of attempting to correct the old one.

A new base line, extending from the inner end of the wharf, directly up the main street, to a spot exactly under the center of the dome of the Russian Church, was measured, and every day that the weather permitted was devoted to the work, which was performed with conspicuous zeal and ability by Lieut. L. M. Symonds, navigating officer, and Master G. C. Hanus, assisted at various times by nearly every available and capable officer of the ship; and every boat of the ship, with Indian canoes in addition, were pressed into the service.

The steam launches proved very valuable for this work, we running in them over 165 miles of soundings, during which over 5,000 casts were recorded and 902 angles observed.

As information was obtained involving corrections to existing charts, reports were sent to the Bureau of Navigation which were incorporated in the Hydrographic Notices and Notice to Mariners, Nos. 63, 66, and 81 for 1879, and No. 5 for 1880, herewith appended.

The first named, describing the accompanying chart of Symonds' Bay, on the island of Biorka, to survey which the survey of the sound was interrupted for a short period in August. The results of the season's work are embodied in a complete chart of the sound, channel, and harbor of Sitka, which is the only one in existence which is at all correct. The chart is now being published by the United States Coast Survey, to whom it was transferred by the Bureau of Navigation. Among the important results were the discovery of several dangerous reefs, of uncharted islands, new harbors and channels, and the correction of the position of nearly every one of the hundreds of islands and reefs which form a net-work in front of the harbor.

Tidal observations were taken and the establishment of the port redetermined, our results coinciding with those of the United States Coast Survey in this respect. I would here state that Prof. W. H. Dall, of the Coast Survey, who had made previously a short visit to Sitka, indicated to me, before leaving Washington, certain probable errors in the old charts, and that in every such case our results confirmed his views.

The hydrographic work for the summer of 1880 was confined to that performed by Master G. C. Hanus while on a trip through the inland waters with me in the steamer Favorite, a portion of which is incorporated in Hydrographic Notice No. 79 of 1880, hereto appended, and other portions in corrections to Chart No. 225, which is now being altered in accordance.

After my being relieved by Commander Glass, the survey of the inland waters, through the medium of the Favorite, was continued by him, and the results of a trip made by Lieut. F. M. Symonds are incorporated in Hydrographic Notice No. 78, which, as it serves to explain certain portions of this report, is also appended.

Mr. Symonds's work furnishes also other important corrections to Chart 225, which chart is the only one of use to a navigator in these inland seas, and which had been laid aside as too erroneous for issue.

The surveys of the Jamestown have restored its value, and a section of it, on which the correction made by the Jamestown are indicated in red ink, is hereto appended. This includes Glacier Bay, Tya Inlet and River, Chilkhat Lake, Taheen River, and rocks off Cross Sound, called Hanus Reef.

A copy of this notice will be sent free of charge to any ship-master on application to this office. The substance of this notice is to be inserted in red ink on the charts affected by it, and introduced into the margin, or otherwise in the page, of the Sailing Directions to which it relates.)

HYDROGRAPHIC NOTICE.

[No. 63.]

ALASKA—SITKA SOUND—BIORKA ISLAND.

The following information, extracted from the report of Lieut. F. M. Symonds, U. S. N., relating to Sitka Sound, &c., has been received from Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. N., commanding U. S. S. Jamestown:

462. Biorka Island is about 5 miles in length, and its greatest width, north and south, about 2½ miles; it is densely covered with trees and tall grass, with some underbrush, but not as rank as that found at localities farther removed from the sea. There is a lake at the eastern end, the supposed outlet of which furnishes a place where vessels may easily obtain water by using boats.

The western shore of Biorka Island is bluff and may safely be approached to within a distance of 250 yards. The channel between it and a rocky patch to the westward is clear. (H. N. 63–'79.)

463. Caution.—The passage to the eastward of Biorka Island is foul, being studded with sunken rocks, and is therefore not recommended.

On the north side of Biorka Island, near its east side, is good anchorage in a bay lately surveyed by Lieut. F. M. Symonds, and Master G. C. Hanus, U. S. N., which has been named Symonds Bay. (H. N. 63–'79.)

464. Symonds Bay.—Entrance Island.—Situated on the west side of the entrance to this bay is a nearly circular rock, fifty (50) yards in diameter, and rises about 45 feet above high water mark. It is entirely barren, and is an excellent mark for that side of the entrance. (H. N. 63–'79.)

465. Hanus Island.—The eastern entrance point of Symonds Bay is covered with trees on its western side.

Although in the directions for entering the bay it is recommended to give Hanus Island a berth of 200 yards, leaving it to port, yet it may be approached to within a distance of seventy-five (75) yards. The distance stated in the directions being calculated to apply more particularly to night navigation when it is sufficiently clear to plainly make out Hanus Island. By day it is only necessary to avoid the kelp patches. The first kelp patch on entering is on the western side of the bay, and marks a rock with but two feet water over it at low tide. This rock is the only danger in the bay.

At the head of the bay is a gradually sloping white beach, which can be seen quite a distance at night. (H. N. 63–'79.)

466. Directions.—With the exception of the rocky patch to the westward of Biorka Island the approaches to Symonds Bay are free from dangers. Entrance Island on the west side, and Hanus Island on the east side, mark distinctly the harbor.

Approaching the entrance, avoid the kelp patch to the northward of Hanus Island, and give the island a berth of 200 yards to the westward, then head for the sand-beach, the center of which will bear about SSE.

Anchor in seven (7) fathoms, avoiding the kelp on either shore of the harbor.

Holding ground is good, and anchorage sheltered against all winds, except those between WNW., and N. by E. (over north). NNW. blows directly into the bay. (H. N. 63–'79.)

NOTE.—Fresh water and wood in abundance.

467. Rocky Cove.—This cove is situated on the south side of Biorka Island, but its entrance is closed by dangerous sunken rocks and small rocky islands; its shores are covered with great quantities of drift-wood. (H. N. 63–'79.)

468. Sitka Harbor.—Entrance.—Lieutenant Symonds cautions vessels against using the western channel leading to Sitka Harbor, owing to the existence in that channel of two dangerous sunken rocks, of which further particulars will be published in a future notice.

The eastern channel is wide and safe, and its entrance is well marked by Jamestown Beacon, No. 3.

Corrected establishment, Sitka wharf.....XIIh., 24 m.
Mean rise and fall of tides.....8.4 feet.
Extreme range of spring tides (same day).....10.4 feet.

HYDROGRAPHIC NOTICE.

[No. 66.]

The following information relating to the existence of a dangerous sunken rock near Mokhnatoi (wooded) island in the approaches to Sitka Harbor, derived from the report of Lieut. F. M. Symonds, U. S. N., has been received from Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. N., commanding U. S. S. Jamestown:

475. Sitka entrance.—Sunken rock.—A dangerous sunken rock with 9 feet over it at low water, on which the sea breaks during bad weather, lies SSW. $\frac{3}{8}$ W., 465 yards from the east point of Wooded Island (Mokhnatoi).

NOTE.—A rock near this position is marked on the Russian chart of 1809, but is not found on charts of a later date.

Directions for the eastern channel.—After passing Vitskari Island stear NE. $\frac{1}{2}$ N., until East Beacon, which is on Eckholm Island, bears E. $\frac{1}{2}$ N., after which eastern channel may be entered with safety, keeping well on the south side of the channel in order to clear Simpson's shoal and Tzaritia rock.

Caution.—Vessels drawing more than 21 feet must avoid a rocky patch lying E. by

N. from Entrance Island by passing within a distance of 300 yards of the eastern extremity of that island; this patch is marked on all the charts of the locality.

Sailing vessels working to windward must also avoid Zenobia Shoal, which lies nearly on the line between Kulitch and Liar rocks, and a two-fathom shoal which bears NE. by N., about 2¼ miles from Vitskari Island, the sunken rock near Wooded Island above referred to and four dangerous breakers lying westward of the rock and about NNE. ½ E. from Vitskari Island.

HYDROGRAPHIC NOTICE.

[No. 5.]

ALASKA—SITKA HARBOR AND APPROACHES.

The following information relating to Sitka Harbor and its approaches has been extracted from the report of Lieutenant F. M. Symonds, U. S. Navy, navigating officer U. S. S. Jamestown, Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. Navy, commanding, who has just completed a survey of the locality:

36.—Sitka Sound.—To a vessel coming up Sitka Sound the islands about Sitka appear as one confused mass, but they may be approached boldly until the beacon erected by the Jamestown on Beacon Group is made out, after which a vessel's position may be plotted accurately and the desired channel chosen without difficulty.

36*a*.—Zenobia Rock.—This rock has only fifteen feet of water over it, and not 18 feet, as previously reported, and as shown on existing charts. (H. N. 5–'80.)

37.—Middle Channel.—Pritchard Shoals.—A reported dangerous shoal shown on all charts of the locality, covered by eight (8) feet and bearing north (easterly) from Passage (Goloi) Island does not exist in, or near, the reported position, but is undoubtedly an erroneous position of the western of Pritchard Shoals. (H. N. 5–'80.)

38.—Mitchell and Rose Rocks.—These rocks are incorrectly placed on present charts. They lie near the fair-way and should be left to starboard in entering. The center of Turning (Povorotni) Island, bearing N. by E., clears both, and leads through midchannel between the western of Mitchell Shoals and a three-fathom spit extending ENE. about 309 yards from Volga Island.

39.—A shoal lying nearly west from Passage Islands is of greater extent than heretofore supposed, and narrows the channel between Passage Island and Surf Rocks (Bolivnoi Island) to about 250 yards, which renders its use unadvisable, even in fine weather. (H. N. 5–'80.)

40.—Keene Rock.—The position of this rock as reported by Lieutenant Craig, U. S. N., and published in Hydrographic Notice No. 35 (289), of 1879, is correct; but another rock, with only 14 feet water upon it, lies about 75 yards SE. by S. from it. (H. N. 5–'80.)

41.—Western Channel.—Rock.—A dangerous rock lies NNW., about 340 yards from the northern extremity of Signal-light Island, and from the rock a shoal with from 9 to 18 feet upon it extends NW. about 130 yards.

42.—Whiting Harbor.—This harbor, in which the holding ground is good, and excellent shelter found against northeasterly gales, is situated on the south side of Japan

Island, or between the south shore of that island and the islands to the southward of it, viz, Survey Island and Lodge Group. (H. N. 5–'80.)

43.—Beacons.—As previously reported, beacons have been constructed on Vitskari and Mokhnatoi (Wooded) Islands; but in addition to these another beacon has been erected on Eckholm Island (Beacon Group), which is similar in size and construction to the one on Wooded Island, described in Notice to Mariners No. 81 (431), of 1879. (H. N. 5–'80.)

44.—Kulitch Rock Breakers.—The western breaker of Kulitch Rock bears S. 7° W. from Wooded Island Beacon. (H. N. 5–'80.)

NEW ISLANDS NAMED.

45.—Jamestown Group.—This name is given to a group of islands (heretofore unnamed) the NW. extremity of which lies SW. by W. $\frac{3}{4}$ W., about 870 yards from the NW. point of Thompson (Galankin or Sandy) Island, and extends thence in an E. $\frac{1}{2}$ S. direction for a distance of about 340 yards.

Jamestown Bay is situated on the south side of Jamestown Group. Fresh water may be obtained there, to facilitate which a small jetty has been built by the crew of the Jamestown. (H. N. 5–'80.)

47.—Survey Group.—This is a name given to an important group of islands lying about ($\frac{1}{4}$) one-quarter mile NE. by N. from Signal-light Island, and on the right of the entrance to Whiting Harbor.

Several other islands of less importance have been named by the Jamestown surveying party, all of which will appear on the new charts when completed. (H. N. 5–'80.)

48.—Changes in the names of principal islands.

New names.	Name on U. S. Coast Survey charts.	Names on British Admiralty charts.
Beacon Group	Ekgalit-tch	Eckholm Islands.
Belknap Island	Ekgalit-tch (Southern Island)	Eckholm (Southern Island).
Liar Rock	False Rock	Liar Rock.
Thompson Island	Sandy Island	Galankin Island.
Beardslee Island	Kayaktch Island	Kayaik Island.
Survey Island	Sasedni Island
Long Island	Long Island	Dolgay Island.
Russian Island	Bamdorotchnoi	Bamdo-roshni.
Whalebone Island	Whalebone Island	Quitoway Island.
Luce Island	Emheleni	Emgayten Island.
Ship Island*	Error Island	Oshinpi.
White Island*
Johnson Island*	Berry Island
Hawley Island*	Boidarka
Fasset Island*
Entrance Island	The Twins
Horney Island	Rogova Island
Gull Island	Kukh-kan Island	Kuch-kan Island.
Turning Island	Turning Island	Povorotni.
Ball Island	Aleutski	Aleyoutski.
Harbor Island	Harbor	Gavanski Island.
Japan Island	Japanese Island	Yaponskoi Island.

*These five islands were formerly known, collectively, as a group, under the name of BOIDARKA ISLANDS by the U. S. Coast Survey, and KUTCHUMA ISLANDS by British Admiralty. (H. N. 5–'80.)

49.—Tides.—Corrected establishment of the port, XIIh. 30m.

Greatest diurnal range observed	14.70 feet.
Average diurnal range observed	10.16 feet.
Greatest rise above plane of reference	12.20 feet.
Average rise above plane of reference	8.92 feet.

(H. N. 5–'80.)

DIRECTIONS FOR ENTERING.

50.—Eastern channel.—The sailing directions for entering the Eastern channel, published in Hydrographic Notice No. 66 (475), are amended so as to read: After passing

Vitskari Island, steer NE. ½ N. until the beacon on Eckholm Island (Beacon Group) bears ENE., after which Eastern channel may be entered with safety. (H. N. 5–'80.)

51—Middle channel.—This channel is full of dangers, and the present charts are neither sufficiently accurate nor complete to indicate the route to follow in order to avoid them. It is therefore not recommended to strangers, but in case it is necessary to enter by this channel, the dangers in it will best be avoided by passing between Passage (Goloi) and Beardslee (Kayaktch) Islands, instead of between Passage Island and Surf Rocks (Goloi and Bolivnoi Islands,) or between Surf Rocks and Wooded Island (Bolivnoi and Mokhnatoi Islands), as indicated on the Admiralty charts. (H. N. 5–'80.)

52.—Western channel.—In navigating this channel care should be taken to avoid the shoal reported in Hydrographic Notice No. 66, of 1879, as lying SSW. ⅝ W. 465 yards from the east point (SE. extremity) of Wooded Island, which latter is now distinguished by a triangular pyramidal wooden beacon ; and also the shoal already mentioned as lying NNW., 300 yards from north extreme of Signal-light Island. (H. N. 5–'80.

53.—Anchorage.—With regard to the anchorage at Sitka, Commander Beardslee remarks that ordinary gales blowing from SE. and SW. outside are deflected to NE. and south, respectively, before reaching the inner anchorage. Very heavy SE. gales, however, are not deflected, but blow home with a force greater then is felt from any other direction.

Occasionally a heavy NE. gale sends through the valleys, which traverse the island from Silver Bay, heavy squalls from ENE.

For these reasons it is necessary to moor very securely, if it is contemplated to remain during the winter or for any considerable length of time.

54—Moorings.—The Jamestown after several trials was eventually moored in the western harbor with her head about E. by S., abreast of the Indian village to the westward of Sitka town, with the eastern extremity of Harbor Island bearing SE. ½ S. and the east point of Japan Island SSW. ⅝ W. The ship was moored as follows:

Starboard bower, with 75 fanthoms cable backed by 60 fathoms, the end of which was carried on shore and made fast to the big boulder on Harbor Island. (To the southeastward.)

Port bower, with 90 fathoms cable backed by 45 fathoms, the shore end of which was shackled into a Russian anchor fixed in the wharf. (To the eastward.)

Starboard quarter—sheet anchor, wite 60 fathoms cable backed by 75 fathoms, one end of which was carried ashore and made fast to a big boulder on Japan Island. (To the westward.)

Port quariers—sheet anchor, with 60 fathoms cable to the northwestward, from which direction tie mountains furnished a lee for the ship.

55. Commander Beardslee recommends the above anchorage to vessels visiting the harbor with the intention of remaining for some time, and suggests as a necessary provision against accidents that vessels be supplied with extra bowers, steam anchors and cables, because if any of these are lost they cannot be replaced in Sitka.

The hull of a vessel anchored in this position is well shelteted from the heavy squalls which rush through the gulch to the northward; inasmuch as they generally pass over the ship and strike the water some distance outside of her, the spars only catching the force of the squall, and for this reason it is well to send down all the upper spars when moored for some time. (H. N. 5–'80.)

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

AMERICA, W. C.—ALASKA—SITKA HARBOR.

The following information, relating to the establishment of beacons on Vitskari and Mokhnatoi Islands, entrance to Sitka Harbor, constructed by the crew of the U. S. S. Jamestown, under the direction of Lieut. F. M. Symonds, U. S. N., has been received from Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. N., commanding U. S. S. Jamestown.

(430.) Beacon on Vitskari Island. (N. M. 81–'79.)

The beacon on Vitskari Island is a conical stone beacon, standing on a level surface of rock near the center of the island, 25 feet above high-water mark. It is 10 feet high, with a diameter of 20 feet at the base and 4 feet at the top.

A log or staff projects five feet above the beacon, the former being capped by a large stone, the upper extremity of which is about 16 feet above the rock, and 41 feet above high water.

At this altitude the beacon ought to be visible from an ordinary vessel's deck, on a clear day, a distance of about 11 miles.

(431.) Beacon on Mokhnatoi Island. (N. M. 81–'79.)

This beacon is constructed of heavy logs, in the form of a triangular pyramid, and situated on the summit of Mokhnatoi Island, at an elevation of 50 feet above the high-water mark. It is 19½ feet high, 20 feet wide at the base, and 2 feet wide at the top. Above the top of the beacon a staff projects 3½ feet, which, like the beacon on Vitskari, is capped by a large stone, the whole rising 22½ feet above the island, and about 72½ feet above high-water mark. At this altitude, on a clear day, the beacon will probably be visible from an ordinary vessel's deck a distance of about 15½ miles.

From the Mokhnatoi Beacon the following bearings were taken:

Vitskari Beacon	S. 35° 45′ W.
Mt. Edgecombe	S. 64° 30′ W.
St. Lazaria Island (SE. point)	S. 42° 30′ W.
Kutich Rock	S. 2° 00′ W.
Biorka Island (NW. point)	South.
Bouranoff (Bouronov) point	S. 31° 15′ E.
Rocky Hill	N. 58° 15′ E.

Directions.—Entering Sitka Harbor in a sailing vessel with the wind from the northwestward, it is advisable to give the Mt. Edgecombe shore a wide berth, as under the influence of that high land the wind is apt to fail and fall calm when the vessel is in the vicinity of Vitskari.

Biorka Island should be given a berth of at least 2½ miles.

In order to clear the sunken rocks to the westward of Biorka Island, keep the beacon on Vitskari Island bearing eastward of N. ½ E.; or, in other words, do not bring the beacon to bear to the northward of N. ½ E.

In entering the harbor leave the beacon on Vitskari to port ½ mile, then steer for Mokhnatoi Beacon, leaving it on the starboard hand in passing into the western channel.

[No. 97 of 1880.]

The following information in regard to the inside passages north of Sitka is furnished by Commander L. A. Beardslee, U. S. Navy, commanding the U. S. S. Jamestown. The reconnaissance was made by Master G. C. Hanus, of that vessel, during the present year:

NORTH AMERICA—NORTHWEST COAST—ALASKA—NEVSKI STRAIT.

919.—Whitestone Narrows.—Directions.—If bound to the northward, when the rocky islet known as the Whitestone, which is uncovered at all stages of the tide, is in plain sight, stir for the passage to the right or eastward of it and head half-way between it and the shores of Baranoff (Baranov) Island. When near the rock, say at a distance of 100 yards, haul close in for the point on the eastern side of the passage and hug it until the cove just to the eastward is well open.

To the northwestward of Whitestone islet sunken rocks and kelp beds extend for a quarter of a mile. The kelp forms an excellent guide, but must be avoided throughout its entire extent, as there is a sunken rock with only two feet on it at low water, about 300 yards to the westward of the Whitestone. Next avoid the sand spit at the mouth of a stream a short distance to the northward and westward of the cove, and when opposite the northern and western end of the large kelp patch haul over for the center of the channel, giving the western shore the preference during the remainder of the passage through Nevski Strait.

The flood-tide at Whitestone ledge runs to the southward and eastward and the ebb to the northward and westward. (H. N. 97–'80.)

KLOKATCHEFF GULF (KLOKACHEVA SOUND).

920.—Directions.—Wishing to enter the gulf from seaward, keep anywhere near the middle of the entrance, giving the preference to the north shore, and steer in without fear until close up to the high bluffs on Baranoff Island, seeking anchorage in Whitestone narrows. All dangers on the northern shore of the gulf are exposed. This information was furnished by the Russian pilots. (H. N. 97–'80.)

POGIBSHI CHANNEL, OR PERIL STRAIT.

921.—Wyanda Rock.—The islet shown on B. A. Chart No. 2337 to the northward of Poroga Island, near the entrance to Suloia Bay, has a shoal of sunken rocks extending from it to the northward for several hundred yards, and about one-third of a mile N. by E. from the islet there is a detached sunken rock which never uncovers, and which is known as Wyanda Rock, the revenue cutter of that name having struck pon it.

Directions.—Between Wyanda Rock and a rock always out of water (off Lesnoi Island) there is a clear passage several hundred yards wide. From this latter rock detached sunken rocks extend SSE. into the channel for nearly two hundred yards.

The strong tidal currents here cause rapids, the whirlpools and eddies of which render it all times a difficult passage, and vessels always wait for a favorable stage of tide to go through.

After passing Deep Bay the best channel will be found inside of small islands, which are noted on the chart off the prominent point to the northward of Deep Bay. This group consists of three wooded islands and a bare rock. Leave them all to the eastward and pass between them and Tchitchagoff (Chichagov) Island. (H. N. 97–'80.)

922.—Rock.—The rock laid down on the chart just to the southward of this group of islands is not believed to exist, but there is a dangerous rock, which is out of water at extreme low tide, to the eastward of the bight on the largest island. (H. N. 97–'80.)

923.—Favorite Anchorage.—A good anchorage can be found close in under the shore of Baranoff Island, near Nismenya (Low) Point, about half a mile to the southward of Otstoia (Distant) Island, in from 7 to 12 fathoms of water. The holding ground is excellent, the bottom being blue mud or clay.

This anchorage affords excellent shelter from SE. around to NNW., the hills being high. From SW. around to NNW. the wind draws down the strait and through the inlets, making it a lee shore, but no heavy sea need be expected. To this harbor the name of Favorite Anchorage was given.

There is also an anchorage, formerly much used by Russian vessels, in the bight shown on B. A. Chart No. 2337, to the northward and eastward of Nismenna, or Low Point. A vessel can anchor there in from 10 to 15 fathoms of water, bottom soft mud, and find good shelter in southerly gales. The holding ground, however, is not so good as at Favorite Anchorage. (H. N. 97–'80.)

924.—Cozian Rock.—In getting under way from Favorite Anchorage bound to Chatham Strait a good channel, with 7 fathoms water, will be found between Otstoia Island and Nismenna Point, keeping close to the island to avoid the sand spit which makes out from the point. A dangerous rock, which breaks in rough weather and which has not been heretofore located, was found, but having no tide-gauge it is impossible to state the exact depth of water on it. The probable depth is three feet at low water.

Angles were taken to locate the exact position of this rock, but the points on the charts are so inaccurately laid down that it is difficult to plot it exactly, but it lies about N. by E. from the eastern end of Otstoia Island, distant from one-half to three-quarters of a mile.

It is so near the middle of the channel heretofore given on the charts that several vessels have struck upon it. The Russian steamer Nicholas struck on it in 1854, and the schooner Nellie Eads and steamer Gussie Telfair both struck on it in 1875. By passing through the channel between Otstoia Island and Nismenna point all danger from this rock is avoided.

This rock was called Cozian Rock, after the Russian pilot who reported it. (H. N. 97–'80.)

925.—McClellan Rock.—Off the eastern point of the anchorage known on the charts as Lindenberg Bay there is a rock, covered at high water, not hitherto laid down. It bears S. by E. from the point, distant about one-fifth of a mile. There is a channel with 7 fathoms of water inside the rock.

This rock was reported by Lieutenant McClellan, who sounded the passage on a trip to Chilcat in May, 1880, and it has been called McClellan Rock. (H. N. 97–'80.)

CHATHAM STRAIT.

926.—Point Graven.—The point of Tchitchagoff Island, at the junction of the waters of Peril Strait with those of Chatham Strait, isknown on the charts as Point Graven. Off this point there is a very large reef, marked on B. A. Chart No. 2337. This reef does not exist, but there are two rocky islets off the point, with deep water a few hundred yards outside of them. (H. N. 97–'80.)

927.—Morris Reef, so named by the Jamestown party, is a very dangerous reef, not on any chart. It makes out into Chatham Strait from one to one and a half miles in an E. by S. direction from the point on the northern side of the entrance into a cove or inlet just to the northward of Point Graven.

Off this point, to which the name of Point Hayes has been given, there is first a ledge of rocks, uncovered at low water, then a small wooded island, and then a reef of sunken rocks; about a quarter of a mile from the island there is a rock always out of the water. The remainder of the reef consists of numerous detatched rocks with passages between them, many of the rocks showing at low water.

About one mile northward of the point another reef of detached sunken rocks makes out from the shore and runs towards Morris reef. Russian pilots state that this point should not be approached closer than one and a half miles. (H. N. 97–'80.)

928.—Kootznahoo Roads and Koteosok Harbor.—Entering Koteosok Harbor from Kootznahoo Roads, from 4½ to 5 fathoms can be carried at low water. Two lines of soundings were run at this stage of the tide, and the greatest depth was shown to be 5 fathoms. The shoal off Shelter Point runs further into the channel, and that off Bluff Point, at the mouth of Koteosok Creek, is not so extensive as formerly shown. The shore line of Koteosok Harbor runs further back than heretofore delineated, and a rock which uncovers at low water has been located. From this rock Shelter Point bears W. by N., distant two-thirds of a mile.

A new trading post has been lately established at Koteosok Harbor. (H. N. 97–'80.)

TENAKEE, OR SIWASH CANAL.

929.—Description.—The information in regard to this passage (which is navigable by canoes only) was received from Major Berry, formerly collector at Sitka, and his statements were fully confirmed by the Hoonah Indians.

Four or five miles from Hoonah there is a portage of about one hundred and fifty steps at high water and about thirty at low water.* The highest point of the portage is about fifteen feet above high-water mark.

This passage is much used by the Hoonah Indians. Half-way up there are hot sulphur springs, and near these an Indian village. The arm of water opposite this village extends in a southerly direction towards Hoonah Sound in Peril Straits, from which it is separated by high land, the distance from water to water being about five miles. (H. N. 97–'80.)

930.—Swanson's Harbor.—This harbor has apparently three entrances on the Cross Sound side, but two of them are false, being obstructed by sunken rocks and sand bars. Outside of these there are sunken rocks extending off shore from a mile to a mile and a half; many of these rocks are uncovered at low water.

The true entrance to this harbor is the one nearest to Point Couverden. Off this point there is a small rocky islet, not hitherto charted, which bears about SE. by S. from Point Couverden, distant about one and a quarter miles.

Directions.—To enter Swanson's Harbor by the eastern and only safe entrance, the course from the rocky islet, leaving it to northward, is about west. Off the SE. point of Entrance Islandt a reef and sunken rocks make off a quarter of a mile or more; after passing these, steer for the center of the inner end of the harbor (about west), and anchor opposite the western entrance in from 8 to 10 fathoms water, soft, sticky bottom. (H. N. 97-'80.)

931.—Point Couverden is on an island, and there is a passage between Swanson's Harbor and Lynn Canal, but this was not examined owing to the short stay of the party.

"Sitka Jack," an Indian chief, and several families of his tribe have a summer settlement here. (H. N. 97–'80.)

CROSS SOUND, OR ICY STRAIT.

932.—Spaskai Island.—This island, laid down on the charts SW. by W. of Point Couverden, distant 4½ miles, does not exist. It is probably intended to represent the small rocky islet near the eastern entrance to Swanson's Harbor, which is visible from the anchorage, bearing east, referred to in paragraph 930 as being SE. by S. from Point Couverden. (H. N. 97-'80.)

933.—Sister Islands.—The islands N. by E. ½ E. from Point Sophia, distant from two and a half to three miles, are known as the Sister Islands. Off the southern end of the eastern island, at a distance of a quarter of a mile, there is a reef of rocks which uncovers at low water. (H. N. 97–'80.)

934.—Northern shore.—The Northern shore of Cross Sound is reported by pilots to be foul for a distance of from one to one and a half miles from shore, all the way from Point Couverden, twenty-two miles to the westward, to a large hitherto uncharted bay, to which the name of Glacier Bay was given.

The Indians, however, report that there are several safe anchorages along this shore. (H. N. 97–'80.)

935.—Beardslee Islets.—The point which appears on the charts in latitude 58° 24′ N., longitude 135° 50′ W., is undoubtedly intended to represent the southern point of a chain of islands which extends in a northwesterly direction up the center of Glacier Bay for about fifteen miles. As seen from Cross Sound they appear to divide the bay into two separate sheets of water.

They are known as Beardslee Islets, and there are saidto be hundreds of them, large and small, and, although they are called sand islands, many of them are high and covered with timber.

It is reported that there are deep channels and safe anchorages among them.

The southern point of these islands is not so far to the westward as represented on the charts.

The group of islands southeast of Glacier Bay is known by the name of the Pleasant Islands. (H. N. 97–'80.)

936.—Port Frederick Harbor—Directions.—In running in from Cross Sound, coming from the eastward, after having passed point Sophia, a vessel can safely hug the shore of Tchitchagoff Island. At a distance of from two to three hundred yards from the shore no bottom could be obtained in 16 fathoms. Near the entrance to the harbor, a low, grassy island makes out from the shore, with a sand spit making off from the about one hundred yards, after which the water deepens suddenly. The point at the entrance to the harbor is a high bluff, the rocky walls of which are of a brownish-red

*Professor Muir, who has explored this region, confirms the statement of Mr. Berry that there is a portage, but places it much further from Hoonah.

color. After this is passed keep in the middle of the channel between Harbor Island and the shore of Tchitchagoff Island, and anchor in about 8 fathoms of water, soft, muddy bottom, off the Indian village. The holding-ground is excellent. (H. N. 97–'80.)

937.—Halibut Rock.—A rock which uncovers at low water, and which is believed by the pilots to be much n arer the channel than it really is, was examined. This rock bears SSE. ½ E. from the inner island on the western side of the entrance to Port Frederick Harbor, distant about two-thirds of a mile. This danger was given the name of Halibut Rock. (H. N. 97–'80.)

938.—Point Adolphus—Anchorage.—After passing Point Adolphus bound to the westward an anchorage can be found in the second bight, in from 7 to 15 fathoms, soft mud. The first bight to the westward of Point Adolphus is but a curve in the shore.

The anchorage in the second bight is said to be secure in all except northwesterly winds. (H. N. 97–'80.)

939.—Rocks.—Opposite the inner part of the second bight there is a sunken rock about 150 yards from the shore, and off the point forming the western limit of this small bay and about two hundred yards from the shore there is a rock covered at high water.

Pilots report that there is also a rock which uncovers at low water off the next point to the westward, and that its distance from shore is one-eighth of a mile. From this point the land makes away to the southward, forming a large bight, to which the name of Mud Bay was given. (H. N. 97–'80.)

940.—Mud Bay.—The southern shore of this bay has the appearance of an immense sand spit, stretching in a curve from the eastern to the western shore of the bay. Entering from the northward and eastward the western shore will appear like a group of islands. The shore of the point, which will appear to be the outer island, is marked by large masses of white quartz, which resemble ice. A small island (Goose Island) lies just to the southward of this point, and at low water a reef between them uncovers nearly its whole extent.

There is an immense mud flat, with sounding varying from 4 to 7 fathoms water, about three-quarters of a mile to the eastward of the west shore of the bay.

Six fathoms water, mud bottom, was found about three-quarters of a mile from Goose Island.

The h:lding ground in Mud Bay is excellent.

On the 18th and again on the 19th August, 1880, a number of small icebergs in Cross Sound were in sight from the anchorage. (N. H. 97–'80.)

941.—Lemesurier Island—Willoughby Cove.—Lemesurier Island is the large island to the westward of point Adolphus and to the northward and westward of Mud Bay. There are reefs off nearly all the points on the southeastern shore of this island.

The deep bight on the southern shore is known as Willoughby Cove.

A small sailing vessel or steamer can find an anchorage here in from 8 to 14 fathoms water, muddy bottom. The holding-ground is excellent.

The cove is open from SE. to NNE., and a very strong current sets by just outside, which creates strong eddies, bringing iceburgs in dangerous proximity to a vessel anchored too far out.

These eddies set towards a large bite just to the eastward of the cove, and on the 19th of August, 1880, much drift-ice had been washed on shore there, while a number of good-sized icebergs had grounded some distance from the shore. Mud Bay was free from ice. It is said that ice never enters Willoughby Cove. (H. N. 97–'80.)

942.—Reef.—There is a dangerous reef off Iceberg Point, southern shore of Lemesurier Island, which uncovers for about a quarter of a mile from the shore at low water, and in rough weather it is said to break for at least another quarter of a mile further out. Lemesurier Island is moderately high and covered with timber. (H. N. 97–'80.)

GLACIER BAY.

943.—Description and directions.—This large sheet of water, which has not heretofore been charted, lies northwest of Point Adolphus, and extends in a northwesterly direction from the northern shore of Cross Sound.

To enter this bay from Cross Sound bound to the westward, when about two miles from Lemesurier Island steer about WNW. until you enter the bay, and then steer about W. by N., or for Willoughby Island, a high island which lies near the southern shore of Glacier Bay and about twelve or thirteen miles from its entrance.

In entering from seaward through the channel north of Lemesurier Island, when near the point where the waters of Cross Sound or Icy Strait unite with those of Glacier Bay, it will be necessary to give the northern shore of the former a wide berth, for at this point, which is low, a sand spit, not heretofore shown on the charts, makes out from the land about one and a half miles.

Before entering Glacier Bay strong tidal currents or eddies will be encountered, especially to the northward and eastward of Lemesurier Island, and this part of Cross Sound is exceedingly dangerous for sailing vessels, since there is much thick weather and even in August, 1880, there was much ice, in the form of large floes or small icebergs, coming down from Glacier Bay. The tide here runs at least three knots an hour.

Near Willoughby Island there is an inlet on the southwestern shore of the bay. It has two entrances, but only the one farthest up the bay was examined.

Between the inlet and the bay, at this point, there is a bar about 100 yards wide, on the shoalest part of which there are 3½ fathoms at high-water, with deep water inside.

Several miles up this inlet there is a fishing village of Hoonah Indians.

Willoughby Island is said to be five or six miles long and from two to three miles wide. There is no timber in this section of the bay. From personal observation and from the information obtained from prospecting miners, Russian pilots, and Indians, a sketch of the bay was made.

In running up to the inlet near Willoughby Island, from Cross Sound, numerous casts of the lead were taken, with no bottom at 16 fathoms, the vessel running along the southern shore of Glacier Bay at a distance of from three-quarters to one-and-a-half miles.

Mr. Willoughby, a pioneer, who has explored the upper end of this bay, furnished the following information:

There are five immense glaciers at the upper part. The first, on the southern shore of the bay nearest Willoughby Island, is about half a mile wide and 150 feet high. The next is about three-quarters of a mile wide and 200 feet high. The third, known among the Indians as the "Great Glacier," is situated at the head of the bay, and is about one mile and a half wide and from 200 to 300 feet high. The fourth, on the northern shore of the bay, is about half a mile wide and 150 feet high; and the fifth and smallest is about half a mile wide and 50 feet high. Most of the ice seen in this bay and in Cross Sound comes from two of these glaciers; the sea washes under them, rots the ice, and pieces are constantly broken off.

The information which follows in regard to Glacier Bay was obtained from Prof. Muir, a gentleman who had lately visited the locality:

On the northern shore of Glacier Bay, north of Willoughby Island, there is a large inlet from three to four miles wide at its mouth. It runs to the northward and westward five miles, and at its head there is an immense glacier, which extends across the head of the inlet for a distance of about three miles. According to Prof. Muir this glacier is the grandest of all; ten miles back from its snout it is ten miles wide, and near this, its greatest width, sixteen branches of the first class unite to form one immense glacier. Four of the sixteen branches are each over two miles wide, and nearly all have tributaries.

The distance from the snout of the glacier to its farthest removed fountain is about forty miles.

The five glaciers described by Willoughby, Prof. Muir judges to be about one and a half miles wide each, except the second, which at its mouth is divided into two parts by a small island, each of the parts being about one mile and a half wide.

At the head of the little bay just to the westward of Willoughby Island, Prof. Muir reports another glacier. He believes that many of these glaciers furnish icebergs. (H. N. 97–'80.)

LYNN CANAL.

944.—Dangerous reef.—Near the junction of the waters of Lynn Canal, Cross Sound, and Chatham Strait, there is a large reef covered at one-third flood tide. It lies three miles S. 58° E. from Point Couverden, and does not appear on any chart heretofore published. At low-water the highest part was seven or eight feet out of water. It consisted of a series of detached rocks extending at least a quarter of a mile to the eastward of the position occupied.

A vessel must not approach this reef nearer than a mile, for a strong two or three knot current sets right across it.

The instruments used for determining its position were the sextant and the surveyor's compass, and the conditions for observing were very favorable.

The position was obtained by laying all the angles down at the same time on a paper protractor and then plotting. According to this, Point Augusta cannot extend so far into Chatham Strait as previously represented, which confirms information obtained from pilots.

Most of the compass bearings, though carefully taken, are of no use whatever in connection with the determination of this reef, nor can they be until the points observed upon are correctly located. (H. N. 97–'80.)

945.—William Henry Bay, which is an excellent harbor, is situated on the western shore of Lynn Canal, to the northward of Point Grant.

Directions.—Wishing to enter this harbor, keep from one-half to three-quarters of a mile from the western shore of Lynn Canal until abreast the entrance. This is necessary, as otherwise it is very difficult to recognize the harbor. Strangers will be aided in finding it by noting that the highest mountain in this vicinity, which has a rounded, bald top, without trees, is just to the northward and westward of the entrance.

When the bay has opened well, head in for the inner part of the bay, keeping in the middle until you pass the point at the eastern side of the entrance, after which select a berth at pleasure in from 9 to 13 fathoms water, soft, muddy bottom.

946.—Ralston Island—Reef.—Captain Vanderbilt, of the NW. Trading Company's steamer Favorite, reports a reef out of water at half tide, about one mile NW. by N. of the small island just to the westward of Ralston Island.

Coming down from William Henry Bay to go down Stephens Passage inside of Lincoln Island, Captain Vanderbilt steered for Port Bridget in order to avoid this reef. He adds that at low-water the portion uncovered is fully a quarter of a mile long in a NW. by N. and SW. by S. direction.

Ralston Island and the small island just to the westward of it are about one mile and a half further to the westward than previously shown on the charts. (H. N. 97–'80.)

CHILCOOT INLET.

947.—Portage Bay—Directions.—When abreast of Sullivan's Island haul over for the northeast shore of Lynn Canal, keeping about midway between it and the island, and afterward between it and Seduction Peninsula, until you open Portage Bay, where the NW. Trading Company have lately established a post. Keep about a quarter of a mile from the south shore of the bay and anchor near it in from 9 to 15 fathoms water, soft, muddy bottom. The water on the opposite shore is comparatively shoal and the holding-ground is not so good, the bottom being either of rock or sand.

Opposite this bay and to the northward and eastward of it there is a large inlet into which the Tyy'a River empties. This inlet is said to be navigable for large vessels for a distance of fifteen miles, and the river for ten more by canoes. From ten to fifteen miles up the Chilcoot River there is a village of eleven large houses, this being the principal settlement of the Chilcoot tribe. Across Seduction Peninsula, between the lower Chilcat village and the trading-post, there is an excellent trail, which the Indians use as a portage for their small canoes. (H. N 97–'80.)

CHILCAT INLET.

948.—Pyramid Harbor is located on the southwest shore of Chilcat Inlet, and derives its name from a small pyramidal-shaped island about three-quarters of a mile distant, which bears about N. ¼ E. from the anchorage. This island can be readily recognized by its shape; it is bare of trees, and is the only island above Ventosa Island.

A short distance above Pyramid Island commence the flats and shoals which are formed by the quicksands of the Chilcat River. Although there may have been a channel for vessels of fifteen feet draught, as indicated on former charts, such is not believed by pilots to have been the case, and the channel which now exists is constantly changing its depth and location, small boats finding it difficult to keep in the channel at times.

In May, 1880, Lieut. McClellan searched ineffectually for several hours for a channel suitable for a launch drawing about three feet.

It is dangerous for any vessel to go beyond Pyramid Island without a local pilot.

There is an Indian village four miles above Pyramid Harbor.

Directions.—When abreast Seduction Point keep about in the middle of the inlet, giving the preference to the northeastern shore, as flats are said to make out from the opposite side.

After passing Ventosa Island haul over for the western shore of the inlet, and you will be aided in recognizing the harbor not only by the little sand island known as Pyramid Island, but by the old bed of a glacier, which from the deck of a vessel will appear like a sand spit. This is just to the southward of the anchorage.

Haul in for the bight and approach the shore boldly, anchoring in from 11 to 15 fathoms, soft mud.

The ho ding-ground is excellent.

On entering the harbor the high mountain which rises directly in rear of it, at an angle of about 35°, will cause the shore to appear much nearer than it really is. (H. N. 97–'80.)

HYDROGRAPHIC NOTICE.

[No. 98 of 1880.]

The information contained in the following notice is furnished by Commander Henry Glass, U. S. N., commanding U. S. S. Jamestown. The reconnaissance and surveys were made by Lieut. F. M. Symonds, of that vessel, during September of the present year:

NORTH AMERICA—NORTHWEST COAST—ALASKA—BARANOFF ISLAND.

949.—Rubia (Fish) Bay—Shulze Cove.—(See sketch.)—Schulze Cove is about two and a half miles from the southern entrance to Peril Strait and is on the northern shore of Rubia (Fish) Bay.

The entrance, as well as the cove itself, is free from all visible dangers.

The Russian steamers formerly used this cove as a shelter from southeasterly gales, anchoring off the northern and western shore of Piper Island. In approaching that island avoid the sand spit extending from it to the northward and westward, and anchor just to the northward and westward of the spit.

The holding-ground is good. (H. N. 98–'80.)

CHICHAGOFF ISLAND—TENAKEE OR SIWASH CANAL.

950.—Hoonah (Hoonyah) Harbor.—(See sketch.)—The general directions for approaching Entrance Point after passing Sophia Point will be found in Hydrographic Notice, No. 97 (936) of 1880.

To the northward and westward and close to Entrance Point there is a pinnacle-shaped rock forty feet in height, which has upon it a few stunted hemlock trees. Within fifteen yards to the westward of it there are 6 fathoms of water, and in the small bight E. by N. from it there is a perpendicular wall of bare rock one hundred and fifty feet in height.

Having brought Entrance Point to bear NE., enter the harbor and anchor, without fear of dangers, opposite the Indian village, avoiding too near an approach to the sand spit just to the easward of Entrance Point.

The holding-ground is excellent, being sticky mud. The shores of this harbor are thickly covered with hemlock and rank vegetation and are high.

To the eastward of Entrance Point the hills slope in either direction, northward and westward and southward and eastward, from a height of about 300 feet to a height of about 150 feet at Entrance Point, and 60 feet at about one mile to the southward and eastward of the village.

Pitt Island is low and thickly covered with trees.

Between Green Island and False Points is the entrance to a large bay, which has the appearance of a good, snug anchorage. One line of soundings, showing plenty of water, was run across the entrance. (H. N. 98–'80.)

LYNN CANAL.—(See chart.)

951.—Point Couverden.—The rocks to the northward and westward of this point, which were incorrectly placed on former charts, have been correctly located. (H. N. 98–'80.)

951*a*.—The Sisters.—The relative position of these islands has been corrected, and a small island and a rock, not previously charted, discovered to the southward and westward of them. (H. N. 98–'80.)

952.—Vanderbilt Reef.—Lieut. Symonds passed close to this reef, both on its eastern and western sides, at low water, and located it. He, however, recommends giving it a good berth to the northward.—(See Hydrographic Notice, No. 97 (946) of 1880.) (H. N. 98–'80.)

953.—Point Whidbey.—On the northern side and close to this point there are several islands not previously shown on the charts. (H. N. 98–'80.)

954.—Endicott River.—About three and three-quarter miles to the northward and westward of the entrance to William Henry Bay is a river to which the above name was given. Its mouth is filled with sand bars and the channel at the entrance is only about fifty feet in width. The river itself was not examined. (H. N. 98–'80.)

FAVORITE CHANNEL.—(See chart.)

955.—Directions.—The course through this channel, as marked on the accompanying chart, is free from all dangers and cannot be mistaken. The chart is complete as far as regards all visible dangers at low water.

Entering from the northward and westward, keep well over towards Point Bridget to clear Vanderbilt Reef until a SE. ¼ S. course will take you through in mid-channel between Lincoln and Sentinel islands.

The sunken rock laid down on the old charts near Shelter Island, in this channel, may exist, but Lieut. Symonds passed at low water very near, if not over its position, in a steamer drawing 11 feet of water.

The channel was found to be clear until George Rock was reached. When passing to the eastward of this rock keep well over towards Spuhn Island after passing Point Louisa. A good anchorage may be found in the neighborhood at Fritz Cove, Douglass Island. (See 957.) (H. N. 98–'80.)

956.—Shelter and Portland Islands.—These islands were found to be incorrect, both in topography and position, on former charts, and were corrected as far as it was possible in passing on either side of them. (H. N. 98–'80.)

DOUGLASS ISLAND.

957.—Fritz Cove.—(See sketch.)—This cove is situated on the northwestern end of Douglas Island, in latitude 58° 19′ N., longitude 134° 47′ W.

On the western shore the land rises to a height of at least 1,500 feet, gradually sloping towards the center of the harbor to a height of 40 or 50 feet. The shore at the middle of the cove is low, and just back of the beach it is marshy. Entrance Point is about seventy-five feet high, and is covered with trees.

Directions.—In approaching the cove, keep about 100 yards distant from the northern and western shore of Douglass Island until opposite the middle of the entrance, and then steer a SSE. course to an anchorage, keeping at least 400 yards from Entrance Point. Anchor in 12 fathoms water. The anchorage of the Favorite (see sketch) was formerly that used by the Hudson Bay Company's steamers. The holding-ground is good, being sticky mud.

SAGINAW CHANNEL.—(See chart.)

958.—Reef.—Saginaw Channel contains a dangerous reef of rocks, lying about three-fourths of a mile to the westward of the southeastern end of Shelter Island. This reef is not laid down on former charts and is the only hidden danger.

Directions.—Coming from the westward, after passing the rocks off Barlow Point, Rocky Point will be seen extending well to the eastward and just covering the southwest end of what appears to be an island, but which is a part of the point itself. Keep well over towards Rocky Point until the dangerous reef mentioned above is passed, after which the channel is clear. When off this reef, Portland Island is seen to the southward and eastward of it. (H. N. 98–'80.)

CHILCAT INLET AND RIVER.—(See chart.)

960.—Portage.—The portage between Portage Bay and Chilcat Inlet is one and a half miles in length. The divide is low, with a gentle rise from the bay. On the eastern side the soil is a rich loam, adapted to the cultivation of grass and the hardier vegetables, and covered with evergreen trees and a deciduous growth of birch and cottonwood. Passing from the eastern side to the middle of the divide, the soil becomes thin and marshy and necessarily colder, as it has not the southeastern exposure of the eastern slope. On the western side large patches of swamp grass, a bluish clay soil, and then granite mud were found. The mouth of the Chilcat River opposite this point is about five and a half miles wide. (H. N. 98–'80.)

961.—Description.—Portage Point, where canoes were taken for Tondustek, the first Chilcat village, is about a mile to the southward and westward of the western end of the portage.

The party embarked at half-flood. Snags and patches of sand were visible in many directions, and it required, under sail, very careful handling to keep in even two feet of water. A careful examination of the mouth was made for quicksands, but none were discovered. Indians were observed on the sand flats in the center of the river spearing salmon, but none of them had any knowledge of the existence of quicksands in the river.

Tondustek is to the eastward of and close to Ranch Point. This village has sixteen houses and a population of 171 Indians. Two chiefs hold sway; the elder and head, Donawauk (Silver-gray), being about fifty years of age, and tall and noble-looking, with Caucasian features. Kacky, the other chief, is young and good-looking, being particularly notorious for his unscrupulous dealings and quarrelsome disposition.

The village is on a wide, grassy, alluvial flat, having for its background a bold granite mountain, whose precipitous peak was streaked in a remarkable manner by slides of bright slaty granite, sand and gravel, while lower down were shrubs and bushes of bright yellow and crimson shades, deciduous growth, and woods of dark evergreen. The village was noticeably clean.

After leaving this village a course was shaped up the river, and, although an opposing current of at least four miles an hour was encountered, good progress was made, the breeze being fresh from the southward and eastward.

The course from the village was SW. Two miles from the village precipitous mountains, 2,000 feet in height, rose on either hand. The timber on the mountains gradually changes, deciduous trees taking the place of the evergreens, and bushes replacing the larger trees, until, at about ten or fifteen miles from the mouth of the river, the mountain sides are brightly mottled with yellow and orange. On the southeastern side of the river the rugged and serrated mountain crests, covered with snow, appear cheerless and uninviting.

About five miles SW. by S. from Tondustek, up the valley of a stream called Takheen (Hindmost River), is the Bertha glacier, resting on a southern mountain slope and reaching nearly to the surface of the river. It is precipitous in its descent and has a double snout, occasioned by a huge mass of rock near its medial moraine. The ice is very clear and white. The mountains which feed this glacier are of the same group which supply the Davidson glacier and the many small glaciers which spring into view on the southwestern shore of Lynn Canal.

At 1.45 p. m. September 27, 1880, Tondustek bearing NE., 7½ miles distant, the course was altered to west. Sand-bars just awash were continually met, and the average depth in the channel was only two feet. In altering the course Spuhn Point was rounded. The river at this point is one and a half miles in width. The flats opposite Spuhn Point extend out for nearly a mile from the southwestern bank of the river. The temperature of the water at this point was 46° Fahr., the air being 53°.

At 2.30 p. m. the canoe was off Vanderbilt Point, which bears west from Spuhn Point, distant 2½ miles. The general course was now WNW.

Leaving Vanderbilt Point, the mud and sand flats, which fill the lower part of the river, were left behind, and numerous low flat islands were met with. These islands, covered with alder, willows, birch, and cottonwood, inclose the shallow channels, while great stretches of barren gravel and sand flats, with sloughs and pools, fill the intervening spaces between the islands.

The current is rapid and increases in proportion as the channel between the islands narrows, running at times five or six miles an hour.

As the party progressed the average width of the river was one mile, and the general course was gradually altered to W. by N.

At 6.30 p. m. the canoe reached Camp Point, which is half a mile SE. of Kutkwutlu (Gull's place) and sixteen and a half miles from the mouth of the river.

On the morning of the 28th the course was continued up the river, and Kutkwutlu was soon reached.

This village, the second from the river's mouth, is very dirty, and consists of eleven houses with a population of 125 Indians. There is no head chief at this place.

From Camp Point the north bank of the river trends a little to the northward and then to the northward and westward to Chilcat Point, at the upper extremity of Klukquan village (Old town).

The river is here two miles wide and is alive with salmon. The cliffs on the banks are about 2,000 feet in height.

Klukquan, the main Chilcat village, bears W. by N. from Camp Point, distant 3 miles. It contains sixty-five houses and a population of 558 Indians.

From this village the voyage was continued up the Taheen (King Salmon) River, which was entered after rounding Chilcat Point. At 11.15 the party was off Glass Point, which bears WNW. ¼ W. from Chilcat Point, distant two and a half miles. Glass Point extends out nearly to the center of the river valley. The river is here two miles in width and its general direction is WNW.

At 12.20 p. m., Glass Point bearing S. by E., six miles distant, the trip up the river was discontinued at a point S. by E., a quarter of a mile from Jamestown Point.

Nearly west of Klukquan village is a point on which is Chilcat Peak, 4,000 feet high. It is at this point that the Taheen, flowing from WNW., and the Kluheeny (Dog-salmon), from SW. by W., meet. No information could be obtained as to the source of the last-named river. The Taheen is the outlet of Kousouah (Long) Lake, which, from Indian reports, is about 30 miles from Klukquan. On the Taheen, fourteen miles from the lake, there are falls 60 feet in height.

Into the Taheen, thirteen miles from Klukquan, empties the Kaätl River, flowing from the northward. This latter is a small river and is not navigable for canoes.

About three miles south of Klukquan is Chilcat Lake, which extends about six miles NW. and SE.

From every indication on the banks of the Chilcat River, Lieut. Symonds concludes that during the spring and summer freshets the river never rises more than two feet above its level in September, which rarely exceeds three feet in the deepest part of the main channel. (H. N. 98–'80.)

CHILCOOT INLET.—(See chart.)

962.—Deyea River.—The Deyea River, the outlet of Chilcoot Lake, is small and shallow and navigable only for canoes. The main village, called Tananei (Salmon Leaf), is at the junction of this river with the lake. It contains eight houses and has a population of 127 Indians. At the mouth of the river there is an Indian hunting village containing three houses.

ENE. from the mouth of the river there is a small glacier, and E. by N. from the same point is the entrance to Tyya Inlet, which extends in a northerly direction to the mouth of a river of the same name. This river is navigable for canoes only.

The northeastern side of Chilcoot Inlet is incorrectly placed on Commander Meade's chart, but want of time prevented Lieut. Symonds from obtaining sufficiently reliable data to place it correctly.

The loftiest mountain peak, just to the southward of Tyya Inlet, was found by barometric measurement to be 3,700 feet high.

Directions.—In approaching the cove, keep about 100 yards distant from the northern and western shore of Douglass Island until opposite the middle of the entrance, and then steer a SSE. course to an anchorage, keeping at least 400 yards from Entrance Point. Anchor in 12 fathoms water. The anchorage of the Favorite (see sketch) was formerly that used by the Hudson Bay Company's steamers. The holding-ground is good, being sticky mud.

SAGINAW CHANNEL.—(See chart.)

958.—Reef.—Saginaw Channel contains a dangerous reef of rocks, lying about three-fourths of a mile to the westward of the southeastern end of Shelter Island. This reef is not laid down on former charts and is the only hidden danger.

Directions.—Coming from the westward, after passing the rocks off Barlow Point, Rocky Point will be seen extending well to the eastward and just covering the southwest end of what appears to be an island, but which is a part of the point itself. Keep well over towards Rocky Point until the dangerous reef mentioned above is passed, after which the channel is clear. When off this reef, Portland Island is seen to the southward and eastward of it. (H. N. 98–'80.)

CHILCAT INLET AND RIVER.—(See chart.)

960.—Portage.—The portage between Portage Bay and Chilcat Inlet is one and a half miles in length. The divide is low, with a gentle rise from the bay. The river is here two miles in width and its general direction is WNW.

At 12.20 p. m., Glass Point bearing S. by E., six miles distant, the trip up the river was discontinued at a point S. by E., a quarter of a mile from Jamestown Point.

Nearly west of Klukquan village is a point on which is Chilcat Peak, 4,000 feet high. It is at this point that the Taheen, flowing from WNW., and the Kluheeny (Dog-salmon), from SW. by W., meet. No information could be obtained as to the source of the last-named river. The Taheen is the outlet of Kousouah (Long) Lake, which, from Indian reports, is about 30 miles from Klukquan. On the Taheen, fourteen miles from the lake, there are falls 60 feet in height.

Into the Taheen, thirteen miles from Klukquan, empties the Kaätl River, flowing from the northward. This latter is a small river and is not navigable for canoes.

About three miles south of Klukquan is Chilcat Lake, which extends about six miles NW. and SE.

From every indication on the banks of the Chilcat River, Lieut. Symonds concludes that during the spring and summer freshets the river never rises more than two feet above its level in September, which rarely exceeds three feet in the deepest part of the main channel. (H. N. 98–'80.)

962.—Deyea River.—The Deyea River, the outlet of Chilcoot Lake, is small and shallow and navigable only for canoes. The main village, called Tananei (Salmon Leaf), is at the junction of this river with the lake. It contains eight houses and has a population of 127 Indians. At the mouth of the river there is an Indian hunting village containing three houses.

ENE. from the mouth of the river there is a small glacier, and E. by N. from the same point is the entrance to Tyya Inlet, which extends in a northerly direction to the mouth of a river of the same name. This river is navigable for canoes only.

The northeastern side of Chilcoot Inlet is incorrectly placed on Commander Meade's chart, but want of time prevented Lieut. Symonds from obtaining sufficiently reliable data to place it correctly.

The loftiest mountain peak, just to the southward of Tyya Inlet, was found by barometric measurement to be 3,700 feet high.

There is reported to be plenty of water and good holding-ground in Tyya Inlet, to the mouth of Tyya River, but no harbor.

A mid-channel course up either Chilcat or Chilcoot Inlet shows that both are in error at least one point, as they trend that much more to the westward than shown on the charts. (H. N. 98–'80.)

CHILCAT, CHILCOOT, AND INTERIOR TRIBES.

963.—Description.—These tribes are all of the general classification group of Thlinkits.

The whole region possessed by them is called Kunana, and its inhabitants Kunaäni. One group of tribes, called Alitsch (which is their word for "people"), consists of six small tribes, viz: Tagesh (living nearest the coast), Kluhtane, Netlatsin, Tahtlin, Klukha, and Tahho.

To the northward of this group is another group. Their name for people is Tinteh, which gives the name to this group of four tribes.

There also appears to be a tribe, or group of tribes, bearing the name Tenneh.

The above information was obtained from old Chilcat and Chilcoot traders, who visit the northern inland country yearly to trade with the interior tribes.

These interior tribes, especially the Alitsch, receive their goods from the traders, who cross the divide, passing first over the mountains to the Tyya River, then ascending it to the glacial region, crossing from thence by a gap, and descending on the northern side into the bleak, soft, bush region. They barter with the Indians for their furs, and being in possession of the market values, the trade is a remarkably lucrative one to the traders. They look upon these interior tribes as tributary to them, and prevent them from visiting the coast by stories of the dangers of the route and by threats of violence.

The Northwest Trading Company rendered Lieut. Symonds valuable assistance in the prosecution of his work. It has established a trading post at Portage Bay, Chilcoot Inlet, and the Presbyterian Mission has taken steps for the immediate construction of a mission school and church near the same place. (H. N. 98–'80.)

Sailing Directions

With the exception of Rocky Patch to the Westward of Biorka Island, the approaches to the Bay are free from all dangers Entrance Island on the West side of the entrance, and Hanus Island on the East side of it mark distinctly the harbor.

On approaching them, clear Hanus Island by about 200 yards to the Westward, avoiding kelp patch which is to the Northward of that island, and head for the white sand beach, the centre of which will bear about S.S.E.

Anchor in 7 fathoms water. Avoid kelp which is on either shore of the harbor.

Holding ground good, and bay secure from all gales except perhaps those from W.N.W. to N. by E. which would blow directly into the bay.

Note: Freshwater and wood in abundance.

PART IV.

CLIMATE AND METEOROLOGY.

PART IV.

CLIMATE AND METEOROLOGY.

During the occupation of Sitka by the Russians, an observatory was established on Tapansky Island, where full and detailed records were obtained from many observations. These for a portion of the time, viz, from 1847 to 1862, have been condensed and arranged by the United States Coast Survey, and are published in the Alaska Coast Pilot, in which is given the mean and extremes of temperatures, rainfall, and proportions of various kinds of weather for twelve years.

Also, their own observations for a part of 1867, and deductions from compilation of Luther's tables for the years 1828 and 1829.

Also, those of Kotzebue for a portion of 1824-'25.

Our log-books supply additional data, which I have arranged upon a system somewhat different from that previously employed.

In all published records the days are classified as "rainy," "cloudy," "fair," &c., and the number of each, for each month, season, and year, is given.

In thus classifying, judgment has so frequently to be substituted for figures that it would be quite possible for several conscientious compilers to produce as many varying results from the original data.

The climate of Sitka is very peculiar, and there are many days during which the variations from fair to cloudy, from clear to rain, and from fog to sunshine occur so frequently that it becomes to me impossible to classify with certainty such days under either head. The impression produced by study of these tables is, that at Sitka rain prevails a very large proportion of the time, and that fogs and mist fill up nearly all of the remainder.

Our experience in the Jamestown does not justify such conclusions as shown by the meteorological tables herewith submitted, which have been prepared upon this system. On each of the first eighteen pages is given the meteorological record for a month, each day in detail; and for a portion of the data, each day has been subdivided into three parts, of eight hours each: "first part," from 1 to 8 a. m., inclusive; "middle part," 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., inclusive; "latter part," 5 p. m. to midnight, inclusive. Upon each of these pages the direction and force of wind and the general character of the weather for each eight hours is given, also the maximum, minimum, and mean of the barometer and thermometer readings and other data, as per columns.

Following these detail records are two pages, upon which the results obtained are condensed into months, seasons, and the year and half year of the record.

Adopting as a unit the 8,784 hours which composed the first year, the number of hours during which the wind was from either quadrant, and its force, the hours of calm, rain, snow, fog, overcast and blue sky with passing clouds are expressed in percentages of the unit, also of the parts of the unit, covered by the separate seasons. Thus, by simple inspection of these final pages, definite information as to the proportion of all kinds of weather can be obtained, as found during a single year.

The six months from June, 1880, to November, inclusive, have been arranged in the same manner, and furnish additional information, which, however, cannot be properly incorporated in the discussion of a year, and will therefore be referred to as furnishing evidence confirmatory or the opposite to conclusions derived from study of the data of the first year.

The weather will be first analyzed. The first result of importance obtained from our data is that the generally received ideas in regard to the preponderance of rainy and foggy weather, and of snow, hail, and overcast sky, at Sitka, are based upon facts differing greatly from ours.

From the tables published in the Coast Pilot, the following is extracted, and comparisons made with results from our own observation:

Comparison of the record obtained by the Jamestown, during 1879–'80, of the number of days in the year during which rain or snow fell, at intervals or continuously &c., with the records compiled from Lütké's table for the years 1824–'25.

Weather.		Jamestown's.
	Lütké's tables, 1824–'25.	June, 1879, to May, 1880, inclusive.	June 1880, to November, inclusive.

Rain or snow at intervals ..... days..	174	226	132
Neither ..... days..	74	125	42
	365	366	183

Classified by months and seasons, the days of the varying weather as above, from June, 1879, to November, 1880, inclusive, were as follows:

Rainy days, &c., by months.

Month.	Days of rain or snow.		Days on which neither fell.
	Continuous.	At intervals.
July	0	16	15

July	3	20	8
August	2	18	11
September	0	23	7
October	1	28	2
November	0	22	8
	24	358	167

From the tables submitted herewith the following analysis is reproduced. Arranging the various kinds of weather experienced by us during the first year, in precedence, we have:

	Per cent of time.
No. 1. Overcast, 4,265 hours	48.5
No. 2. Blue sky and clouds, 4,152 hours	47.2
No. 3. Rainy, 1,806 hours	20.5
No. 4. Haze or mist, 1,077 hours	12.2
No. 5. Snow or hail, 835 hours	9.5
No. 6. Sundry, 350 hours	4.0

Of which the entire period was covered by items 1, 2, and 6, the rain, snow, fog, &c., occurring during the hours marked "overcast," and "b. c. p.," or "b. c. m.," much of the misty weather being so marked.

The slight preponderance of "overcast" over blue sky and clouds would be reversed, had we experienced three days less of the first; therefore they are practically equal. And through the system adopted in marking the hours during which rain fell gives to the record figures which cause undoubtedly a slight over estimate to it at the expense of an under estimate of the "b. c."

In many places the log shows "b. c. p." in the weather column, indicating blue sky with clouds and passing showers, and in some of these cases the proportion of sky clear is marked at from 2 to 5 tenths. All of these hours were classified with the rainy ones; in some cases, where it was manifestly just to do so, two of them have been counted as equal to one hour of rain. Had half of them been credited to each, the b. c. would have taken precedence of c.

RAIN.

Third in precedence comes rain. Although, as above stated, the hours of rainfall were probably somewhat less than those tabulated, the percentage of time during which it fell, or during which precipitation of any kind took place, was unexpectedly small.

The total hours and amount of rain, and hours during which it snowed and hailed, were, as grouped by seasons:

	Rain.	Per cent.	Inches.	Snow.	Per cent.
	Hours.			Hours.
Spring	296	13.6	5.34	156	7.0
Summer	622	28 1	18.71	0
Autumn	588	26.9	16.28	76	3.4
Winter	300	13.7	16.01	603	27.3
Year	1,806	20.6	56.34	835	9.5

The entire percentage of the time during which precipitation took place being 2,641 hours, or 30.1 per cent.

During the subsequent six months, from June to November, 1880, inclusive, there was no snow, but a greatly increased amount of rain in hours, percentage of time, and inches, as follows:

Summer, 593 hours=26.8 per cent.=18.71 inches.

Autumn, 816 hours=36.9 per cent.=49.24 inches.

The number of days upon which rain or snow fell was, during the first year, 341; during the second half year, 141.

No rain-gauge was provided for the ship, and the records for the above rainfall were obtained by means of one constructed on board the ship, which, although not as accurate as was desirable, probably gave close approximations.

In September, 1880, an instrument was furnished, and the remarkable rainfall of the three months, September, October, and November, was measured by it; this, amounting to 49.24 inches, exceeded the average for the same season as obtained from fourteen years' observation by the Russians 18.36 inches.

The November record of rainfall and hours of calm, are, of the entire series of eighteen months, second only to that of June, 1879, as thus shown:

June, 1879. Hours of calm, 306; of rain, 298.

November, 1880. Hours of calm, 255; of rain, 291.

FOG AND MIST.

The figures show this condition of the atmosphere to be fourth of the five phases classified, but if on each hour marked "m" or "f" a description in detail had been given of the weather, its record would be greatly lowered. Generally these letters signified that the sky and mountain summits were obscured by the condensed vapor which hung over the latter, from the lower part of which there extended downward a gradually lessening mist and haze, which a hundred feet above the horizon became invisible.

I do not remember to have noticed at Sitka a single hour of fog as dense as that which prevails for a very large proportion of the summer upon our Atlantic coast, and upon the Pacific coast, further south; and it seldom happened that the islands a mile away were hidden by fog. Our log-books show frequently the apparently contradictory symbols for the same hour "b. c. f." or "b. c. m." At such times the sky overhead and to seaward was clear, that over the mountains furnished the "f" and "m."

An invisible vapor, however, always surrounded us, as is indicated by the uniform slight difference between the records of the wet and dry bulb thermometers. This difference ranged from 1° to 4° except on one or two occasions, during very bright days. The mean of the difference for the entire time was about 2°.

There existed a strange (to me) peculiarity about this moisture—it never penetrated apartments. We left our ports and windows open during all sorts of weather, and nothing ever molded or rusted. Our holds were kept sweet easily, and the mold fungus never took possession. Sheltered from direct contact by awnings, our men slept with impunity on deck, and during the hardest rains washed clothes hung under the awnings, would dry.

During the summer there were many hours of fine drizzling rain, which more nearly resembled vapor than rain, and was commonly compared to the spray from an evaporator. This rain, although continuous for hours, hardly made an impression upon our rain-gauge, as shown by the contrast of the rainfall in summer and winter of 1879–'80, as measured by time and quantity; 622 hours of rain in summer averaging but little over one-half per hour of that produced by 300 hours in winter.

SNOW.

During the winter of 1879–'80 the fall of snow was unprecedented. Ordinarily but little snow falls, and that is quickly melted and washed away by the rains.

During many preceding winters there had not been at one time on the level at Sitka over 5 or 6 inches, and that which fell on the high hills seldom exceeded 3 feet, and this was so far melted by June that prospecting and mining could then be started.

With this winter, though, things were very different. From September until well into March snow-storms were frequent, and our records show a total of 835 hours, or nearly 35 days, of snow-storm. And on the level at Sitka it remained from 3 to 4 feet deep for over three months. And on the hills the snow was so deep and so lasting that all mining operations were brought to a standstill in September, from which they did not recover until the summer of 1880.

In August, 1879, I, on a trip over the mountains, encountered snow only in sheltered ravines, where it had probably accumulated for many years; the hillsides, especially on the southern slopes, being clothed with grass and flowers, and the terraces with ripe blue berries, on which countless flocks of ptarmigan were feeding.

In August, 1880, all of these spots were covered with deep snow, and on a trip to Chilkhat I observed that the hills upon the northern part of Baranoff Island were much more covered than were those a hundred miles north. This may be attributed to the much greater evaporation which is constantly taking place from the warm waters of the Kuro Siwo, which washes Baranoff, than that arising from the cold and partially fresh (on the surface) water of Lynn Canal, into which many streams from glaciers empty. This fresh water was so distinctly separated from the salt, on which it rested, that we were able to water the steam launch at some distance from the mouth of the creeks at low tide. By carefully avoiding dipping our buckets over 4 inches we obtained fresh water; a little deeper we got brackish water; and at 6 inches depth water completely salt. The fresh surface was of a pale-green hue, and in it, with their back fins protruding, were quantities of salmon which, having spawned, had escaped thus far the ordinary fate, and stood a chance of getting again into the salt water and recuperating. They swam about in the most aimless manner, apparently blind, as they would strike against a boat with their heads instead of turning out or diving.

TEMPERATURE.

In the following table the means of temperature for the seasons, as obtained by our observations, are placed as an addenda to those obtained by the Russians and by the Coast Survey.

This abstract shows that the winter of 1879–'80 was the coldest that has been experienced in Sitka for many years, and I have been informed that for the preceding fifty years the temperature at Sitka had been below zero but four times, and that the lowest record was —4°. In January, 1880, it reached —7°, and was below zero for over fifty hours during the first part of the month.

During many winters preceding cattle have been able to obtain food throughout, and roses have been gathered from open-air gardens at Christmas, and potatoes and turnips buried a foot deep have been uninjured by frost.

THE KURO-SIWO.

The dense forests which cover the coasts of southeastern Alaska, the agricultural resources which it possesses, the myriads of creatures which crowd its waters, the fog and mist and excessive rainfall which characterize its climate, and its freedom from extremes of either heat or cold, are due to the same source, namely, the great stream of warm water which fills its channels and bathes its coasts.

It seldom happens that observations can be made on the waters of this stream at extreme differences of temperature, but the cold winter of 1879–'80 gave us the opportunity to contrast its temperature with that taken during warm weather.

Our observations taken during the spring, summer, autumn, and winter, showed that with an extreme variation of temperature of the air of 83° (from −7° to +75°) the temperature of the water alongside varied but 13°, viz, from average 40° in January to 53° in August of 1880.

During a very cold spell from January 1 to 17, 1880, a series of careful observations was made by means of thermometers in the guardhouse on shore and on board of the ship, and it was found that on shore the temperature was from 1° to 2° lower than on board, the shore instrument being protected from immediate contact with the vapor, to which that on board was exposed.

During these seventeen days the thermometer on board averaged 14°.3 above zero; that on shore was 13°. The instruments had previous to the experiment been carefully adjusted to a common standard. The extremes of low temperature were −7° and + 30°; those of the water were from 33° to 42°, with a mean of 39°.

The physical phenomena observed were very interesting. At all temperatures above 14° the rising vapor was invisible, but undoubtedly helped swell a great black bank which throughout the winter months hung steadily over the southern horizon, while overhead and in all other directions the sky was almost entirely clear, and during the period of lowest temperature entirely so, and the sun's rays in the few hours of daylight and those of the stars throughout the night were remarkably brilliant. Not a drop of rain or flake of snow fell or speck of mist visible most of the time. At 13° a change began; we could see the rising vapor, which covered the surface with about a foot deep of fog. As the temperature lowered the density and height of this coverlid increased until at —7° it came up to our rails, and presented an appearance like dry steam or smoke.

Occasional puffs of wind would cut channels through it, and send it whirling in wreaths. On the 7th January strong cold winds condensed this vapor into fine particles of snow, not coarser than No. 8 shot, and these drove before the wind in sheets, while the sky above was clear, and no snow falling on the mountains.

Our observations for surface temperature showed at times sudden changes, which at first seemed unaccountable, but by study it was found that the ice produced at low tide on the tide pools on adjacent flats became detached as the tide rose, and, floating in proximity to our instruments, affected their record.

At 1 a. m. on the 18th of January a magnificent display of aurora borealis began. An illuminated arch, behind which most beautiful pyrotechnical effects were produced, spread over the northern horizon, and continued until 4 a. m., when the black bank to the south sent upon a southeastern wind an advance guard of mist, which soon obliterated the aurora, and with a rising temperature the weather changed completely. A heavy damp snow, with flakes as large as a silver dollar, began, and was soon succeeded by very heavy rain, which, with occasional intermissions of snow and hail, lasted for six days. During this and subsequent displays of the aurora we could not detect that any influence was exerted by it upon the compass.

Twice again during the winter the advent of an aurora preceded a radical change from clear and cold to warm rainy weather.

The means of the monthly temperature of the water alongside were as follows, those of the air being repeated for ready contrast:

No observations for bottom temperature were made, we not having suitable instruments. On one occasion only the delicate thermometer belonging to the chronometer room was used, and showed at bottom 42°, the surface temperature being 40°.

ELECTRICAL PHENOMENA.

During latter part of spring, summer, and early fall, there were no electrical phenomena, the rains being entirely unaccompanied by thunder and lightning.

In October our first experience of this occurred during a very heavy hailstorm, and throughout the winter hailstorms were frequently so accompanied, the lightning ceasing as the hail turned to snow or rain. On several occasions very heavy thunder occurred without lightning. There were but few displays of aurora borealis, and they confined to the very cold period in January. Zodiacal lights prevailed throughout winter.

WINDS.—DIRECTION AND FORCE.

The tabulated records of the direction and force of the winds experienced by us do not without explanation convey a complete idea as to their points.

The records are of the winds that reached the Jamestown, and she was lying in a sheltered harbor, open only to winds from seaward, the character of which was greatly altered before reaching us, by obstructing islands, and by deflection from high land which lay to the NW., N., and NNE. of us.

From these directions only the light land breezes of summer, and strong squalls, which in winter forced their way through ravines, reached us.

Our log records 3,282 hours of wind from the NE. quadrant, and but 1,828 from the SE. quadrant; it is more than probable that an observer stationed on Biorka Island or Cape Edgecomb would have found these proportions reversed.

During the winter months it frequently happened that we were subjected to strong winds from ENE., while outside, as we could judge by every indication except cloud-drift, the wind was SE., and much stronger than we received it. No cloud-drift could be observed, as the sky was generally in such times uniformly overcast.

WINDS.—FORCE.

Our records show that during the first year the percentage of time of the various forces of wind was: Calm to gentle breezes, 80 per cent.; moderate breezes to fresh, 18, and gales occurred during less than 2 per cent., and during the stormy months of autumn and winter nearly 75 per cent. of the time the force of wind did not exceed 3 per cent., the gales occupying about 3½ per cent., almost confined to winter months.

LAND AND SEA BREEZE.

Our method of tabulating the hours of calm, &c., by thirds of the day, brought to notice the fact that, beginning in March and ending in October (by our records), a regular land and sea breeze occurs in Sitka Harbor.

Generally the day began with light airs and breezes off the land, which, during the early part, died away to calm, a light breeze springing up about noon, generally from SSE. to SSW. which was again followed by a calm of shorter duration.

In the following table these alternations of calm, light breeze, and calm are shown clearly.

During the autumn and winter these alternations became irregular, and but few hours are marked calm.

During the summer season the greater portion of the rain fell during these calm hours, the weather clearing up as the sun's rays in the morning acquired strength enough to check the condensation by the snow-clad hills of the vapor which had accumulated.

The log shows that the preponderance of calm hours in the first and latter parts of the day would be greatly increased if to them were added their proportions of the light airs and breezes.

The calm hours of the several months were as follows:

GALES.

Description of action of wind and barometer during sixteen gales experienced at Sitka.

August 14.—Easterly gale for ten hours.

Began 1 a. m.; bar. 29.75; wind E. 8; weather o. c. p. q.; 1 to 9 a. m., wind E. 8; bar. 29.75 to 29.65; weather o. c. p. q.; 10 p. m., wind SE. 7; bar. began rising and at midnight stood 29.78; wind SE. 4; weather b. c. q. First fall of mercury at 11 p. m. 13th, 29.80 to 29.75; three hours' warning.

September 12.—Moderate gale E. to SE., seven hours.

Began 3 a. m.; wind E. 7; bar. 29.82; weather o. c. q. r.; 6 a. m., wind ENE. 8; bar. 29.68; weather o. c. q. r.; 8 a. m., wind NE. 7; bar. 29.62; weather o. c. q. r.; 10 a. m., wind SE. 7; bar. 29.66; weather o. c. q.; noon, wind SSE. 4; bar. 29.72; weather b. c. q.; noon to midnight, SSE. 4 to 1; bar. 29.72 to .86; weather b. c. q. First fall of mercury at 9 p. m. 11th, from 30.12 to 30.06; six hours' warning.

October 7 and 8.—Moderate gale from ENE., seven hours, on 7th.

Began 2 p. m.; wind ENE. 5 to 8; bar. 29.42; weather o. c. q. r.; 2 to 6 p. m., wind ENE. 8; bar. fell to 29.03; weather o. c. q. r.; at 9 p. m., wind SSW. 7; bar. rose to 29.14; weather o. c. q. r.; at 10 p. m. wind SSW. 5; bar. rose to 29.20; weather o. c. q. h.; midnight, wind SE. 4; bar. steady.

Light squalls from SE. freshened at 1 a. m. to ESE. 7; bar. 29.20; weather o. c. q. r. h.; 4 a. m. SE. 8; bar. 29.20; weather o. c. q. r. h.; 6 a. m. S. by W. 8; bar. 29.23; weather o. c. q.; 8 a. m. S. by W. 8; bar. 29.32; weather o. c. q. r.; noon SSW. 8 to 5; bar. 29.44; weather o. c. q. r.; noon to midnight SW. 4 to 2; bar. 29.47 to .61; weather b. c.

The shift to SSW. on the 7th occurred with a heavy squall, and simultaneously the mercury, as if released from a weight, sprung up eleven hundredths in less than five minutes, and then rose more slowly.

On the 8th, the rise accompanying the S. by W. wind was very gradual.

The first fall of mercury preceding this blow was at 5 a. m. of 7th, from 29.84 to 29.80; nine hours warning.

October 22 and 23.—ENE. gale from 5 a. m. 22d to 3 p. m. 23d.

22d, 5 a. m. wind ESE. 7; bar. 29.90; weather o. c. q.; 7 a. m., wind E. 8; bar. 29.80; weather o. c. q.; 7 to noon, wind E. 8; bar. 28.80 to 28.75; weather o. c. p. q; noon to 4 p. m. ENE. 8; bar 29.75 to 29.69; weather o. c. p. q.; 4 p. m. to midnight NE. 8; bar. 29.60 to 29.42; weather o. c. q.

23d, midnight to 4 a. m., E. 8 to 9; bar. 29.39 to 29.23; weather c. q.; 4 to 6 a. m., E. 8 to 4; bar. 29.20 to 29.12; weather o. c. q.; 6 p. m., SE. 7 to 3; bar. 29.12; weather o. c. q.; 7 p. m., SE. 7 to 3; bar. 29.13; weather o. c. q.; to midnight SE. 6 to 3; bar. 29.13 to 29.20; weather o. c. p. s.

The first fall of mercury occurred at 1 a. m. 22d, from 30.17 to 30.07, giving thus four hours warning.

The rise of barometer, beginning with shift to SE., continued until 1 a. m. 29th, when it stood 30.65, the general character of the weather having been fair, with varying winds; the fall was slow and gradual, with but few intervals of steadying until on November 1.

November 1.—At noon, with bar. 29.60, a sharp gale from E. to NE. sprung up, during which the wind, weather. &c.; was, noon, wind E. 6; bar. 29.60; weather o. c. p. q. s. h. e.; noon to 4 E. 7 to 8; bar. 29.60 to 29.54; weather, o. c. p. q. s. h. e.; 4 to 8 NE. 8 to 5; bar. 29.54 to 29.59; weather o. c. q. d.; 8 to midnight NE. 5 to 2; bar. 29.60 to 67; weather o. c. d.

In this instance a very short and not very severe gale was preceded by a steady bar. fall for nearly sixty hours, and for the first time the barometer began to rise with the wind still at NE., and no southerly wind followed for several days, which days, however, were generally fair and pleasant, with barometer averaging above 30 inches.

November 12 and 13.—Moderate gale from ENE. to NE., twelve hours.

Began 8 p. m. 12th; wind ENE. 6; bar. 29.02; weather o. c. q. d.; 9 p. m. E. 8 to 9; bar. 28.90; weather o. c. q.; continuing till midnight, when bar. stood 28.71.

From midnight to 4 ENE. 8 to 9 in squalls, following each other with great rapidity. Bar. steadily falling to 28.56. From 4 to 8 a. m., squalls strong, 8 to 9 from NE. Bar. steady at 28.54 to 28.50, vibrating slightly; the weather being overcast, with rain. At 8 a. m. the wind moderated to 6 from NE., and the weather cleared up to b. c., the barometer rising during the forenoon watch to 28.69.

At 1 p. m., the wind was from east and light; the barometer began to again fall, and at 2 was 28.62; the wind then shifted NE., and a rise of mercury began, it standing at midnight 29.82.

The first fall of mercury preceding this gale was at 4 a. m. of 12th, sixteen hours in advance, when it fell from 29.56 to 29.36 in eight hours, and by 8 p. m. had reached 29.02.

December 10 and 11.—ENE. gale from 1 p. m. 10th to 10 a. m. 11th. From 1 to 4 p. m. 10th, wind ENE. 6 to 8; bar. 29.75 to 29.50; weather o. c. q. s.; 4 to 8, wind ENE. 8; bar. 29.50 to 29.35; weather o. c. q. s.; 8 to midnight, wind ENE. 8; bar. 29.35 to 29.31; weather o. c. q. s. p.

11*th*.—Midnight to 4 a. m., ENE. 8.; bar. 29.33 to 29.34; weather, o. c. q. s. p.; 4 to 8 a. m., ENE. 8; bar. steady; 8 to noon, ENE. 8 to 5; bar. 29.36 to 29.43; weather o. c. p. q.; noon to 4 p. m., SE. to SSE. 8 to 3; bar. 29.43 to 29.67; weather o. c. q. r.

On 13th the rise continued from 29.70 to 29.82; at noon was 29.93; at midnight the weather being fair and pleasant, but frequently overcast, and a heavy sea outside.

From midnight it began to fall, and at noon of 14th it stood 29.45.

The wind having freshened to a gale during forenoon of 14th.

December 14 and 15.—Hard gale from SE. to S. by W.

Began 1 a. m. 14th, wind SE. 6; bar. 29.63; weather o. c. q. r. h.; from 3 to 11 a. m., wind SE. 7 to 8; bar. 29.61 to 29.45; weather o. c. q. r. h.

At noon 14th, wind S. by W. 7; bar. rising, 29.46; 1 to 4 p. m., wind SSW. to SE. 7 to 6; bar. rising, 29.48 to 29.50; 4 to 8 p. m., wind SSW. to SSE. 7 to 5; bar. 29.50 to 29.54; 8 to midnight, wind SW. to NE. 5 to 3; bar. 29.54 to 29.59.

15*th*.—1 to 8 a. m., wind NNE. 3 to 8; bar. 29.60 to 29.75; weather o. c. q. s.; 8 a. m. till midnight, wind NNE. 3 to 5; bar. 29.75 to 30.09; weather b. c. q., with occasional snow.

This gale was followed by a very high barometer, with clear cold weather, for ten days, the mean of daily observation being from 30.02 to 30.29, the maximum being reached on the 18th, when, with light NE. winds and temperature of 29°, it reached 30.65.

During this period there were a number of fresh squalls from the NNE., which, by their effect upon the snow on the tops of the mountains, evidenced very strong winds, from which the land protected us.

On December 26 the force of the squalls from N. to NNE. was from 8 to 9, with bright clear cold weather, the snow on the hill tops flying in dense banks.

During these squalls the barometer rose from 29.63 at 1 a. m. to 29.70 at noon, 29.95 at midnight, when the wind shifted suddenly in a strong squall to SW., which lasted for half an hour, when the wind went back to N. and moderated rapidly, the record for 27th being: 1 a. m., wind N. 4; bar. 30.00; weather b. q.; noon, wind NE. 1; bar., 30.14; weather b. c.; midnight, wind ENE. 2; bar. 30.08; weather o. c., and on two occasions to 8.

The barometer was rather steady, the extreme ranges for the period being from 29.16 to 30.05.

On the 2d January the NE. squalls freshened to 8 at 11 p. m. and so continued till 1 p. m. of the 3d, with intervals of more moderate wind, the weather throughout being bright and clear.

These fresh squalls were preceded by a slight rise of the barometer, which, at 1 a. m. of 1st January, stood 29.18; at 1 a. m. of 2d, 29.22; at noon 2d, 29.31; at 11 p. m., when the wind freshened, 29.40.

Coincident with the first strong squall the mercury began to fall, and continued to fall slowly during the squally weather to 29.22 at noon of 2d, beginning to rise as the breeze moderated, which rise was continuous for several days until on 11th, when the weather began to grow overcast, with snow, and the barometer to fall, and continued so to do.

January.—During the first seventeen days of the month there occurred a period of low temperature, unprecedented in the meteorological history of Sitka.

The thermometer ranged from 7° to +30°, with a general mean of 14°.3; the daily means being 18°.7, 6°.4, 5°.9, 0°.5, —3°.3, —0°.3, +0°.9, 1°.6, 13°.3, 12°.1, 17°, 22°, 27°, 25°.3, 30°, 23°.1, 21°.5.

The weather was, with slight interruptions, caused by a few snow-squalls on 1st, 3d, 4th, and 11th, remarkably bright and clear.

On the 13th snow began falling with overcast sky, and from this date until the end of the month, but one day was free from snow storms.

The wind was for the first half of the month almost constantly from northward and eastward, occasionally from northward and westward; not once from the southern quadrant.

The force was generally light, but freshening occasionally to squalls of 7 throughout 12th, 13th, and 14th, as follows: 11th, 1 p. m. 30.01, midnight 29.87, weather b. c.; 13th, 1 p. m. 29.87, midnight 29.51, weather b. c.; 14th, 1 p. m. 29.25, noon 29.02, midnight 28.88, weather, first part b. c., middle part o. c. s., latter part o. c. s. Light NE. winds throughout.

January 15.—At 1 a. m., after several hours of calm which had succeeded the light NE. breeze which had prevailed for several days, a strong breeze with snow came up in a squall from SSE. shifting to SSW.; weather o. c. q. s.

This squall was followed by an hour's light air from ENE., and at 4 a. m. by sharp squall from S., and from 5 a. m. till noon the wind varied from S. to SW. in rapid succession of squalls of force 8, accompanied by hail and snow. At 10 a. m. the wind settled into a fresh SSW. gale, which continued until 6 p. m., weather overcast with snow and hail; from 6 to midnight the wind died away at south.

During this storm the barometer rose and fell as follows: 1 a. m., wind SSE. 6; bar. 28.91; weather o. c. q. s.; 4 a. m., wind S. 6; bar. 28.94; weather o. c. q. s.; 8 a. m., wind SSW. 8; bar. 29.02; weather b. c. q. p. h.; noon, wind SSW. 8; bar. 29.18; weather b. c. q. p. h.; 2 p. m., wind SSW. 8; bar. 29.16; weather b. c. q. s.; 4 p. m., wind SSW. 8; bar. 29.12; weather b. c. q. s.; 5 p. m., wind SSW. 8; bar. 29.35; weather o. c. q. h. s.; 8 p. m., wind SSW. 5; bar. 29.36; weather b. c. q. s.; 10 p. m., wind S. 5; bar. 29.40; weather o. c. s.; midnight, wind SSE. 5; bar. 29.38; weather o. c. s.

During 16*th*.—1 a. m. to noon, light, variable breezes from northward and eastward; clearing weather; bar. 29.38 to 29.30. Noon to midnight, wind light and variable, weather bright and clear, and barometer rising rapidly from 29.30 to 29.60, the rise continuing through the 17th from 29.64 to 29.91.

On the 18th of January the barometer stood at 1 a. m. at 29.84, and began falling, with wind and weather as follows: Bar., noon, 29.85—.47; wind NE. to SE. 2; weather o. c. s.; noon to midnight, 29.53—.24; wind E. to ESE. 2 to 7; weather o. c. q. r. s.

19*th*.—1 a. m. to noon, wind SE. to ENE. 1 to 5; bar. 29.35 to 29.18; weather o. c. r.; noon to midnight, wind ENE. 1, and calm; bar. 29.13 to 29.32; weather o. c. r. s.

20*th*.—1 a. m. to noon, wind ENE. 1; bar. 29.34 to 29.58; weather o. c. d.; noon to 9 p. m., wind E. 4 to 6; bar. 29.57 to 29.44; 10 p. m. to midnight, wind SE. 4; bar. 29.44 steady.

21*st*.—1 a. m. to 4 a. m. wind ENE. 4 to 6; bar. 29.45 to 29.34; weather o. c. q. d.; 4 to noon, wind ENE. 6 to 5; bar. 29.34 to 28.94; weather o. c. q. d.; noon to 6 p. m., wind E. 5 to 2; bar. 28.88 to 28.72; 7 p. m., wind SW. 8; in a sudden squall barometer jumped from 28.72 to 28.90 in a few minutes, and in less than an hour reached 29.08 at 8 p. m.; 9 p. m., 21st, wind SSW. 8; bar., 29.29; weather, o. c. q. r. s. h.; 10 p. m., 21st, wind WSW. 8; bar. 29.38; weather o. c. q. r. s. h.; midnight W. 2; bar. 29.44; weather o. c.

This furnished the third marked coincidence of a shift to SW. in a heavy squall, being accompanied by a remarkably rapid rise of the barometer.

For several subsequent days the wind alternated from southward and westward, and northward and eastward, and upon each change the barometer rose with the southwest and fell with the northeast wind.

February 11.—A moderate gale from 1 a. m. to midnight from ESE., S. to SSW., 7 to 8.

The action of the wind, barometer, &c., was: 1 a. m., 11th, wind ESE. 5; bar. 29.61; weather o. c. q. s.; 4 a. m., wind SE. 7; bar. 29.33; weather o. c. q. s.; 7 a. m., wind SE. 8; bar. 29.23; weather o. c. q. s.; 8 a. m., wind S. 7; bar. 29.23; weather o. c. q. s.; 10 a. m., wind SSW. 7; bar. 29.26; weather b. c. q. s. h.; noon, wind SSW. 7 to 8; bar. 29.28; weather, b. c. q.; noon to midnight, wind SSW. 8 to 7; bar. 29.28; weather b. c. q. h. s.

12*th*.—Midnight to 4 a. m., wind SSW. 7 to 6; bar. 29.34 to 29.36.

The first fall of mercury preceding this blow was observed at 9 p. m. or 10, from 29.82 to 29.78; four hours' warning.

March 4.—A fresh blow with squalls of 7 to 8 from ENE. began at 2 a. m. and lasted but three hours; in this case our warning by barometer preceded the squalls by twenty-two hours, it beginning to fall at 4 a. m. of the 3d from 29.78 to 29.68 at noon, 29.61 at 4 p. m., 29.55 at 8 p. m., 29.48 at midnight. At 2 a. m., beginning of severe squalls, 29.43; at 5 a. m., ending of same, 29.39, where it remained steady, with overcast weather and light NE. winds, until 2 p. m., when the wind shifted ESE. light, weather cleared, and barometer began rising.

March 18 and 19.—A moderate gale from SE. with squalls of 8 from E. to S., barometer rising steadily throughout, as follows:

18th, 10 p. m., wind E. 7; bar. 29.77; weather o. c. q. r.; midnight, wind SE. 8; bar. 29.77; weather o. c. q. r.

19th, 2 a. m., wind S. 7 to 8; bar. 29.80; weather o. c. q. r. s.; 4 a. m., wind S. 7 to 5; bar. 29.80; weather o. c. q. r. s. h. l.; noon, wind SE. 6; bar. 29.88; weather b. c. p. q. h.; noon to midnight, SE. 7 to 3.; bar. 29.88 to 30.01; weather o. c. q. h. r.

The first fall of barometer preceding occurred at 1 p. m., from 30.05 to 30.02; weather, b. c.; wind ESE. 4.

April 5 and 6.—April 5 from 6 to 10 a. m., fresh NE. squalls, 7 to 8, preceded and followed by fresh breeze from same direction; weather o. c. q.; barometer began falling at 8. p. m., 4 from 29.81 to 29.77 at midnight; and at 6. a. m., 29.71; at 10, 29.69, and began rising, till at midnight it stood 29.80; weather o. c. p. q.

April 6, barometer began falling at 1 a. m., from 29.80 to 29.78; wind ENE. 5. At 10 a. m. wind NE. 7; bar. 29.59; weather o. c. q. r.; noon, wind NE. 8; bar. 29.53; weather o. c. q. r.; 1 and 2 p. m., wind E. 9; bar. 29.54 to 29.60; weather o. c. q. r.; 4 p. m., wind ESE. 5; bar. 29.70; weather b. c. q., p. h.; 8 p. m., wind ESE. 8; bar. 29.77; weather b. c. q.; 8 to midnight; wind ESE. 8 to 3; bar. 29.77 to 29.85; weather b. c. q.

September 5, 1880.—Gale from ENE. to ESE. force 8 and 9, began: 4 a. m. wind ENE. 8, bar. 29.57; weather o. c. p. q. r.; 8 a. m. wind NE. 8; bar. 29.39; weather o. c. p. q. r.; 9 to 11 a. m., wind ENE. 8; bar. 29.37 to 2.31; weather o. c. p. q. r.; noon, wind SSE. 9; bar. 29.37; weather o. c. p. q. r.; noon to 4 p. m., wind ESE. 9; bar. 29.43 to 29.61; weather o. c. p. q. r.; 4 to 8 p. m., wind ESE. 8 to 2; bar. 29.61 to 29.75; weather o. c. q.; 8 to noon calm; bar. 29.75, steady; weather o. c.

Found fall of mercury at 4 p. m. 4th from 30.03 to 30.01; at midnight 29.87.

October 10 and 11.—SE. gale from 6 p. m. 10th to 2 a. m. 11th; wind, barometer, &c., as follows:

10th, 6 p. m. SE. 7; bar. 29.75; weather o. c. q. r.; 7 to midnight SE. 8; bar. 29.75 to 29.57; weather o. c. q. r.

11th, midnight to 2 a. m. SE. 9; bar. 29.55 to 29.52; weather o. c. q. r.; 2 to 4 a. m. S. 7 to 5; bar. 29.53 to 29.60; weather o. c. q. r.; 4 to noon S. to

SSW. 5 to 6; bar. 29.60 to 29.93; noon to mid. SSW. 5 to 3; bar. 29.94 to 30.05; weather o. c. p. q.

On the 26th of October, 1880, Sitka was visited by a hurricane, which was accompanied by heavy shocks of earthquake.

This storm is so fully described in an able report by Lieut. F. M. Symonds that I do not consider it desirable to attempt to add to or take away from his account, which was submitted by Commander Glass to the Navy Department.

Tradition records but one storm at all approaching this in violence, namely, that occurring on October 26 and 27, 1867, during which the U. S. S. Ossipee narrowly escaped foundering, and many vessels in the harbor were driven on shore.

In connection with the report of Lieutenant Symonds, the history of the storm in 1867, as obtained from the log-books of the Ossipee, which was outside, and of the Resaca, which was anchored inside, will have increased value, and it is herewith submitted, also a copy of Lieutenant Symonds' report, and of the log-books of the Jamestown, and Resaca, and Ossipee.

REPORT OF LIEUT. F. M. SYMONDS.

U. S. S. JAMESTOWN, 3D RATE,
Sitka, Alaska, October 27, 1880.

SIR: I respectfully transmit to you the following report and accompanying chart, descriptive of the hurricane experienced by us October 26, 1880, at this place.

We can trace the first indications of it back to the 23d instant, at 6 p. m., at which time the barometer stood at 29.65, and the wind was from the east (p. c.). From this time the oscillations of the barometer with its steady downward tendency, the wind, and the clouds, the general direction of which was to northward, indicated distinctly the existence of an unusual and powerful atmospheric disturbance.

The barometer fell steadily to 29.10 October 25, 5 a. m., then rose to 29.46 at 2 p. m. on the same day, from which hour it fell steadily and rapidly, bringing the full strength of the storm upon us in about fifteen hours.

From 1 to 3 a. m. October 26, the mean rate of fall per hour of the barometer was .15, in considering which, the center of the hurricane can be placed at 50 miles distant at 1 a. m. The wind at that hour was (see chart) from the east (p. c.). It continued to blow steadily, but with increased force, from the east (p. c.) until 9.15 a. m., when it shifted to ENE. (p. c.), veering from that point to NE. (p. c.) during the hour. Force of wind at this time 9 to 11, blowing in heavy squalls.

The next shift was at 11.15 a. m. to SE. (p. c.) placing the center SW. (p. c.) from us. At this time the storm was at its extreme height, blowing with a force from 11 to 12 in heavy and violent squalls lasting from five to eight minutes, heeling the ship from 8 to 10 degrees, and raising in this closely land-locked anchorage a rough sea. Up to this time there had been a light fall of rain, but with the sudden and violent shifts of wind at 11.15 a. m. came snow, and shortly after hail. The temperature which had stood at 53° F. fell suddenly to 44° F. with this shift of wind, and continued to fall until 1 p.m., when it stood at 38° F. At meridian the wind was still from S E. (p. c.), but had slowly decreased in violence, and the squalls were less heavy and frequent.

It continued from that direction with decreasing force until 6 p. m., when it shifted to SW. (p. c.), which gave a bearing of NW. (p. c.) for its center. From that time until midnight, when its force was but 4, it veered from SSE. (p. c.) to SW. (p. c).

From 4 to 10 p. m. we experienced snow and hail squalls, accompanied by vivid flashes of lightning and heavy peals of thunder.

At 1.35 p. m. there were two shocks of an earthquake; the first of at least eight seconds duration, and the second, two or three. On the 27th, 6 a. m., a light shock was felt; also two in the evening at $9^h\ 10^m$ and at $11^h\ 15^m$. The one at $9^h\ 10^m$ p. m. was quite strong, but of very short duration.

TRACK.

At 1 a. m., 26th, the barometric changes place the center of storm 50 miles from the ship, and bearing south (p. c.), the wind then being from the east (p. c.). At 9.15 a. m. the strength of wind increased to from 10 to 11, which would place the center about 11 miles distant from us. This is comparatively estimated with the assumed position of center at $11^h\ 15^m$ a. m., when the wind hauled to SE. (p. c.), and the force increased to from 11 to 12. As at 11.15 a. m. the strength of the wind and its sudden and violent veering would place us within the limit of the hurricane's most powerful efforts, and as at 10.35 a. m. the barometer reached its lowest point, 28.20, we can safely assume our then position to be a point removed not more than 6 miles from the center. I assume here a calm belt with a diameter of 10 miles.

The rate of travel of the storm, deduced from positions at 9.15 a. m. and 11.15 a. m., is 5½ miles an hour.

The wind, as before stated, veering from SSE. (p. c.) to SW. (p. c.), from 4 p. m. to midnight, would give a general direction for the track, after clearing the coast line, of WNW. (p. c.). (See chart.)

The great number of sea-fowls in our immediate vicinity, noticeable when the hurricane was at its height, 11.15 a. m., would indicate our close proximity at that time to its center.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The track of the storm from the position of the center from 1 a. m. to that at 9.15 a. m. (see chart), would appear to require a gradual shift of wind from the east (p. c.), which was its direction at 4 a. m., when the center bore south (p. c.), to its position at 9.15 a. m., when the center bore SSE. (p. c.); but as the storm approached a continuous stretch of high land from the open sea, the right hand semi-circle, which infringed directly on the high lands, was naturally flattened by the same, thereby producing a wind steady in direction from the east (p. c.) from the oval-shaped side thus flattened.

This same action would account for the shifting of the wind from ENE. (p. c.) to NE. (p. c.), and vice versa from 9h to 10h a. m.

It would appear from the rapid and regular rate of rise of the barometer after the shift of wind to SE. (p. c.), that the storm increased its rate of motion, and that such is the fact I think can be easily demonstrated. We cannot help but assume the correctness of the flattening process resulting from the storm infringing on the high lands; and we have strong evidence for so doing, not only from the fact that the wind failed to shift regularly in compliance with the usual laws of revolving storms, but from the fact that the wind did not extend to a great altitude, which was made apparent the following day by the well-defined line of destruction of the trees on the mountain sides, which line was less than one thousand feet in elevation. Again, a flag placed by some of our officers on "Popoff Peak" remained intact, which in itself was proof conclusive.

Now, let the wind be banked up, as it were, against the mountain sides when the center of storm was at the position at 9.15 a. m. (see chart), and its course was to the north (p. c.); it, in its endeavor to pursue this course, could only work over in a northward and westward direction to its position at 11.15 a. m. (see chart); to which position the wind would have gradually veered to SE. (p. c.) had not the mountain intervened.

This obstacle to its gradual veering permitted us to receive the first shift from the SE. (p. c.) after the storm center left its position at 9.15 a. m. (see chart), which shift, acting with the compressed air or banked wind of the right-hand semicircle, must have been a sufficient re-enforcement to force the storm to the southward and westward. The compressed air, or banked wind, of semicircle had a tendency to force the center south (p. c.), and the SE. (p. c.) shift, acting in conjunction with this, to the westward of south; and as a resultant it takes a SW. (p. c.) course, shifting close around to the southward and eastward side of Mount Edgecomb until clear of it, then trending more to the westward as the resultant of the two forces would naturally urge it, after its departure from the position at 11.15 a. m., had its altitude permitted its passing directly over Mount Edgecomb.

EARTHQUAKES.

It may be important data for the scientific consideration of the relations which exist (if any do) between earthquakes and hurricanes, to mention that at the time of the occurrence of the shocks, 1.30 p. m., the center, from my deductions, must have been in close proximity to Mount Edgecomb, an extinct volcano; and that the general direction from which the first shock appeared to approach, was south (p. c.).

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. M. SYMONDS,
Lieutenant and Navigator.

Commander HENRY GLASS, U. S. N.,
Commanding.

NOTE.—I was informed by Mr. Ivan Petroff, who was at Kodiak during this storm, that it began at that place on the evening of the 26th October, and lasted for three days, the strength of the gale being from NE. He did not observe the shifting of the wind.

The schooner Oonalaka arrived at Kodiak during the gale completely incrusted with ice.

HURRICANE OF OCTOBER 26, 27, AND 28, 1867.

On the 26th of October, 1867, the U. S. S. Ossipee, Capt. Geo. F. Emmons, left Sitka Harbor at 5 p. m., and at 11 p. m. was clear of the island, steering SE. by E. As she opened the passages she found a SE. breeze 5 to 6, and a "heavy sea rolling into the bay; weather squally with rain." During the same four hours, the Resaca, lying in Sitka Harbor, had light airs and calms.

The weather for preceding twenty hours having been partially overcast, with showers of rain and hail, and light SE. winds, barometer rising slowly from 30.14 to 30.20 at noon, and then falling slowly to 30.10 at midnight.

October 27.—The Ossipee, running by her log on a SE. by E. course, with a steadily increasing SE. wind, encountered during the afternoon a hurricane, of which the direction was ESE., force from 10 to 12, she having logged by 7 p. m. 54 miles on SE. by E. course.

Several reasons indicate that in course and distance thus logged there is an error.

First, the improbability of a ship making from 2½ to 3 knots almost dead to windward, against a wind marked 9 and 10, and a sea so heavy as to be characterized in remarks as "terrific," and coming aboard at all points, doing great damage and nearly foundering the ship.

In the remarks is noted, "8 to meridian, heavy sea carried away port-head and wheel rope."

Meridian to 4 p. m., strong wind, SE. with sea from same direction.

4 to 6 p. m., laboring heavily; heavy sea running; shipping a great many seas; carried away port-quarter boat.

6 to 8 p. m., carried away both bow boats and starboard waist-boat, and hatch-battens; ship laboring heavily; shipping seas from all points; fire-room floor covered and fires nearly extinguished; magazine flooded; water a foot deep on wardroom floor; and during all of this period the columns show "course SE. by E. 2½ knots."

The remarks justify the inference that the columns err, for "at 10 a. m. the ship was hauled off shore to SW. by S., and fore and main try-sails set," which were subsequently replaced as they blew away by the fore and aft storm sails, which remained on her throughout, a sure proof that she could not have been going within a point of the wind.

It is therefore fair to presume that from 10 a. m. till 7 p. m. she was running to the southward and westward, and that the four to six points of leeway recorded, about canceled the run of 54 miles. At 7 p. m. the wind shifted to ESE., and for five hours blew with a force of 12; sea very confused and heavy; the starboard waist-boat was carried away, and the starboard launch lifted by a sea, and thrown inboard, the davits being broken off. The sea which effected this must have come from the northward and westward, and thus is indicated that the center at this hour, 11.30 p. m., had passed very close to the ship.

Unfortunately, the record of the barometer is given only each two hours, and if correctly observed and recorded, it shows a remarkably slight disturbance of the mercury.

The probable position of the ship when the center of the storm passed was about 25 miles SW. of Biorka Island, or about 40 miles from Sitka Harbor. The log of the U. S. S. Resaca, lying at anchor in the harbor, furnishes therefor valuable data.

The action of the barometers on the two vessels was, on the 27th—

28*th*.—Just after midnight the wind with the Ossipee hauled SE. by S. 10, and barometer steadied, and at 2 a. m. to SSW. 10 and barometer began rising, the rise continuing with clearing weather and sea moderating; wind falling to 9 and 8.

With the Resaca, the barometer continued to fall, the wind slightly increasing until 4 a. m.

At 1 a. m. the Ossipee hauled up to SSE., and ran on this course 22 miles till 10 a. m., the remarks being as follows:

Until 4 a. m. deck flooded, all pumps working on bilge and not gaining, shipping a great many seas, ship laboring heavily, very heavy sea, heavy gale from southeast to south-southwest. At 10 she steered ENE. 12 miles, made the land, and then NNW. for 28 miles, when she reached the outer line of reefs, and at 7.45 p. m. anchored in Sitka Harbor.

The log shows that from midnight to 8 a. m. a very heavy sea prevailed, many coming on board, and although all of the pumps were kept going, they did not keep the ship free.

The discrepancies which are found in the log are undoubtedly due to the fact that every person capable of keeping a correct history of this storm had plenty of other work to attend to.

The log of the Resaca shows that during the 28th the effect of the gale in the harbor was very serious. At 4 a. m. the wind shifted in a terrific squall to southeast, the Russian steamer Constantine and ship Tzarovitch were driven ashore on Japonsky Island, and others dragged and collided. Working parties from the Resaca and Jamestown were kept busy saving the fleet, among which were the steamer John L. Stephens, the Russian vessels mentioned, and the Mameluke. The Stephens steamed through into the eastern harbor, where the holding ground is good, and rode out the gale safely with steam up.

This storm was beyond doubt a cyclone, and in many respects its action was similar to that of the one experienced by the Jamestown in 1880, and doubtless its course was almost identical.

The description of the hurricane of October, 1880, as given by Lieutenant Symonds covers nearly all of the points observed in the other gales recorded; they having evidently the same course and general characteristics, lacking, however, in force. A repetition of the descriptions is therefore unnecessary. I have studied his thoroughly and can suggest no alterations.

The data of the several storms reduced to the two elements of importance, namely, shift of wind, duration and strength from each point, and action of barometer were as follows:

The action of the wind and of the barometer of the Jamestown was so influenced by local causes that it is difficult to establish any laws governing the Sitka storms. Our warning by barometer fall was very uncertain, for in some cases a short moderate gale was preceded by a long-continued and marked fall; at other times we had but short warning of much heavier storms.

Of the seventeen storms described, fourteen were undoubtedly revolving gales, which passed up the coast to the westward of us. The wind shifted to the right in all cases, but in several cases (September 12, October 22, November 1, September 5, and October 26, of '67–'80), the first changes were to the left. I think that these indicate a course of center more to the eastward than shown on the track chart of gale of October 26, 1880, the bearing from Sitka being SSW., S., SE., SW., WSW., in many cases, which indicates that the impingement against the high land and consequent change of course occurs frequently considerably to the southward of Sitka, at times in the neighborhood of Whale Bay, 30 miles SSE.; they then follow the coast line to NNW., until sharply curved by the high land just north and east of the harbor, which produces an obstruction running east and west, and at the eastward trending to the south. The storm thus embayed seeks exit around the promontory of Cape Edgecomb, which is a high mountain, and, as soon as clear of it, travels rapidly up into the Gulf of Alaska, and when the center bears WNW. from Sitka this high land proves a barrier, and the pressure on the barometer is suddenly released with a SSW. squall. The correct history of one of these storms, when obtained by the automatic instruments of the Signal-Service station, lately established at Sitka, will furnish a standard by which the errors incident to the substitution of judgment, which undoubtedly affect more or less the records which I have collected, can be eliminated, and they thus increase in value.

In twelve of the fifteen storms the barometer began to rise with wind from SW. to SE. quadrants, the number being evenly divided. But with one exception the heaviest storms broke up with the SW. winds, frequently with heavy squalls which, fortunately for the ship, were the final ones, for striking us as they did on our broadside, they completely settled the question as to whether well backed anchor, could drag, for snapping 85-inch hawsers, which made fast to bowlders, backed our heaviest stream anchors, which in time with long scopes backed our SE. bower, we dragged all and narrowly escaped going ashore abreast of the Indian ranche.

In conclusion, I would call attention to the fact that this collation establishes—

First. That the rainfall at Sitka has by previously obtained records either been overrated, or a remarkable exception to the usual weather occurred during our stay.

Second. That the region cannot be considered a stormy one, inasmuch as by far the greater proportion of our time the wind ranged from calm to gentle breezes.

Third. That the proportion of time during which the weather is fairly pleasant is fully equal to that in which it is unpleasant.

Fourth. That a regular land and sea breeze occurs almost daily throughout the late spring and summer.

Fifth. That most of the winter storms are revolving gales.

Sixth. That the barometer, although it generally gives warning of approaching gales, yet that its action cannot be altogether depended upon, as the pressure of the atmosphere is so much affected by local causes that frequently extreme depression may occur with no following storm to account for it.

Seventh. That a storm from southeast to northeast, although it may in Sitka Harbor prove but of moderate force, very frequently indicates that, but a short distance to the southward, a heavy revolving storm is passing, the approach of which has been checked by the high land to the southward and eastward. In such cases, however, there is always an unmistakable warning which, if heeded, will prevent a ship leaving the harbor, however fair may be the barometrical indications and moderate the weather. This warning is the surf upon the outlying chains of reefs and islands.

Upon numbers of occasions, when in the harbor we were experiencing pleasant weather and light winds, the surface of Vitzkari reef has been hidden by the immense breakers which dashed over it; and within five miles of the ship, at the entrance of the middle channel, Surf Rock proves a most valuable indicator, for a disturbance from anywhere to the southward makes of it an apparently lofty fountain.

During such heavy seas it is very seldom that enough penetrates the harbor to endanger a small boat, and our steam launches were safely moored near the ship and rode comfortably through the worst.

The track of the storm of the 26th October, 1880, accompanied the report of Lieutenant Symonds, and is reproduced on this accompanying section of chart of region. It probably represents as closely as I would be able to plot them the general tracks of our other storms. The barometrical action and shifts of wind are so affected by local causes in Sitka Harbor that they cannot be depended upon as furnishing positive data.

The other storms differed from that of 26th October, in that their centers did not approach so closely before veering to the westward.

It seems probable that during those of September 12th, October 22d, November 12th, 1879, and September 6th, 1880, the centers struck the coast considerably to the southward, traveled parallel to it for a short distance, and then diverged to the westward, passing well to south of Biorka Island, about as depicted in "general track," their centers having borne well to the southeast before turning.

*Seven days' observations.

PART V.

GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE COUNTRY, AND OF ITS NATIVES AND RESOURCES.

PART 2.

GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE COUNTRY.

DISTRIBUTION OF ITS INHABITANTS, AND THEIR MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

The Territory of Alaska has an area of nearly 600,000 square miles, and its name is said to be derived from the Indian words Alas shak (great land).

It extends from latitude 71° 27′ north, where at Point Barrow is the northernmost limit of the United States, to 51° 12′, the southernmost of the Aleutian Islands. And from longitude 130° 02′ W. to Cape Wrangell, the westernmost point of the United States, in longitude 187° 34′ W., covering thus 20° of latitude and 57° of longitude.

Over 20,000 square miles of its area are comprised in two great archipelagoes—the Aleutian, which stretches over nearly to Asia, beginning at the southern point of Alaska, and the Alexander, which, beginning with Tchitchagoff Island, whose northern shore is on Cross Sound between latitudes 58° and 59° north, extends to the southward, merging into the Archipelago, lying off the coast of British Columbia from three to four degrees of latitude, and of a width of from 50 to 70 miles.

I would respectfully submit a few facts in regard to this country, its natives, and their distribution, and in regard to their customs, manners, superstitions, and laws, which I have not as yet described.

The natives of Alaska are, by the latest authorities, estimated at over 30,000. These are divided into three great classes, viz: the Innuits of the Yukon District, the Aleutians, and the Sitkans. These classes are subdivided into tribes and families.

The natives of the Alexander Archipelago are all of the Sitkan tribe, and are called Chilkhats, Chilkhoots, Hoonahs, Auks, Takus, Stahkines, Kootznoos, Kakes, &c., according to the location of their settlements.

The subdivision into families is a subordinate one in some respects, but important in others. Each family has its badge or totem, rude carvings of which adorn the door posts, and tablets within the houses. Among the totems are the whale, eagle, bear, wolf, sea-otter, frog, porpoise, and seal. The family badge has some of the properties of caste marks in Oriental nations, and others widely different, resembling more those of family crests and coats of arms among civilized nations.

Members of the same family may not intermarry, and in marrying into other families the two totems are combined, and that of the woman given precedence. It is quite common to see tablets belonging to the older families, on which, surmounting and blended into each other, are several of the above totems.

Alaska, as I have said, is inhabited by from 20,000 to 30,000 natives. The influence of the Jamestown has not been felt by over 5,000 of these natives, nor have we had any opportunity to come in contact with any except this small percentage, who dwell in villages on the islands of the Alexander Archipelago, and upon the adjacent coast.

Kodiak and the Aleutian Islands were separated from us by, at the nearest point, 500 miles of sea, and it is doubtful if the Creoles, Aleuts, Innuits, and Esquimaux, who are natives of these western lands, even knew of our presence at Sitka, unless through information obtained via San Francisco, by the agents of the various commercial companies who are located at every advantageous point, and who administer to the natives such government as their principals indicate, and in so doing receive the assistance of the officials of the Greek Church, which holds strong sway over all of its members, of whom it is estimated there are 10,000 in the Territory, divided into eight "parishes," viz: Nushegak, (Bristol Bay), Oonalashka, St. Michael, Bybiloff, Ounga, Kadiak, Kenai, and Sitka.

The country which, fronting upon the Gulf of Alaska, separates these two extremes of the Territory, is mostly unexplored, but from what is known it is safe to consider it mountainous and sterile, except where rivers exist; and, except a few small villages on the coast, it is probably uninhabited.

A government which could extend its authority from either of these extremes, Kodiak or Sitka, would need to be of great magnitude, and its edicts would require a naval force to carry into effect. Should a system of government be inaugurated which would extend to the inhabitants of this Territory the right of suffrage, by establishing "voting precincts," it would be necessary that all elections should be held long in advance of those in the east, and preferably in the summer season, so that the government steamer, which would be compelled to visit the many islands to collect the votes, might do so in comparative safety, and in each of such precincts the vote would, in all probability, be such as Russia through the official of the Greek Church should direct, for very few of the "ten thousand" of our new citizens have any knowledge whatever of the laws or customs of their new country, and not one in a hundred speaks, not one in five hundred can read or write, our language.

My knowledge of these Western Alaskans is but limited, and I can give the foregoing but as an opinion.

I will speak more positively as to the peculiarities of those with whom I am familiar.

The native tribes with whom we came in contact, and over whom we exercised considerable influence, were the Sitkas, Stahkines, Kootznoos, Hoonahs, Chilkats, and Chilkoots, and, through our policemen, who were connected with them, the Auks and Yak-e-tats to some extent.

These tribes live in villages consisting of from ten to sixty well-built wooden houses, the timbers of which are from 10 to 20 inches thick, and hewed by axes. These villages are always situated on the coast, at the base of hills which shelter them, and generally upon level land produced by the morains of glaciers, through which streams of fresh snow water empty into the sea, and which in season are crowded with salmon, which constitute the principal portion of their food, they having, however, in addition, many resources, among which are halibut, herring, and herring-roe, and numberless other fish, venison, mountain sheep, seals, various oils, and a great variety of berries, also several species of edible fungi and sea weeds; and several of the tribes, notably the Kootznoos, Hoonahs, and Sitkas, cultivate potatoes, kale, and turnips.

OCCUPATIONS.

Early in spring a large portion of each tribe hunt the sea-otter and seal for six weeks, during which period the otters gather on the breeding ground; then follows a season of halibut fishing and gathering of herring-roe. The former are very abundant and of most excellent quality, and the same may be said of cod-fish and herring. The roe of the latter is collected upon bushes which are planted at low-water mark, and which in one or two tides are encrusted.

The salmon season begins in June and extends until September. Five species visit the Alaska streams, all of which are most excellent except the garbosha or hump-back, which appears in September, at which time, however, the best of all, the Kisutch also begin to run, and are caught in the same net.

In fall there is another short season of sea-otter hunting, the pups having grown large enough to have commercial value.

After this season the men employ themselves securing their winter supply of fuel; and more or less of them start out on visiting and trading trips to other villages.

As traders these Indians are shrewd and quite reliable; and they understand well the value of monopoly, which they maintain by preventing the Sticks and other tribes who inhabit the interior from coming to the coast with their merchandise, and by so doing become posted as to the real value of the same, and as to the advantages from dealing with the white traders, without the interference of middle men.

The interior Indians bring to market a large proportion of the furs obtained from land animals and the horns and skins of mountain sheep; from the former the Coast Indians make spoons and other utensils and charms.

The Coast Indians procure the otter and seal skins, also considerable seal and whale oil, which is worth from 25 to 50 cents per gallon, and some walrus ivory and oil.

Numbers of the Indians are quite expert carpenters, and the logs of which their houses are built are hewn very smooth. They make excellent canoes, which they dig and burn out from spruce and yellow cedar trees. Some of these canoes will carry 50 people, and in them they make long voyages.

There are among them skillful wood and stone carvers, and silversmiths, who make very pretty bracelets, rings, and nose ornaments, which are worn by all of the women who can afford them.

When employed by the whites, if hoo-che-noo be kept away from them, they become very valuable laborers, boatmen, and packers, so much so that, lacking their cordial co-operation, Alaska's resources will remain undeveloped.

CLOTHING.

The natural Indian costume of a blanket is fast being supplanted by ordinary clothing of laboring whites, and they exchange their products for nearly any and every article usually found in a country village store.

CURRENCY.

The blanket, worth $3, is the unit of currency; and various furs, canoes, &c., up to slaves, are included at fixed prices in their reckonings. Owing to the danger from moths and thieves, stout china camphor chests are in demand among them, and a rich man will have several of them stowed full.

ARMS.

All have knives, which they use on slight provocation among themselves when drunk. They have very few fire-arms, and such as they have are mostly old-fashioned flint-lock muskets, which are preferred to percussion-locks, inasmuch as flints are plentiful and caps scarce. Very few use the bow and arrow, or spear, except in securing seals, sea-otters, &c. With their muskets they generally use buckshot, very seldom balls.

ORIGIN.

All of the tribes mentioned except the Kootznoos seem to have sprung from a common origin; they speak the same language and have similar customs and superstitions, and from these the Kootznoos differ so slightly that a stranger cannot detect the difference. Their legend is that originally all lived in the Chilkat country; that there came great floods of ice and water, and the country grew too poor to support them, and that many emigrated south; that the Auks are outcasts from the Hoonah tribes, and the Kakes from the Sitkas, and both tribes deserve to be still so considered; that the Kootznoos came from over the sea, and the Hydahs, who live on Vancouver's Island, from the south. I have imbibed an impression, which, however, I could not obtain much evidence to support, that all of the tribes except the Hydahs are Oriental. In every respect they resemble the Ainos of Japan far more than they do our North American Indians—and that the Kootznoos are of Chinese origin; while the Hydahs, who are superior to all of the others in intelligence and skill in various handicrafts, are the descendants of the boat-loads whom Cortez drove out of Mexico, and who vanished to the north.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

There are exhibited in these, several points in which these Indians differ from those on our plains and resemble to considerable extent the Japanese peasants. Of these, a prominent one is the social position of the women, who, as wives, are in all respects of equal importance with the husbands, and are very faithful to their husbands—a failure in this respect being punished by death at the hands of the wronged husband—while, as single women, professional prostitution does not injure the standing. As with the middle class of Japan, polygamy is but little practiced, although it is not unlawful, and among the richer and older chiefs it is a quite common practice to take a second young wife, who generally accompanies her husband on his travels, the old wife remaining at home to care for the household. Heirship is determined by the degree of relationship through mothers, and a nephew, if the son of a sister of a chief, becomes his successor instead of his own son; a brother's son is not so treated.

In one case which came to my notice this custom produced a curious complication. The policeman "Dick," who was sent to Chilkat in the fall of 1879, was the son of a sister of Klotz-Kutch, the chief, and thus had claims to succeed him, which were contested by the son of Klotz-Kutch, who is a disorderly fellow, and through his mother related to the Chilkoots; and it was he who committed the murder which caused the Chilkhat and Chilkoot war. Klotz-Kutch favored "Dick's" claims, and when the latter returned to Sitka in spring he brought with him, as his wife, his own aunt, who had previously occupied that relationship to Klotz-Kutch, who had transferred her to "Dick," and thus strengthened his claim to the allegiance of the Chilkoots. Dick, with a Chilkat aunt and a Chilkoot aunt-wife, was thus placed ahead of the son, who possessed but one of these valuable relations, and that in a minor degree.

The women dress well and live in comparative idleness, the earnings of the men being freely bestowed upon them in the shape of fine blankets (profusely decorated with pearl shirt buttons) and jewelry of silver, of which they wear quantities. A well-dressed woman carries from three to seven (always an odd number) of silver bangles on each arm, which resemble those worn by young ladies in this city, a large nose ring, three or four pairs of ear-rings, and fingers and thumbs full of heavy rings. The men share with the women the duty of caring for the children, and it is a quite common sight to see a group, of which the women are stretched full length on their stomachs and elbows, chewing a native gum, and gossiping, while their babies are being carried and held by the men.

This pleasant condition of affairs ceases, however, when the effects of hoo-che-noo become manifest. Then the first object upon whom the drunken man fixes for outrage is the wife; it seems probable that little grudges which have been accumulating then influence him. These attacks, however, are not made with impunity. In every household there is among the culinary outfit a large, sharp knife used to open salmon, halibut, &c.; this is generally in the woman's possession. and, as she has generally drank her full share of the liquor, she does not hesitate to use it skillfully and savagely; and the medical officer of the Jamestown has been often called upon to repair very badly cut Siwashes; and a very large proportion of the Indian rows we have had to deal with have originated with drunken women.

SANITARY CONDITION.

As a class the Siwash is perhaps as filthy a member of the human race as exists. The uniformly cool, damp climate deters them from bathing, and they do not seem to have any liking for cleanliness in any form. Their persons, houses, villages, and clothing are always dirty, and their habits in many respects disgusting.

But this condition does not seem to be one which is without remedy. It is at its worst in Sitka, where, through contact with low whites, the Indians have imbibed, as do all wild tribes, all of the bad and but little of the good.

The northern tribes, who have as yet been but slightly in contact with the whites, are the superiors in these respects, and the Hoonah village is kept quite clean. Those of the Sitka Indians whom we employed soon developed a great fondness for dress, and became as tidy and neat as any of our crew; and an effort which we made to improve the sanitary condition by draining the village met with much favor.

A natural consequence of their mode of living is a great mortality. I am not able to give exact figures, but I think I am safe in saying that the death rate among the Sitka Indians during our stay was at least ten per cent., the causes of death being primarily hoo-che-noo and venereal troubles, inflammatory rheumatism, and pulmonary diseases, to which stabbing added quite a number.

Two deaths occurred by self-inflicted wounds, in pursuance of a custom which somewhat resembles the duello code of Japan. In that country a man challenges another and then kills himself, committing the hari-kari; his enemy is bound in honor to follow suit.

In Alaska an injured Indian shoots himself after publicly announcing the cause of the act, and the enemy is bound either to follow the example or pay the full value of the deceased to his family.

BURIAL CEREMONIES.

Cremation is the only method which gives to a dead Indian any chance for future happiness. A pile of wood is built back of the house, on which the corpse, which has been hoisted out of the house through a hole near the roof made for the purpose, is laid, covered with a blanket and a little of his finery or arms, and the pile is burned; during the cremation a chant is kept up by a hired band of masked men, who keep time by beating on a board with staffs. If a murderer has been killed by the friends of the victim, and the "families" of both are satisfied, the burning of the two bodies under one blanket settles the trouble.

RELIGION.

I could not find out much about this. They believe in a hereafter, and in quantities of spirits, good and evil; they do not take much pains to propitiate the good, but will go to any length to avoid coming in conflict with the latter. These spirits, the evil ones, enter into men and women, and, according to their natures, make them crazy, or witches, or sick.

The native doctors, or shamans, are supposed to know all of these spirits and to possess considerable control over them, which they exercise when paid so to do. There is nothing in their religion which is so well founded that the task of substituting a better one is hopeless. A convert to Christianity does not lose, but rather gains, respect among his people.

One of them, "Chilkoot Jack," had been accused by a miner of having stolen his watch. Investigation proved to me that the man had lost his watch while drunk, and the Indian had found it. While examining witnesses, another Indian testifying, said: "Chilkhoot Jack not steal, sir, nor lie; he's a convert." They appreciate the advantages of education and good conduct; and when the Indian school was established it furnished me with a powerful weapon. I had but to threaten a man or woman that his or her child should not be allowed to attend the school, to at once secure promises, generally kept, of amendment.

Since my return from Alaska, I have learned that a village is in course of construction at Portage Bay, where this summer the Chilkats and Chilkoots will live, to permit their children to be taught in the school established by the Northwest Trading Company at that place.

SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT.

There is no one authority supreme over the various tribes. Each is independent of all others, with most of which it has ties through intermarriage. Each tribe is composed of several "families," a "family" embracing all who are related by blood, primarily through mothers.

Each "family" is ruled by a leader, who obtains the position either through descent, wealth, or force of character—frequently all, and most always the first two combined. A council of these leaders, presided over by the head of the most powerful family, governs the tribe and regulates its intercourse with others.

The authority of the chief is generally recognized by his "family," and that of the council by the entire tribe, but revolts and mutinies occur now and then, frequently produced by ambition on the part of young fellows to usurp authority. A fight is the natural result, as the revolt has probably been inaugurated at a pot-a-latch, when hoo-che-noo flows freely, and courage accumulated.

At a war pot-a-latch the women are present, and, by chanting improvised songs, stimulate the men to warlike deeds, and arms are distributed by the leaders, who have generally a reserve supply.

At a peace pot-a-latch presents of furs, blankets, &c., are distributed, the first evening by one of the parties to the other, which is reciprocated on the next evening. Always among these presents are blankets cut into strips, which are worn by the women. As drunkenness prevails at all of these feasts, it seldom happens that new troubles do not arise from them. The finishing of a house, the arrival of guests, a funeral, the departure of an expedition, are all occasions for friendly pot-a-latches. The reporting by a member of a family of injury or insult by those of another causes a war feast.

The chiefs, as a general thing, exert their influence to have injuries and threatened wars settled by payments, inasmuch as their share of such payments is a large one, pleasant to receive, and if it has to be paid the chief receives honor and respect in proportion to the amount he contributes, and generally recompenses himself by subsequent assessments upon the persons whose misconduct has created the trouble.

It was impossible to break up the system of pot-a-latches, for the decisions there arrived at were respected by all; therefore I endeavored to bend them to our needs, for I have been called upon on many occasions, and in a great many ways not described, to administer justice among them and exercise control. In so doing my work at first was to a certain extent experimental, and as I experimented I came in contact with more or less obstacles, due to their laws, customs, and superstitions, which caused their ideas of right to differ more or less widely from my own.

Such laws as they had I found were based upon their conceptions of justice, and as far as I could do so I made it a point to recognize those laws and strengthen their leaders in causing them to be obeyed. I thus received their alliance, and the task of governing many was reduced to that of advising a few chiefs who added their strength to ours.

Having but the Naval Regulations and the United States Statutes as my guides, I adapted the former to the situation as far as possible, and made each chief an executive officer, treating the mass as though they were the ship's company. These executives were the leading policemen and were furnished with efficient help by the subordinate policemen and the Jamestown's crew of Indians.

I have already stated that, throughout my stay at Sitka, I had never cause to doubt the propriety of my having appointed these policemen and employed the Indian crew. Daily contact with our officers, marines, and sailors, by all of whom they were well liked, did much to civilize quite a number of the Sitka Indians; and of these, some of the more influential were useful as leaven among the other tribes; all whom we employed becoming strong advocates for the white men.

Rules which were made for the government of the Indians were modified at once if found to be in any way defective. For instance: In my first essays at punishing offenders, I endeavored to make the Indians understand that such punishment as was administered was final and complete; that when the man came out of prison the affair was settled. I soon learned, however, that although the Indians apparently yielded to this rule, actually they did not, and that subsequently the offender was called upon to submit to Indian law and to make good any damage he had done. This was kept secret from me, but was revealed by a man through whom I was kept well posted as to all movements.

On the next occasion when punishment was necessary, I, without letting them know that I was aware of their irregular proceedings, informed the assembled Indians that I had made up my mind that, in future, offenses should be first punished by me for the insult to the white government involved in the offense, and then they were at liberty to settle the difference between the two families at a pow-wow, the conclusions of which were to be reported to me, and, if approved by me, carried into effect.

This action was highly approved by all of the Indians, and from that date they did not hesitate to solicit our interference in settling their disputes, a custom which spread to considerable distance throughout the Archipelago.

Except for trifling offenses, involving but slight punishment, often a simple lecture, all accused Indians were given a fair trial in open court, which the friends received permission to attend, and where they were permitted to question witnesses and make defense, and no man was punished unless he was proved clearly guilty.

During the period of my command I had occasion to inflict about forty punishments on Indians. Of these, not one was for any offense committed against whites, and but few of the offenses punished were committed by sober men. Drunkenness was at the bottom of nearly all of the troubles, which consisted generally in fighting among themselves, in which fights knives were freely used.

The whole secret of our success with the Indians has been given in the last few lines. They received fair play, crimes were punished, good conduct rewarded, and they were taught—and some received the teaching—that the white government was theirs as well as ours and the man-of-war their friend, and not, as they had been led to believe, their enemy.

I am fully convinced, however, that I had a strong ally in their natural cowardice and fear of the white government. The system of retaliation, or "getting even," causes them to do most of their fighting at night, inasmuch as each individual who, even in battle, inflicts injury, will be held responsible for the same personally or through his family, by all of the family of the injured man.

This fear of future consequences deters them from open fighting, and reduces all their wars to secret assassinations, except when through liquor they become imprudent.

They have great fear of rifles in white hands, and upon one occasion I could not get an Indian in Sitka to make an attempt to recover a boat, stolen from the collector by deserters from the Jamestown, although a large reward was offered, because, as they said, "the white men have got a rifle with them."

Before they learned that we had not come to harm them, the approach of one of our steam launches to one of their villages caused an immediate evacuation, all of the inhabitants making for the woods, and had we been on a hostile errand, we would have encountered only empty houses.

I attribute this wholesome fear of the whites to the thorough punishment given by Lieutenant-Commander Meade to the Kake Indians in 1869, the story of which, greatly exaggerated, has spread throughout the country, and has produced most beneficial results.

All of the other tribes dislike the Kakes and admit the justice of the punishment, and are disposed to be very careful to never themselves incur similar treatment.

I believe that but for the sharp lesson then given them, the peace policy which we adopted would not have proved the success it did. Our omission to punish would have been attributed to weakness, and with the best of them it is necessary that a sense of fear should cause respect, to be combined with other reasons for treating the whites as friends.

Having been well punished, they were for a long time sulky, but now advance half-way to meet the hand of reconciliation offered to them by a power they know and fear.

I found it advisable to avoid, as much as possible, coming in conflict with their superstitions. I will give an instance of a case where I was compelled to yield.

A crazy Indian committed several offenses in the white settlement, running about the streets naked, and entering houses. The policemen were appealed to by citizens, but refused to take any steps to check him, and complaint was made to me. I first ordered them to arrest the man and have him kept in the charge of his own family in the Indian ranch. This they declined to do, except upon certain conditions to which I could not accede. As this was the first and only case in which they failed to do their duty, I gave it a careful examination, and found that the refusal was caused by fear of becoming crazy themselves should they molest the insane man, unless they were permitted to treat him Indian fashion, which consisted in binding and torturing the man until he revealed the name of the animal which had entered into him. He was then to be kept bound until one of these animals could be killed and its tongue given him to eat, when he would recover his senses. While thus bound, and they hunting for the animal, no harm would come to them.

I believe had I pressed these men to obey my orders they would have refused, and one such refusal would have done great damage to our influence.

Finding that only the molesting parties would be subject to the evil influence, I took the risk myself, and caused the man to be secured by our guard. This was the only time that it was called upon to arrest an Indian.

There is another custom among them against which I could make no headway, and therefore did not try, viz: that of owning slaves, which is quite common. As the possession of these slaves gave much importance to the owners—an importance which it was thought best to foster—this problem was for civil law to solve.

In all of my interviews, the Indians expressed a desire for a government which would restrain bad whites from injuring them, and punish such as were guilty, which desire I always met by telling them that the reason there was no government was the small number of white people who lived in Alaska; and that the reasons why more whites did not come was because of the policy of the Indians in preventing white men from penetrating into the interior, and the reputation which the Indians had obtained of being enemies of the whites, and dangerous; that the first step toward securing the benefit of a government should be a complete change in these respects; and that, when assured of this, many whites would come and build saw-mills and salmon canneries, and start fisheries and mines, all of which would furnish employment to the Indians, and then, when the Washington Government became convinced that the country deserved it, laws and a government would be provided for it.

The Indians believed what I told them, and the hopes thus engendered have induced them to act as I advised.

The question as to the form of government which will prove best adapted to meet the requirements of the Territory of Alaska is one upon which I do not feel authorized to express an opinion; but my experience, gained by dealing with and controlling the Indian portion of the inhabitants, justifies me in saying that, in any code of laws which may be devised, their manners, laws, superstitions, and rights of property should be taken into consideration. With these recognized as far as practicable, the Indians will prove of the greatest value in all attempts to develop the resources of the country. As lumbermen, wood-choppers, packers, fishermen, hunters, miners, and in various coarser trades, they are needed and will work willingly.

A failure to recognize their rights will cause a discontent which will seriously impede the adoption of the law. The villages have cost them a great deal of money; some of the houses at Sitka provide shelter for fifty or sixty persons, and have cost two or three thousand dollars—not altogether in labor and material, but through their custom of celebrating the completion of a house by a house-warming pat-a-latch, when the chief pays for the honor of having it considered to be his house by distributing valuable presents. Sitka Jack, it is reported, gave away five hundred blankets, worth $1,500, upon taking possession of his house, which was built by co-operation of all of the members of his family, all of whom retain the right to live in it.

Another point is the advisability that this government should recognize the power and influence which are held by the chiefs, and secure their faithful alliance and powerful influence by giving to them positions of trust and authority over their own people, and by paying to them fair wages for their services as "policemen," a position considered by them as one full of honor, and eagerly sought for by the greatest chiefs among them.

Such government should have power to advance the welfare and civilization of the Indians, by internal improvements which would give them employment, for which most all are anxious, and by fostering schools for their children.

And, first of all, it should have full power to suppress the traffic in molasses, and to punish on the spot, even to death, any offender, white or Indian, according to his or her deserts.

This civil government should have full power to protect the Indians from ill-treatment by lawless whites, and it will need the support of an armed steamer to protect innocent whites from attacks of Indians who have been injured by others of the white race.

An occasional visit by this steamer to every village in the Archipelago would be productive of much good, and if, as in the English service, her commanding officer could be authorized to act as a justice of the peace, the security and subsequent development of Alaska will be insured.

The present condition and needs of Alaska, as far as they are known, should not be the standard by which the plan of government should be measured, for as soon as the protection of law is extended over this country it will begin to grow, and a government of sufficient scope and power to meet its present needs would soon be outgrown and cramped, if, as I believe to be a certainty in the near future, the natural resources of the country draw to it a population.

The Aleutian Islands and that portion of the Territory west of Kodiak are now subjected to a government which meets with all of its requirements.

At every station of the Alaska Commercial Company, its agent, assisted by the leading official of the Greek Church, has full control, and self-interest alone induces a wise and paternal government.

Nearly all of the people derive their subsistence from this company, and become its pensioners when otherwise unprovided for.

If I may be permitted to use metaphor in an official document, I would say that Southeast Alaska, where in the future our citizens will make their homes, stands in a position analogous to that of a homeless, neglected, hungry street child, possessed of qualities, still latent, which indicate a possible healthy growth and development, if suitable protection, shelter, nourishment, and training be given it.

If those who would adopt and foster that child should provide it with clothing, fitting closely its present emaciated frame, the time would soon come when, through the change in its condition, its growth would necessitate, first, a letting out, and then new garments. It would not, however, be advisable to provide at the outset a suit which would fit a full-grown man.

A simple but strong government, with power of life and death on the spot, would soon pay for itself. Such a government would need, during its earlier period, the support of an armed steamer, and the time of those serving on this steamer could be most profitably employed in surveying the many inlets, straits, and harbors of this slightly-known region.

Through the hydrographic work performed by Commander Meade and officers of the Saginaw and of the Jamestown, by aid of the steam launches and the hired steamer Favorite, the charts of the Archipelago, which ceased to be accurate at the boundary line between the United States and British Columbia, have been so completely remodeled that one laid aside as unreliable has again been issued, and is now the most correct chart of the region.

The work performed by the Jamestown is shown by the hydrographic notices and charts which accompany this report.

The time is coming, and perhaps is not far distant, when Alaska will be needed.

From a military point of view, her grand total of sheltered bays and harbors would prove as valuable to an enemy in event of war with a maritime power as they would be detrimental to the interests of our Pacific coast.

With the mills at Seattle, Gamble, and other places on Puget Sound, consuming the adjacent forests at the rate of hundreds of thousands of feet per day, and perhaps as many falling to the forest fires which spring from the woodmen's pipes and camp-fires, and every summer cover the surface of the sound with so dense a smoke that navigation becomes hazardous, the time is coming when the increased distance from the coast will so advance the cost that a search elsewhere will be made, and the great forests of Alaska will supply the demand.

Canneries and fisheries and oil refineries will follow up the saw-mills, and utilize the untold wealth now lying dormant.

And a country where, in every direction, auriferous and silver-bearing ores are found on the surface, and which is known to be rich in other minerals, mining enterprises will spring up, and employment will be given to the thousands who will seek the land.

But capital will not come where there is no law to protect it—where the punishment of arson or for breach of contract is but public opinion or lynch law. And until capital can come and be safe, Alaska must wait.

RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY.

I would respectfully submit a few facts in regard to the resources of Alaska, many of which are obtained by my own observation, and others from sources in which I have confidence.

The works of Dall, Whymper, Petroff, and of the Coast Survey supply vastly more important details, and I shall but attempt to confirm their assertions. As far as they have as yet been developed, the resources take precedence in value as follows: Furs, fish, timber, minerals. A number of companies, mostly of San Francisco merchants, have been organized, and are now engaged in developing these resources. Among these companies, those of the greatest importance are:

DEALERS IN FUR AND GENERAL MERCHANDISE.

The Alaska Commercial Company, president Gen. John F. Miller; the Western Fur Company, incorporated in 1879, with capital of $500,000; the Northwest Trading Company, of Portland, Oreg., president Paul Schulze, incorporated in 1879, capital, $50,000.

DEALERS IN FISH, &C.

Pacific Fish Company, incorporated 1879; the Northwest Packing and Trading Company, incorporated in 1878; cannery at Klawok, Messrs. Cutting & Co.; salmon cannery at Sitka.

MINING COMPANIES.

The Alaska Gold and Silver Mining Company, of Portland, Oreg., capital $300,000, and several others, of which I am not sure that the stock represents capital.

FURS.

Up to the present date the most valuable resource of Alaska has been the fur-bearing animals which abound in its woods and waters.

The forests furnish a great variety of valuable skins, and from the waters alone the interest at 4 per cent. on the purchase money has been returned to the government by a single company, derived from a single animal, the

FUR SEAL.

This animal is gregarious, and strongly addicted to remaining as long as possible in a favored locality; there are several of these localities of slight, one of great importance.

On the shores of Saint Paul and Saint George, the two principal islands of the Pribyloff Group, which, lying in latitude 56° north and longitude 170° west, off the southern mouth of Behring Strait, are below the line of floating ice of the sea; these animals resort for breeding purposes in such immense herds that the land becomes invisible. They are so inert and stupid that were they not protected in some thorough manner a very short period would be required to exterminate them, for a schooner's crew, composed of the very inefficient sailors who generally predominate on board of a whaler, could land and with clubs quickly kill a schooner load and frighten away a hundred times as many.

Fortunately for the seals, and for the government which now derives a handsome revenue from them, these islands are controlled by business men and the killing done upon business principles.

The Alaska Commercial Company hold the lease of these islands for twenty years from May 1, 1870. They kill 100,000 yearly, and pay to the government a royalty of $2 on each skin, which, with other payments by them, amounts to nearly $300,000 yearly. The agents of the company have adopted such systems of slaughter that the herd does not become alarmed, and in selecting as they do the young bulls the effect of this rate of killing is not detrimental, and the chances are that at the termination of their lease there will be as many as when they began.

It is estimated that in addition to the seals killed on the Pribyloffs about 10,000 are obtained yearly from other localities. As these skins are worth from $5 to $15 each before dressing, it is probable that at least $1,000,000 worth are obtained yearly.

SEA OTTERS.

Unlike the fur seal these animals are not gregarious, and although they have favorite breeding grounds, these, like the otters themselves, are distributed over a vast area, so that "herds" of sea otter are not found, and the pursuit of them becomes a matter of difficult hunting.

The otters are found in all parts of Behring Sea, from our own coast to Asia, throughout the Gulf of Alaska, and as far south as the western shores of Vancouver's Island, where are profitable hunting grounds. They are very shy and are generally seen in pairs, and while approaching certain rocky islets, generally in the vicinity of bays, into which fresh-water rivers empty and entice the salmon, upon which they feed.

Familiar with these favorite spots, companies of canoes assemble in their vicinity and stretch out a long distance seaward on the lookout for otters, each canoe carrying ten men, two in the bow armed, formerly with spears, lately, very frequently with muskets. A pair of otters making their way in from sea are discovered, surrounded, and chased till killed; the first dive of the hunted animal will last perhaps half an hour, if badly frightened, and during this time it has by instinct struck out to sea. If, however, when it comes up, the canoes are outside of it, its fate is sealed, for its power to remain under has been exhausted, differing in this from the seal. Sometimes it is clubbed to death, at others speared or shot; care being taken to avoid hitting anything but the head.

The Indians have a code of laws by which the ownership of the skin of an animal captured by the united efforts of many can be decided.

The wide distribution of the animal and hunting-grounds makes it very difficult to obtain any very exact data as to the number of these animals killed yearly, and this difficulty is increased by the fact that the Indians lie about their luck. If they have got a g od place, they keep others from coming to hunt on it by giving it a bad name, and send inquirers to unprofitable grounds by exaggerated stories. I found out from a person who had the confidence of the chief of the Hoonahs, Kah-hoo-dosak, that his tribe killed 127 during the spring of 1880. And they had yet the prospect of the fall hunting, which it was hoped and expected would bring it up to 200. As these skins are worth from $50 to $200 each, say $75, the six or eight hundred people who constitute the Hoonah tribe are kept very comfortable from this resource alone, and are certainly not blamable; if other resources failing, they go to war with the English Indians, who molest them by shooting their otters, a practice which produces great damage, in addition to that of killing more or less otters, as the shy animals soon leave a ground where they discover that they are molested, and the report of the fire-arms frightens them. This peculiarity has caused certain places, once favorite resorts, to become comparatively deserted; for instance, on our westernmost island, Atton, only seven otters were killed by its natives, who, thus deprived of almost their only source of revenue, would be reduced to starvation but for the benevolence of the Alaska Commercial Company, which allows to each family what may be considered in the light of a pension, unless through a revival of the resources the natives become enabled to pay off the debts they are steadily increasing.

The skin of a sea otter is from 4 to 6 feet long, the fur long and dark, with many white hairs, and it is, except the royal ermine and the best of Russian sable, the most valuable of all furs, the silver fox coming next in Alaska furs.

Although the otter does not enjoy the protection afforded to the fur seal by the wise laws, based upon business principles, by prudent business men, it is to a certain extent protected by its own wariness, and was by the United States laws, which made it unlawful for any but natives of Alaska, afforded still more, but in 1878 the honorable Secretary of the Treasury decided that white men, lawfully married to native women and intending to remain in the Territory, should enjoy also these privileges. The consequence of this decision has been a great increase in the number of marriages, little if any change in the domestic relations or numbers of half-breed children, and a great slaughter of otters which white men, who have gone through the wedding ceremony, hunt with rifles to such extent that their early extermination is probable, and I received information that parties of white men in San Francisco had fitted out vessels, and pretending to confine their hunting to a distance of over three miles from the shore, had in reality killed the otters wherever found.

Although it is made the duty of "the officers of the United States, who may be in that locality (that of well-known otter-hunting grounds), to take all proper measures to enforce all the pains and penalties of the law against persons found guilty of a violation thereof," it was not in my power to take any steps to prevent these practices until the opportunity of hiring the steamer Favorite for the purpose presented itself, which was taken advantage of by the special agent of the Treasury Department, Major Morris, and myself, as detailed in this report, upon the occasion of English Indians fitted out by English white men trespassing upon Alaska grounds.

Estimates as to the number of sea otters killed annually and their value differ greatly.

I have obtained from "reliable parties" all the way from 1,000 skins, worth at least $50,000, to 5,000, at an average of $70 each, or $350,000. When fur dealers thus differ it is hard for an outsider to form a correct judgment, but from my knowledge as to the production of the Alexander Archipelago, I should be inclined to accept the smaller estimate as nearest to the truth. Mr. Ivan Petroff places the annual value at $120,000.

OTHER FURS.

The following list embraces the names of the other fur-bearing animals and the value of their pelts, as quoted in the San Francisco markets:

	Value.
Silver fox	$15 00 to $60 00
Cross fox	1 00 to 5 00
Red fox	1 00 to 5 00
Marten fox (called Alaska sable)	2 00 to 10 00
Mink fox	25 to 1 00
Land otter fox	2 00 to 5 00
Beaver fox	2 00 to 4 00
Fishers	2 00 to 6 00
Wolf	1 00 to 3 00
Lynx	2 00 to 4 00
Black bear	3 00 to 10 00
Brown bear	1 00 to 6 00
Cinnamon bear	3 00 to 10 00

The annual value of the above furs produced is placed by Mr. Petroff at $100,000.

FISH.

The waters of Alaska, both fresh and salt, teem with fish valuable as food, oil producers, and fertilizers.

The fresh-water streams are, from June until September, crowded with salmon of excellent quality, and trout; of the former, five, and of the latter as many, species. Salmon, too, throng the bays and inlets, and on every bank in Behring Sea, the Gulf of Alaska, and throughout the inland waters codfish or halibut, according to the nature of the bottom, are abundant, and in their seasons immense schools of herring, smelt, capelin, lancefish, and dogfish, visit the bays.

Of shell-fish, there are clams, cockles, mussels, abelones, and pectens. Good and abundant edible crabs, too, are plentiful.

Whales of several species are abundant in Chatham Straits and Cross Sound, and I have seen twenty in a day.

CODFISH.

In commercial value, this fish at present takes precedence. Three companies, giving employment to about twenty vessels, control the bulk of this trade; these are the Pacific Fish Company (Thomas W. McCollum & Co.), Messrs. Lynde and Hough, and N. Bichard & Co., all of San Francisco.

The principal fishing grounds are off the Fox and Shumagin Islands (near the southern extreme of Alaska peninsula). In this vicinity there are a number of productive banks, with depth of water varying from 30 to 60 fathoms. And there is a bank in the eastern part of Behring Sea, which has an area of over 18,000 square miles, on which 50 fathoms is the deepest water that has been found, and on every portion of which codfish are abundant. The cod is found as far north as latitude 58° to 59°, which is about the southern limit of the floating ice in Behring Sea, and as far south as the straits of Fuca, in latitude 48° 20′ north, and they are abundant in the Okhotsk Sea, and on several banks in the Alexander Archipelago, which as yet have been but slightly developed.

STATISTICS.

The first vessel which visited the western banks exclusively for cod fishing left San Francisco in 1864, and her trip was made to the coast of Kamtschatka and the Saghalien banks. Her voyage occupied over five months, and her catch was 120 tons. In 1865, three vessels visited the same locality, and brought home 523 tons. In 1866 and 1867, the Shumagin banks were first fished, and the entire fleet the first year consisted of 18 vessels, and the second 23; the catch in 1866 was 1,614 tons, and in 1867, 2,164 tons. Making a total of 4,421 tons taken in five years by an average of 11 vessels, or about 400 tons per vessel.

No record was kept of the catch of 1868. In 1869, it is reported as 1,934 tons, value $200,000. And during 1878 and 1879, the catch is reported as about 2,000 tons yearly.

I have no data as to the intervening years, but assuming, as I believe I may do, with slight chance of error, that the amount and value of catch in the three years given, 1869, 1878, and 1879, represent fair averages, there has been brought from these banks, fish representing a value of $2,200,000. In addition to the banks named, cod have been caught at Nootka, Sitka, Lituya Bay, Yak-etat Bay, Cook's Inlet, and throughout the Aleutian Islands.

It is believed that two varieties of this fish are obtained, those from the Shumagin banks being superior to those of the Labrador and Kamtschatka banks, which is important, inasmuch as the round trip to and from the Shumagins is but comparatively a short one.

In 1879 the schooner Alfred Adams made three round trips from San Francisco in 43, 45, and 40 days, bringing on each occasion 50,000 pounds of fish. Such work as this is, however, exceptional. Bait is abundant and easily obtainable near the Shumagins; shell-fish, such as clams, cockles, and mussels are abundant and good, and in Southeast Alaska salmon is still more so; and during the spring and early summer herring are.

SALMON.

The resources of Alaska in this article are comparatively inexhaustible. Every stream, from the great Yukan, emptying into the southern part of Norton Sound and navigable for a thousand miles from its mouth, to little brooks flowing from melting glaciers and snow banks, is in its season crowded with salmon, ascending for purposes of reproduction; and during these seasons the adjacent bays and sea are alive with the salmon, whose presence is made manifest by the leaping in their pursuit of immense herds of porpoises.

Were it not for the provision of nature, which causes death to occur soon after spawning to a very large proportion, the seas in this vicinity might become unnavigable. I have experienced great difficulty in wading certain small streams, through the quantity of salmon which it was necessary for me press my way through. And in some of these streams, had the water been suddenly withdrawn and the fish left dead, I could have walked three or four miles without touching my feet to anything but salmon, and I could not have avoided such touching in walking two yards. The banks of these streams, and the adjacent moraines through which they flow, are literally covered with the remains of those that have died.

The salmon of Alaska have not been scientificaliy classified, but from my own observation, and information obtained from the superintendent of the salmon cannery at Old Sitka, and from Russian fishermen, I believe that there are at least five distinct varieties making their appearance at different periods. Early in June a very fine salmon, the quinnat, called by the Russians chowchou, begins to run, the kikoff succeeds, and is followed in July by the crassena rebia (red-fleshed), and in August the garbosha (humpbacked) begins to run, and lasts about five weeks, during which time the kischutch, or black-mouthed, have their season.

The garbosha is a coarse fish, and unfit for canning, but it is the favorite of the Indians, who lay up great quantities of it for winter's use. The kischutch is considered the best table fish, and is held at a much higher price. An ordinary 10 or 15-pound salmon is in Sitka worth about as many cents; a kischutch of 10 pounds cannot be bought for less than two bits (25 cents).

STATISTICS.

There are two establishments in Southeastern Alaska where salmon are canned; one about 9 miles west from Sitka in Hunter's Bay, or Old Sitka, owned by the Messrs. Cutting & Co., of San Francisco, and one at Klowock, or Prince of Wales, owned by Messrs. Sisson, Wallace & Co. Both of these establishments depend to a great extent upon Indian labor, each employing, however, a few white men. The Indians have proved intelligent and expert, in all of the various processes from the catching of the fish to the making cans and canning; they are paid $1 each per day, and were it not for their being addicted to hoo-che-noo, would give entire satisfaction

One Indian, whom I knew, bought from the Sitka cannery a net and outfit for $200, for which he was given credit, and, during the summer of 1879, with five employés of his family, he paid for the outfit and obtained a credit of $400 for fish delivered.

Two of Messrs. Cutting's boats, manned by two whites and ten Indians, whose combined wages amounted to $16 per day, caught and delivered thirteen tons of marketable salmon, and they probably gave away to the old men and women, who in their canoes follow the fishermen, fully a ton of fish which were unsuitable, or, as expressed, "had begun to dog."

Although it has been decided by experts that the "dog-salmon" is a separate and distinct species, the fishermen at Sitka use that term to describe the condition of any or all of the species which have begun to suffer the deteriorating change due to (in their belief) contact with fresh water. Such fish are not canned, and the trained eye of an expert selects unerringly from the struggling mass such as present indications not perceptible to a non-expert.

If the opinion of these fishermen is correct, it would seem to follow that the salmon of Alaska, caught in the salt water of the ocean, are superior to those obtained at the fisheries on the Columbia and other rivers where they are taken in brackish water. There are several establishments in the western part of Alaska where salmon are put up in barrels. The Alaska Commercial Company, the Western Fur Company, and the American Russian Company put up large quantities at Kadish and Cook's Inlet, and private individuals also participate in this business.

In February, 1879, a Mr. Hirsch, of San Francisco, chartered a schooner and proceeded on a salmon-fishing trip to Kadiak. He returned in August with 300 barrels, caught by his crew aided by natives.

The pack of the two canneries in Southeast Alaska were, for 1878, 8,500 cases; for 1879, 12,000 cases; the amount packed in British Columbia, Oregon, and all sources, being, in 1878, 629,000 cases; 1879, 527,000 cases, of which the export was, in—1878.	1879.

	Cases.	Cases.
Atlantic States	87,000	141,300
Europe	455,000	320,000
Australia	49,000	14,690
China and elsewhere	5,240	3,760
	596,240	479,810

The falling off being due to a partial failure of the season of 1879 in Puget Sound, British Columbia, &c. The amount packed at Muskeeto (the principal station in Puget Sound) being 25,000 cases, as against 105,000 cases in 1878, and at Frazer River 1,300 cases, as against 7,000 cases in 1878.

The cannery of Messrs. Cutting & Co., at Old Sitka, was not operated in the summer of 1880, the reasons assigned being the difficulty experienced in getting the new article, Alaska salmon, into the market some weeks after the canneries further south, whose products had established a reputation, had fairly supplied the demand; and secondly to the high price of tin and freight to Sitka.

It was hoped that the action of Congress in regard to a bill then pending, which would allow a drawback on tin, would be such as to reduce its price. A bill to this effect was passed in March, 1880, and the result will be undoubtedly beneficial.

It is possible that the entire export of salmon from Alaska does not now exceed in value $50,000 yearly, but there is no reason why, if a market can be found for this fish the business should not be increased many fold. The supply is inexhaustible.

HALIBUT.

But little endeavor to develop the halibut fisheries of Alaska has been made, but from my own personal observation I am convinced that in certain parts of Alaska these fish are so very abundant, and of such excellent quality, that in time they will rate high among the resources of the country.

In the neighborhood of Sitka they can be caught in from 5 to 20 fathoms water, weighing from 40 to 500 pounds, and they form an important portion of the food of the Indians, who smoke and dry the flesh. The Indians sold them to us at about half a cent a pound, and the sailors found no difficulty in catching large numbers. I learned of but one attempt to make them an article of commerce. In July, 1880, the schooner General Miller, of San Francisco, fishing with trawl lines, and using salmon for bait, and in the vicinity of Sitka and Biorka Island, filled up in about six weeks.

The halibut and cod fisheries of Alaska are much easier of access and more free from danger than those on our eastern coast, and the labor and expense involved are much less.

Nearly all of the fishing banks are near to safe harbors, where the schooners can lie and send out the dories, but a short distance to the grounds. And generally the time from Saturday night until Monday morning is spent in comparative comfort and rest.

During 1879 there did not occur a loss of a life at any of the Alaska fisheries. During the same year thirteen vessels of the Gloucester fleet were lost, and with them 143 lives.

TIMBER.

The information I have obtained by personal observation as to the timber resources of Alaska is but slight, my duties having confined me to the vicinity of Sitka, and to short cruises among the islands of the Alexander Archipelago. I have, however, seen sufficient to authorize my acceptance of the accounts given by others, from which I shall make extracts.

From my own knowledge I am able to say that the shores of both sides of the strait, running almost continuously from Chilkhat, in latitude north to Cape Fox, the southern extreme of the coast line, called Lynn Canal, Chatham Strait, &c., the shores on each side of Peril Straits and Cross Sound, of the large islands Prince of Wales, Kon, Baranoff, Chicagoff, Kruzoff, and the entire surface of smaller islands, are covered with a dense growth, consisting principally of spruce, hemlock, and yellow cedar.

Parties from the Jamestown have penetrated the islands of Baranoff, Kruzoff, and Chicagoff several miles by following up river beds in ravines, and have not come to the end of dense forests, principally of the spruce and hemlock, with more or less of the yellow cedar, which is not as plentiful as the others. Many logs of spruce and hemlock, containing from 3,000 to 4,000 feet of lumber, were cut by the miners during the winter of 1879–'80, and delivered at Sitka for about $20 each, they having been procured within a few miles. This growth of timber covers the sides of the mountains to a height of about 4,000 feet in the vicinity of Sitka, which height diminishes as we go to the northward, or far enough into the interior to lose somewhat the effect of the warm vapors from the Kurosiwo.

After passing the latitude of the eastern entrance of Cross Sound' 57° 50′, the timber line becomes reduced to less than 1,500 feet of altitude, the low temperature produced by the many glaciers affecting the growth, which is also diminished by the smaller amount of evaporation and precipitation, the surface of the sea being covered in summer with a layer of pea-green, fresh, and brackish water, the former coming from the glaciers in many little rivers, and the latter by its admixture with the salt water; and at the head of Lynn Canal, at the Syyä Inlet, I judged its height to be about 1,000 feet; this in latitude 59° 15′ N.; and in this locality, although the growth of the trees was not so great as further south, I saw many from the water, and so close to it that gravity and proximity would eliminate the necessity of manual labor to launch them, which were over three feet in diameter; also quantities of birch and alders of small size.

Spruce ranks first as to abundance, yellow cedar first as to value of timber; hemlock is in quantity between the two, and in value third; a position however, which will be reversed if tanneries ever are erected in Alaska, and "bark" becomes a demand.

SPRUCE. (Abies menzesu.)

This tree is known locally as Sitka pine, and resembles very much the spruce or fir obtained in Puget Sound and called the "Oregon pine."

Along the coast and edges of waterways it grows to a height of from 100 to nearly 200 feet, and it excites sensations of wonder to see these immense trees, from 4 to 6 feet in diameter, growing upright on sides of mountains so precipitous that it would hardly seem possible for a sapling to find support. Back from the coast line, where the forests are dense and the sunlight seldom penetrates, the trees are smaller and grow close together in abundance. The dimensions I have given are extreme. I would estimate the average dimensions of these trees at about 100 feet height and less than 3 in diameter.

The wood resembles white pine, and is strong, tough, and durable, and would undoubtedly prove fully as valuable for ship-building as the "Oregon pine." The Indians use this timber to build their houses, and, it being very straight-grained, they are able to hew it with axes into timbers, thick boards, stakes, and shingles. It is excellent fuel; the steamer Favorite uses it in preference to coal, and throughout Sitka it takes the place of the latter in all houses heated by Russian stoves; the Indians cut and deliver it for from $2 to $4, in trade, per cord, or about half those prices in cash. The trunks are too thick in proportion to their length, and the taper is very gradual.

Felled trees, which were measured by parties of the Coast Survey were 180 feet in length and 4 feet at butt; others still standing butted 6 feet, and were tall in proportion, and bare of branches for 50 feet from the ground.

HEMLOCK SPRUCE (Abies Mertensiana.)

This tree is very abundant, but it is not very valuable; it grows to a height of 80 to 100 feet, and is frequently branched nearly to the ground; the trunk is slender, seldom above 2 feet in diameter, and very knotty, which prevents its being adapted for spars. Specimens which came from Kadiak gave, however, better results than those above given. Some of these seen by the Coast Survey party in 1867, in the governor's yard at Sitka, in the shape of masts and spars, were of much greater dimensions, and with taper less abrupt.

YELLOW CEDAR (Cypressus Nutkatensis.)

This, which is probably the most valuable of the timbers of Alaska, and a tree which is not found elsewhere, does not exist in any great quantities in the vicinity of Sitka. Much of the information which I have obtained in regard to it was derived from Prof. John Muir, who, having made a number of extensive trips throughout Alaska, has not failed to utilize his botanical knowledge; and having been in his company considerably I have obtained advantage from it. A letter from him will lose much of its value, if not given, as I shall give it, nearly entire.

[Letter of Prof. Muir.]

The most important of Alaska trees measured by the value of its timber is the yellow cedar or cypress (Cypressus Nutkatensis), a truly noble tree, attaining a height of 150 feet, and a diameter of from 3 to 5 feet. * * * The wood of this tree is undoubtedly the best the country affords, and one of the most valuable to be found on the Pacific coast; it is pale yellow, close grained, tough, durable, and takes a good polish, and has a pleasant fragrance, like that of sandal wood. * * * The only California wood which resembles it is the torrega, but of this the trees are small and scattered in the cañons.

Three or four ships have been built of yellow cedar, and small quantities, a few thousand feet at a time, have been sent to Portland and San Francisco, from Sitka, Wrangell, &c., probably less than a million feet in all. Some little goes to China and is made into fancy boxes. It is said to be returned to us as camphor wood. It deserves to be far better known not only to ship builders, but to carpenters and furniture makers. The Indians make their paddles of it, and weave matting and coarse cloth from the inner bark, which is quite durable. * * *

The durability of this timber is forcibly illustrated by the fallen trunks lying in the damp woods. Many of the largest of these last for centuries, retaining the delicate color and fragrance unimpaired. Soon after falling they become overgrown with moss, in which seeds lodge and germinate and grow up into vigorous saplings, and as these grow larger they stand astride the parent trunk, their roots stretching to the ground on either side, and when these have reached the age of several hundred years the down-trodden trunk, when cut into, will be found as fresh at the heart as when it fell. The species is found as far south as Vancouver's Island, and is pretty generally distributed as far north as Sitka—how much further I am unable to say. But though its range is thus extensive, it does not seem to be very abundant at any one place.

I can add to the foregoing that I have seen this tree growing in patches, surrounded and generally fronted by the spruce and hemlocks, as far north as latitude 58° 45′, on the shore near William Henry Bay (Sitka is in 57° 02′ N.), and I think that I saw it on the southern shore of Cross Sound. The reputation of the wood of the yellow cedar as to durability is well deserved.

In 1867 the Coast Survey party "obtained and forwarded a piece of the keelson and frame of one of the Russian American Company's small vessels, which was constructed of this wood thirty-two years ago, and which had been lying a wreck upon the beach for several years."

In 1879 I was shown another piece from probably the vessel referred to, which had been exposed nearly ten years longer. The description of the condition of the first piece will fit that of the second:

> It exhibits not the least sign of decay or teredo attacks; the wood around the copper and iron bolts is nearly as well preserved as on the day they were driven.

And in the vicinity, the spruce crib-work, forming the foundation of this wharf at Sitka, was honeycombed by the teredos.

There is no doubt but that the wood will prove of great value for shipbuilding.

Although the foundations of nearly every Russian-built house in Sitka are badly decayed, wherever a yellow cedar log has been used it remains sound. The Indians destroy great quantities of this tree in procuring the bark, of which, in addition to the manufacture of cloth and mats, they make from the outer bark roof and canoe covers.

RED CEDAR (Thuja gigantea).

This tree, which is an arbor vitæ, is not as abundant as either of the three mentioned, but it is very generally distributed. It is used for the manufacture of canoes, and from it the largest and best are constructed, some over 60 feet in length and 8 feet in beam.

The spruce and yellow cedar are also used for this purpose, but are not considered so valuable as this tree, the wood of which is soft and easily worked.

OTHER TIMBER.

Professors Muir, Dall, and others describe several other species as existing in the interior. Muir says:

PINES.

Of pines I have seen but one species (P. contorta), a few trees of which, 50 or 60 feet high, may occasionally be found about the open edges of lakes and bogs. In the interior, beyond the mountains, it forms extensive forests.

FIRS.

A fir like Picea grandis is common on the mountains of the mainland. It is usually quite small, and seldom found to exceed a height of 60 or 70 feet, and the timber is of inferior quality.

SPRUCE.

And up on the cold cañon sides, upon the banks of the glaciers, there is a very handsome little spruce, like the Williamsons of the upper forests of the Sierras.

According to Dall and Kellogg there grows in the vast region drained by the Yukon the white spruce (Abies alba). Muir states that he saw this tree on the arctic divide, near the headwaters of the Yukon, and thus describes it:

> The tallest are about 125 feet high; it is an exceedingly slender tree, erect, and closely clad with short leafy sprays, forming the sharpest and most arrow-like spires I ever saw in any forests. Some of this inland timber may some time be made available for spars, by floating it down to tide water.

HARD WOOD.

I could obtain no information as to the existence anywhere in Alaska of hard wood of any value. I have seen small birches, alders, and crab-apple trees, and the two former as far north as the Chilkhoot Inlet, near its head, in latitude about 60°.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

These—as it is but natural to expect in a mountainous country, of which the southern point is in nearly 50° north latitude, and of which the greater portion is north of 60°, and fully two-thirds in the frigid zone, its northern point being the northernmost of the United States—are extremely limited, but they are not, as has been persistently stated by "authorities on Alaska," "uull and void."

The warm vapor which constantly rises from the Kuro Siwo, a great river of warm water which washes its southern coast, does not exhaust itsefforts in the production of the great forests which have been described. Its moisture and its warmth combined give to the thin soil wonderful powers of producing such vegetables and plants as need these two conditions. My personal observation is limited to the Alexander Archipelago, but it enables me to give the most unqualified contradiction to many statements which have been made in official reports, and articles in magazines and newspapers.

Farming, as a business, will not pay in Alaska, but any man living almost anywhere in Southeast Alaska can by an intelligent use of two hours a day secure for himself and family a bountiful supply of most excellent vegetables. I know numbers who have done this, and, except that my labor was by proxy, have done it myself.

The Aleutian Islands are devoid of timber and sterile, but Kadiak is a fertile island, where vegetables, hay, and cattle can be raised, and are raised annually.

On the mainland adjacent to the Archipelago, and on the islands, wherever the sun's rays can get through the thick foliage the ground responds, and, drying quickly after every shower, becomes clothed with verdure.

Along all of the river courses the banks are covered with wild flowers and berries; and upon the alluvial flats, which have been deposited by the action of advancing and left by receding glaciers, which are termed "moraines," timothy, wild barley, red and white clover, and great varieties of berries and wild flowers grow in profusion.

In latitude 69° north I have walked for miles on a meadow where the timothy and barley reached above my head, and so plentiful that my progress was impeded by them. The forests are full of deer, which obtain good pasturage the year through; and there are innumerable flocks of ptarmigan on the mountains, and grouse in the lower lands, who find abundance of food from the berries, of which there are blueberries, cranberries, blackberries, salmonberries, and several varieties peculiar to the country.

Near several villages of the native, notably those of the Kootznahoos and Hoonahs, are plots of ground under cultivation, which yield fair crops of potatoes and turnips, although the methods of cultivation pursued are so primitive that good results could not be expected. For instance, potatoes are sowed whole and broadcast, and no labor expended in cultivation until, when dug in September, they are found to merit the description of Elliott and others as "small watery walnuts."

Even during the period of occupation by our troops gardening was discouraging work, and I have been informed by officers who were stationed at Sitka that their efforts were rewarded by worthless potatoes, lettuce, and cabbage which would not head, and watery beets, turnips, and radishes.

But this state of affairs does not now exist, whether it be due to change of climate, through the clearing away of many acres of forest land, or to improved methods, I cannot say; but for several years past excellent vegetables, such as potatoes, cabbages, &c., have been raised yearly in the vicinity of Sitka and Wrangell.

Undoubtedly there is less rainfall than formerly existed—that is, if the data previously accumulated is correct.

Lütke records in two years an average of 117 days of continuous rain or snow each year. Our observations, taken hourly, give but 24 such days in eighteen months.

In the neighborhood of Sitka there are a large number of plots under cultivation. I have myself seen, two seasons in succession, growing in the gardens of Messrs. Schmeiz, Faley, Travis, Millelich, Collector Ball, and my own, lettuce of several varieties one heading like a small cabbage; cabbages a yard across before they began to head, and 8 to 10 inches in diameter headed; cauliflowers weighing from 10 to 15 pounds; early rose and peachblow potatoes, ranging from 3 to 30 ounces each, and each hill yielding over half a bucket full; turnips of very large size, and cress, radishes, &c., in profusion; green pease of excellent quality; and beds bordered by gooseberries and currant bushes, producing loads of fruit.

My lettuce-bed kept me supplied from June to September, and my table was always well supplied with most excellent home-raised vegetables.

Within a distance of 20 miles from Sitka there are three or four thousand acres of fair agricultural land, if properly drained.

On the island of Biorka, 10 miles to the south, there is a farm owned and managed by Indians, and devoted principally to potatoes, cress, turnips, and cabbage; this farm covers at least 40 acres, and on Japonsky and several of the larger islands in Sitka Sound and Bay are flourishing gardens.

The season of sunshine is too short for success with cereals; but judging by the luxuriant growth of the self-sown wild barley on the moraines it seems likely that some of the hardier kinds could be advantageously introduced. Celery, green pease, and string beans have been raised, but not with encouraging success.

The Katliansky plains, near Sitka, which twelve years ago were broken up and sowed with timothy by a pioneer named Doyle, are each year covered with a heavy crop of grass, from which thirty to a hundred tons per season have been cut.

Every creole house has a garden, and in it roses, pansies, and all of the hardy annuals are cultivated successfully.

On the whole, whatever they may have been, the agricultural resources are not now nil.

MINERALS.

The mineralogical resources of Alaska have as yet to be determined and developed. There are in regard to their value widely differing opinions entertained, not only by those who know nothing upon the subject, but by others who have had more or less opportunity to obtain information.

Certain authorities who have visited the sea-coast and islands assert with positiveness that the resources in this respect are of no value and sustain their arguments to this effect by the apparent while unexplained reason that, during their long occupation of the country, the Russians not only failed to discover valuable minerals, but, further, the researches of a Russian engineer, appointed by his government to make a mineralogical investigation of the country, resulted, after two years devoted to the research, in an unfavorable report. On the other hand geologists of repute, among whom I may mention Prof. W. H. Dall, of the Coast Survey; Prof. John Muir, State geologist of California; and many practical miners, who are unknown to the public, but who are excellent judges of mineral deposits and formations, all of whom have explored the country quite thoroughly, unite in the opinion that there are strong probabilities that Alaska is rich in precious metals.

I do not propose to collect evidence on the subject, but will briefly give a few of the reasons which cause my opinion to coincide with those of the last-named persons: First. The careful investigations of the officers of the Coast Survey, a summary of which is given in the Alaska Coast Pilot, indicate that coal, copper, and iron are to be found in localities described; secondly, the information given to me in person by Professor Muir, who, among other things, expressed to me in September last his confidence that the lodes of Nevada extended through Alaska, and that the ledges on Baranoff Island were of the same formation; also that he was confident that somewhere on the mainland not far from Sitka there would be found valuable gold deposits; also by information from the miners and prospectors; and, thirdly, from my own observations upon visits to the mineral regions in the mountains.

Before doing so, I will endeavor to make it apparent why the Russians and the Russian engineers failed to discover minerals.

The country was controlled by the Russian Fur Company, which devoted its energies to the development of the fur trade—its legitimate business—and to the prevention of search for mineral lands, every acre of which, if found, would, by the terms of the permit, revert to the Russian Government, and naturally the company was averse to any enterprise which tended to lessen its power, influence, and revenue.

From old Russian creoles of intelligence who lived in Sitka during the Russian rule I learned that, from time to time, reports and specimens of ores were brought in by Indians and traders. The reports received no attention, and the quartz specimens were considered to be marble, of which there are several known quarries in the neighborhood.

In 1855, an engineer officer, named Darreham, was detailed to explore the country, and to report on its minerals. Two years were by this officer devoted to the carrying out of his instructions, and in 1858 he sent in his report, which was unfavorable. During the two years there were not over ten months of suitable weather for prospecting, and the officer had but few assistants with knowledge on thesubject. A large proportion of his summer work was devoted to visits to Kadiak and other islands, to Cross Sound, Pent Straits, and Whale Bay, in none of which have any of the prospectors who have since followed his route been able to find any deposits of value. He never visited the mountains on Baranoff Island, where since the date mines apparently of value have been discovered, and more or less developed. His winters at Sitka were, as was natuual, occupied in festivities.

In 1868, the country was transferred to the United States, and since that date a number of discoveries of value have rewarded the prospectors, none of whom were by the Russian governor permitted to go into the interior of the island.

In 1871 a soldier, named Doyle (who died at Sitka a few months after giving me the following information), discovered the first gold-bearing quartz ledge in the vicinity of Sitka. He also found some little gold in a creek which emptied into Silver Bay, to the eastward of Sitka. The quartz specimens that he brought in were not valuable, although they contained some gold, and little notice was taken of the matter.

In 1872 Doyle, accompanied by Mahoney, another soldier, made another trip to the mountains, and procured more specimens from the ledge, but, as they were intent on placer prospecting, they were unprovided with tools, and procured but little rock. This, being exhibited in the saloon of Samuel Millelich, attracted the attention of another soldier, named Nicholas Haley, who had previously been a miner in Nevada, and he being thus familiar with "rock" considered that the sulphurets visible in the specimens indicated value, and a party of soldiers, accompanied by officers, made a ten days' visit to the ledge, of which nine were spent in clearing away trees and sod. On the tenth, they having developed a ledge of quartz about 11 feet wide between well-defined slate walls, a blast was made in the "pay-vein," and from the rock thrown out and broken up about $60 worth of free gold was obtained. From the date of the return of this party, until fall in 1879, parties prospecting the mountains have discovered a large number of ledges on the same range, many of which have proved by assay to be rich in gold.

The unsettled condition of the country prevented the few capitalists who had any faith in the discoveries from venturing to develop any of these ledges except one, which has been slightly worked by a company, which has built a 20-stamp mill and produced considerable gold—not enough, however, to pay, there having been a great deal of mismanagement and suspected misappropriation of the proceeds by the employés of the company.

Haley discovered a number of ledges of apparent value. One other, the "Witch," which is, I believe, owned by him alone, is apparently a rich pocket mine, which has furnished a large quantity of nuggets of free gold. During the summer of 1880 Haley, assisted by his family, has taken from this mine daily an average of an ounce of gold, obtained by crushing in a hand mortar the decomposed quartz, and treating it with mercury, thus obtaining the free gold only.

Haley's statement to this effect I obtained confirmation of to a certain extent from the parties who bought his amalgam, and by my personal experience in crushing and treating under his supervision, in his cabin, five pounds of rock taken at random from a bag-full, which yielded me 34 grains of pure gold.

A collection of specimens from a number of the Baranoff ledges were obtained by me by breaking them off myself. Some of these proved by assay at San Francisco to be worth from $10 to $500 per ton, and others were forwarded by me to the National Museum and to the Navy Department in October, 1879.

The heavy snowfall of winter of 1879 put a temporary stop to all prospecting of Baranoff Island, and thus left idle in spring a large party of miners, whose services were made useful by us in forming of them the Pioneer Chilkhat Expedition, fully described in this report.

At the date of my detachment in September the parties were still absent in the interior, reports being received from time to time that the Indians were loyal to their promises, and giving them good treatment and aid.

Six weeks after my departure one of the prospecting parties discovered in the neighborhood of Douglas Island, near Taku Inlet, ledges of auriferous quartz, of such value that the stories received by me in my letters, and others which have been widely published, sound too extravagent to justify me in giving them place here.

The ledges are about 140 miles from Sitka, and about in the range explored by Professor Muir.

All of the people of Sitka and Wrangell have so much confidence in the value of the discovery, that extensive preparations are being made for a wholesale emigration this spring to the new town of Rockwell, which, in January, consisted of twenty-five houses, with lumber, &c., on hand to build a great many more. It is probable that ere this it has grown greatly, and that miners from the Pacific coast are flocking to it, steamers and sailing-vessels advertising for passengers to "the new El Dorado."

When the snow melts it is to be hoped that Alaska will take its first step upward, and that this legitimate result of the "operations of the Jamestown" may be crowned with success.

There will be no law or government over the people except that furnished.

COAL.

I was not able to obtain any definite information as to the existence of any valuable deposit of coal in Southeast Alaska.

The officers of the Coast Survey have learned of such, and the localities are described in their reports and in the Alaska Coast Pilot. In the latter reference is made to a presumed valuable deposit in Saint John's Bay, near Sitka. This I didn't have examined, being led to delay so doing to give precedence to work of more apparent value, I being assured by parties who had undertaken to develop this mine that they found no coal of value.

On Admiralty Island there is a coal mine at the head of Mitchell's Bay, but the coal is not valuable. On a little island in Sitka Harbor there are "indications," and an enterprising merchant has sunk a 30-foot shaft, as yet finding nothing but salt water.

Some of the Indians from Yak-e-tat described to me mines of coal in Bering's Bay, and wells of oil which would burn, probably petroleum.

COPPER.

Several explorers, among whom were Mr. Allen Francis, Edmund Bean, and others, have sought in vain for reported copper mines up the "Copper Mine River." No one has been able to find them; the Indians of the vicinity have shown fair specimens, and use the metal for axes, tobacco crushers, &c. I have seen some of these, and Mr. Bean procured a large knife of this metal.

GRAPHITE AND SILVER.

In Glacier Bay there are, on several of the islands, high bluffs, which are streaked with veins of graphite and arsenical silver. I have broken off from rocks near the water's edge pieces, which, upon assay, yielded from 10 to 40 ounces silver per ton and 50 per cent. graphite.

IRON.

I saw a few specimens of magnetic iron ore, and one of my objects in making the trip to Chilkhat was to search for a reported iron mine in the vicinity. The natives being at war, I could not carry out my plans.

In conclusion, I would state that at the date of my leaving Sitka the country was at peace throughout, and my task of restoring harmonious relations on a permanent basis between the whites and Indians seemed to have been accomplished.

Very respectfully,

L. A. BEARDSLEE,
Captain, United States Navy.

A communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of bill for the per capita distribution of the sum of two thousand dollars to the band of Eastern Shawnee Indians at Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory.

JANUARY 24, 1882.—Read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of a bill for the per capita distribution of the sum of two thousand dollars to the band of Eastern Shawnee Indians at Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, with accompanying papers noted in said communication.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
January 24, 1882.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 24, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a draft of a bill, prepared in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, allowing a per capita payment to members of the band of Eastern Shawnee Indians at Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory. The sum for distribution named in the bill is two thousand dollars ($2,000).

The petition of the Shawnees, and the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, presenting the subject, will be found herewith; and agreeably to the recommendation of the Indian Office, I respectfully request that the subject may be transmitted for the consideration of Congress.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 20, 1882.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a petition from the Eastern Shawnee Indians at Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, setting forth their impoverished condition, caused by the failure of their crops and the ravages of the chintz-bugs during the past season, and in which they request a cash payment of two thousand dollars per capita from their uninvested funds in the Treasury, to relieve their wants and necessities. The said Indians have to their credit in the Treasury the sum of eleven thousand seventy-nine dollars and twelve cents ($11,079.12) uninvested, at five per centum per annum, and, as no part of said fund can be paid to the said Indians without permission of Congress, I inclose herewith a draft of a bill providing for the payment to them of two thousand dollars ($2,000) per capita, which I respectfully recommend may receive the approval of the department and be transmitted to Congress for early action.

Very respectfully,

H. PRICE,
Commissioner.

A BILL for the relief of the Eastern Shawnee Indians at the Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid in cash, per capita, to the Eastern Shawnee Indians, at Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, from their uninvested funds in the Treasury, the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000), in order to relieve their pressing wants and necessities occasioned by the failure of crops during the summer and fall of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

QUAPAW AGENCY,
SHAWNEE RESERVE, INDIAN TERRITORY,
January 4, 1882.

To the Hon. H. PRICE,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: The petition of the subscribers, members of the Eastern Shawnee tribe of Indians, of the Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, respectfully showeth:

That the drought which prevailed here the past season, aided by the ravages of "chintz-bugs," very nearly destroyed all our corn and wheat crop, and, in addition, prevented the growth of potatoes, or fruit of any kind; that the hay crop was poor, and without the aid of grain is not sufficient to carry our stock through till another crop can be raised; that owing to these unavoidable calamities, we are left in a most destitute and helpless condition; that up to this time we have steadily increased our little property by adding to our live stock from year to year, until we began to feel and realize that we were in better circumstances than we had ever realized since our removal to this home.

That many of us will be compelled to suffer great loss in the sale of our live stock unless our wants are supplied from our funds, while a few of the old and poorer people, who have no stock, will be objects of charity without substantial aid; that we do not come to you asking for the white people's money for our relief, but for our own, so that none may suffer and none be compelled to sacrifice their little herd.

That it is the earnest desire of each and all of us that the honorable Commissioner will prepare and submit a bill to Congress for our relief, so that not less than two thousand dollars ($2,000) of our funds received from the sale of 12,000 acres of land to the Ottawas can be paid to us at an early day. In granting our request, you will not only make our heart's glad, but cause us to be ever grateful to the government we love and respect.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c., &c.

A communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of bill to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to create the offices of Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office and inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices.

JANUARY 24, 1882.—Read, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
January 24, 1882.

To the Senate and House of Representatives :

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of a bill to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to create the offices of Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office and inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices.

The matter is commended to the attention of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 10, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the draft of a bill to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to createthe offices of Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office and inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices.

In this connection I beg leave to invite your attention to pages 25 and 26 of a letter from the Commissioner of General Land Office (copy herewith), setting forth the necessity for such legislation, and I cordially concur in his opinion as to the necessity of some action on the part of Congress on this subject.

I have the honor, therefore, to suggest to you the propriety of transmitting the inclosed draft of a bill with the inclosed document to Congress, with your recommendation for its enactment.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

A BILL to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to create the offices of Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, and inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be entitled to a salary of five thousand dollars a year.

SEC. 2. There shall be in the Department of the Interior an Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be entitled to a salary of three thousand dollars a year.

SEC. 3. The Assistant Commissioner shall act as Commissioner in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner of the General Land Office, or in case of his absence, and he shall perform such other duties as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner, or as may be required by law.

SEC. 4. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not exceeding five inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, who shall each be entitled to a salary of three thousand dollars a year and actual traveling expenses, and whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to inspect the surveyors-general and district land offices, and the operation of the public-land system, including the system of surveys, and who shall perform such other duties as may be required of them by the said Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior. They shall have authority at all times to examine the papers and records of the surveyors-general and district land offices, and the work of deputy surveyors in the field, and shall have power to administer oaths to all parties whose evidence may be required in the course of their investigations.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
October 25, 1881.

SIR:

* * * * * * *

It will be observed that the above estimate embraces more clerks at somewhat less salaries than were asked for last year by my predecessor. He did not ask for a greater number of clerks, because at that time there was no room to accommodate them, and in the matter of my estimate for salaries I have sought to name the very lowest figures which, in my judgment, would possibly justify a reasonable expectation of retaining what good and competent men are now employed and thoroughly skilled in the business, and of obtaining from the outside a class of ability which the public have a right to expect will be employed to adjust the vast interests committed to this office.

I conceive it to be of great importance that a deputy commissioner be speedily authorized for this office.

The executive duties devolving upon the head of the bureau are so great and varied, as is well known, that it is impracticable and beyond physical possibilities for any Commissioner to personally discharge them in a proper manner. With a deputy commissioner a division of these duties can be made which will result largely to the benefit of the public business. I therefore recommend that this officer be authorized at as early a date after Congress convenes as may be practicable.

I have also estimated for an appropriation for three inspectors of surveyor-general and district land offices, at a salary of $3,000 each. It has been the practice to detail clerks from this office, or employ special agents from the outside, to investigate irregularities and frauds, and to inspect the local offices. This proceeding is, however, open to serious objection. Not only is the agent comparatively unskilled in most instances, but the system of an occasional examination does not meet the demands of the service. The local land officers are subject to frequent change by death, resignation, or removal, and new and unskilled officers are appointed; errors in business methods are perpetuated, and by reason of defective proceedings in the local offices, claimants frequently suffer, and additional work is imposed upon this office. The local offices should be under continued and intelligent supervision. A system of fraud not infrequently continues for a considerable time before this office is advised of its existence, and then it has but imperfect remedies at its command. In this, as in most other matters, prevention is better than cure.

The inspectors named should be tried, trusty, intelligent men, well versed in land laws and in the business of this office. Their duty should be, under direction from this office to aid in the opening of all new land offices; to instruct new officers in their duties; see that the offices are legally and properly administered; detect and report fraud, irregularities, and inefficient officers, and, in short, to do and perform any duties in connection with the land service for which special agents have heretofore been appointed, or as the Secretary of the Interior or this office may direct.

Many of the same reasons which render the employment of inspectors in the Indian Department advisable apply with equal force to the land service. I am confident that the employment of such inspectors would cost less than the present system, would be far more effective, and would result in speedy improvement of the service.

Respectfully submitted.

N. C. McFARLAND,
Commissioner.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of a bill authorizing the sale of certain pine timber cut upon the Menomonee Reservation in Wisconsin, together with the accompanying papers noted in said communication.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
January 24, 1882.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 24, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a draft of a bill prepared in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, authorizing the sale of certain pine timber cut upon the Menomonee Indian Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, together with the letter of the Commissioner transmitting the same; and respectfully request that the subject may be transmitted for the consideration of Congress.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 5, 1882.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: On the 25th April, 1876, an act of Congress (19 Stat., 37) was passed authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee Reservation in Wisconsin, under the direction of this department, in compliance with which such logs were subsequently sold.

It has since transpired that there are from a million to a million and one-half feet of pine logs lying skidded in the woods on the Menomonee Reservation, which were cut subsequent to the passage of said act, viz, during the winter of 1876–'77, under the direction of the then agent, J. C. Bridgman, contrary to the express orders of this department issued to him on the 14th January, 1876.

This timber is depreciating in value every year from being worm-eaten, besides the great danger of forest fires, and unless soon sold will be a total loss.

I therefore respectfully recommend that the matter be presented to Congress at once, and that immediate legislation be urged, giving authority to sell the logs in question.

I herewith submit the draft of a bill (in duplicate) calculated, in my judgment, to meet the requirements of the case. A similar bill was introduced in the House at the last session of Congress, but progressed no further than a reference to committee.

A copy of this report is also inclosed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. PRICE,
Commissioner.

A BILL authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee Reservation in Wisconsin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder, for cash, after due public advertisement, and in such lots or quantities as he may deem judicious, all pine timber cut upon the Menomonee Indian Reservation during the winter of 1876–'77, under the direction of the then United States Indian agent, J. C. Bridgman.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds arising from all sales of such timber shall be applied, first, to the payment of any and all indebtedness incurred for labor, supplies, and other expenses incident to the cutting and sale of said timber, and the surplus, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

A communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of bill and accompanying papers, in reference to the proposition of the Creek Nation of Indians for the cession of certain of their lands in the Indian Territory occupied by the Seminole Indians.

JANUARY 24, 1882.—Read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with draft of a bill and accompanying papers, in reference to the proposition of the Creek Nation of Indians for the cession of certain of their lands in the Indian Territory occupied by the Seminole Indians.

The subject is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
January 24, 1882.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 10, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for your information and such action as you may deem proper, a copy of a letter of the 9th instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon the subject of Creek Indian lands in the Indian Territory occupied by Seminole Indians, with copy of draft of proposed legislation and other papers noted therein.

This subject was brought to the attention of Congress at its last session, but, so far as this department is informed, no action has been taken by that body in relation to the matter.

The importance of a final settlement of the questions involved will be appreciated when it is stated that three several attempts at settlement have been made by the United States with the Creeks without avail, until last winter, when the Creek delegation, in this city, made a proposition under instructions from the legislative authority of their nation, which was submitted to Congress, as before noted.

The draft of bill herewith presented by the Commissioner for the ratification of the agreement or proposition of the Creeks is designed to settle the points at issue, and concurring in his recommendations I respectfully suggest that the measure, should it meet with your approval, be recommended to the favorable consideration of Congress.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 9, 1882.

SIR: Referring to office report of February 18, 1881 (two copies herewith), upon the subject of the Creek lands in Indian Territory occupied by the Seminole Indians, in which recommendation was made that Congress be asked to appropriate one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars for the purchase of one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of land (at one dollar per acre) from the Creek Indians, embracing the improvements made thereon by the Seminole Indians, and referring to my views on this subject, as expressed in the annual report of this office for the year 1881, page LIV, I have now the honor to recommend that the agreement made in this city February 14, 1881, by the Creek Nation of Indians, ceding one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of land in Indian Territory to the United States, being the land in question, for the sum of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, be laid before Congress for ratification, and that that body be requested to make the necessary appropriation to carry the same into effect; and that said lands be set apart for the use of the Seminole Nation of Indians, to be held by the same title as they now hold their land under the treaty of March 21, 1866, whenever said Seminoles shall have relinquished to the United State in lieu thereof one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of land from the western portion of their reserve in Indian Territory ceded to them by the treaty of 1866, and when said relinquishment shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior and recorded in the Office of Indian Affairs.

I further recommend that Congress be asked to appropriate the sum of three thousand dollars to be expended in ascertaining and determining the area and surveying the outboundaries of said tracts of land. I submit herewith a copy of this report, and the draft of a bill for the approval and ratification of said Creek agreement, and for the necessary appropriations to carry the same into effect.

The inclosed copies of letter from the Creek delegates, dated the 7th instant, is herewith submitted, setting forth the necessity for early action in the premises.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. PRICE,
Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

A BILL to accept and ratify an agreement made and submitted by the Creek Nation of Indians for the relinquishment of a portion of their land in the Indian Territory to the United States, for the use of the Seminole Nation of Indians, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the agreement made and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior by the Creek Nation of Indians, through their delegates duly authorized thereto, bearing date February fourteenth, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed.

Said agreement is in words and figures following, namely: "Under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stats., 626), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to negotiate with the Creek Indians 'for the relinquishment to the United States of such portions of their country as may have been set apart, in accordance with treaty stipulations, for the use of the Seminoles, and the Sacs and Foxes, of the Mississippi tribes of Indians, respectively, found to be east of the line separating the Creek ceded lands from the Creek Reservation, and also to negotiate and arrange with said tribes for a final and permanent adjustment of their reservations.'" * * *

So much of said act as relates to the Sacs and Foxes has been carried into effect by their removal to their proper location on lands west of the said "dividing line." The Seminoles are, however, still occupying the lands belonging to the Creeks, for which occupancy the Creeks have as yet received no compensation, from the fact that no agreement could be arrived at between them and the United States as to the price per acre to be paid to the said Creeks by the United States for said lands.

The undersigned, members of the Creek delegation, resident in Washington, duly authorized to act in the premises, both by appointment for general purposes under the certificate of the governor, under the national seal, and also by special action of the national council in this instance, copies of which general and special authority are hereto attached, do promise and agree for themselves and for their nation that they will sell, cede, and dispose of the lands now occupied by the Seminoles, belonging to the Creek Nation, to the United States for the sum of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

And the said Creek delegation do hereby agree for and on behalf of said nation that they will cede to the United States, and do hereby cede, a strip of land in the Indian Territory, now occupied by the Seminole Nation of Indians, lying east of the said line dividing the Creek lands from the lands ceded to the United States in the treaty of June 14, 1866; bounded on the north by the North Fork of the Canadian River, on the south by the Canadian River, on the west by the dividing line between the Creek Reservation and the lands ceded under treaty of 1866, above noted, and on the east by a line running north and south between the rivers named; so far east of said division line as will comprise within said described boundaries one hundred and seventy-five thousand (175,000) acres at the price of one dollar ($1) per acre; said cession to be in full force and effect when the sum of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars shall have been deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation, to draw interest at the rate allowed in the treaty of June 14, 1866, wherein certain of their lands in the Indian Territory were ceded to the United States. And one-third of said fund shall be forever set aside for educational purposes, and the remaining two-thirds shall be subject to such use as the Creek council shall determine.

WARD COACHMAN,
PLEASANT PORTER,
DAVID M. HODGE,
Creek Delegation.

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
February 14, 1881.

SECTION 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, set apart and hold as a prepetual fund as provided in said agreement, in trust for the Creek Nation of Indians, the sum of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

SEC. 3. That the land ceded to the United States by said agreement shall be set apart for the exclusive use and occupancy of the Seminole Nation of Indians, to be held by the same title as they now hold their land under the treaty of March twenty-first, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, whenever the said Seminole Nation of Indians shall have duly relinquished to the United States in lieu thereof one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of land from the west side of their present reserve in Indian Territory, as defined in the third article of said treaty of March twenty-first, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, and when said relinquishment shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior and duly recorded in the office of Indian Affairs.

SEC. 4. That the sum of three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in determining by actual survey the areas of said two tracts of country, and establishing the outboundaries thereof.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1882.

SIR: Referring to the Creek, Seminole land matter, we most respectfully request that you will recommend prompt action by Congress, because, in addition to the merits of the case, under the treaty of 1866, and the act of March 3, 1873, we call attention to the following facts, showing the urgency of the situation:

During the last winter the Tallahassee mission was destroyed by fire, and at the same time the Creek Nation and the Baptist board were constructing, or preparing to construct, a new mission. In September last the Asbury mission, near Eufaula, was destroyed by fire. The Creek Nation was anxious to rebuild the Tallahassee mission, and to construct the new Baptist mission, and this anxiety to increase their educational facilities was one of the leading causes of their consent to sell the Seminole land, and in anticipation of funds from this source, they began and are now proceeding to erect a new Tallahassee mission and are carrying on a school at the Baptist mission.

At the last council, in October, provisions were made for the rebuilding of Asbury mission.

Unless an appropriation shall be promptly made, these school interests will be greatly injured, and, indeed, the probability now is that some of the schools must be suspended.

Even had the appropriation been made by the last Congress, it would have required great prudence and financial skill to have carried on our public school system, embracing 28 schools, and to have constructed the new Baptist mission; but when the Tallahassee and Asbury missions were burned the fiscal burdens were increased beyond the ability of our nation, unless re-enforced from this Seminole obligation. The United States urged the Creeks for ten years to sell this land, and when our nation agreed to the terms proposed, we did not contemplate any delay in payment.

Respectfully, your obedient servants,

WARD COACHMAN,
PLEASANT PORTER,
Creek Delegates.

To Hon. S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 18, 1881.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the department to a question that has been a matter of dispute and disturbance since 1867 between the Seminoles and Creeks in Indian Territory, the present location of the Seminoles. The history of the matter is, briefly as possible, as follows:

By the 3d article of the Creek treaty of June 14, 1866 (Stats. 14, p. 786), the Creeks ceded to the United States the west half of their entire domain, "to be sold to, and used as homes for, such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon." The Creek domain at that date embraced the region designated in red on the map herewith. The 8th article of the treaty made it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause the line dividing the Creek country to be accurately surveyed, the expense to be paid by the United States.

By the 3d article of the Seminole treaty of March 21, 1866 (Stats. 14, p. 756), the Seminoles ceded their entire domain to the United States, "to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon," the United States agreeing to pay therefor to the Seminoles the sum of $325,362. By the same article the United States granted to the Seminoles two hundred thousand acres of the lands acquired by cession from the Creeks. The lands thus granted to the Seminoles was to be taken from the extreme eastern portion of the tract ceded by the Creeks, as is evident from the terms of the grant in the treaty, although in that respect the treaty is loosely worded, the two hundred thousand acres granted to the Seminoles being described as follows:

"Beginning on the Canadian River where the line dividing the Creek lands according to the terms of their sale to the United States by their treaty of February 6, 1866, following said line due north to where said line crosses the North Fork of the Canadian River, thence up said North Fork of the Canadian River a distance sufficient to make two hundred thousand acres by running due south to the Canadian River; thence down said Canadian River to the place of beginning."

It is clear that the line separating the westerly half of the Creek domain, ceded to the United States, from the easterly half retained by the Creeks, was intended to be the east line of the Seminole two hundred thousand acre tract; that the south and north boundaries of this tract were to be the Canadian River and North Fork of Canadian River, respectively, and that the west boundary must be a line parallel to the east boundary and distant therefrom far enough to include the requisite number of acres. The reference in this treaty to the date of the Creek treaty (February 6, 1866) is evidently either a misprint or a mistake of the draftsman, as there is no treaty of that date between the United States and the Creeks. The treaty with the Seminoles was concluded March 21, 1866; that with the Creeks, June 14, of that year. As before stated, it was, however, evidently the intention of the parties to the treaty of March, 1866, that the lands ceded to the Seminoles, should be situated on the eastern portion of the domain, which it was believed would be ceded to the United States, for it is well known that negotiations were going on for a length of time between the commissioners on the part of the United States and the delegates of the Creek and Seminole Indians, and that the cession by the Creeks to the United States of the land granted to the Seminoles was agreed upon and would be made when a treaty was concluded. Before, therefore, the actual location granted to the Seminoles, and which was to constitute their national domain, could be determined, it was necessary that the Creek dividing line should be established. This duty was devolved upon the Secretary of the Interior by the 8th article of the Creek treaty, the expenses to be paid by the United States, and an appropriation of $4,000 was made by Congress for this purpose, July 28, 1866 (Stats. 14, p. 320, 3d paragraph from top of page).

At this time a large part of the Seminoles were homeless. During the war of the rebellion a portion of them had cast their fortunes with the South, and those declining to do so were refugees in Kansas, in the neighborhood of Neosho Falls, whence in the fall of 1865 they were removed to the west side of the Arkansas River, in Indian Territory, upon Cherokee lands. It had been found impracticable to remove them to their old homes in the Seminole country, for the reason that no supplies could be had there, and the long distance from Fort Gibson (about one hundred and sixty miles) to transport supplies induced the department to abandon the idea of settling them on their own domain, and to locate them, for the time being, near Fort Gibson, where Indian supplies were then delivered.

In September, 1866, the agent for the Seminoles reported that a considerable portion of the tribe had removed to their new homes and that the remainder were preparing to emigrate that fall. In October the agent reported as follows:

"On my arrival here (Fort Gibson) I find this state of facts to exist: The Seminoles were living on Cherokee lands. They have raised small crops of corn and garden produce, which is now all gone. There is no game or meat nearer than their own country, 125 miles from here. In their own country the few remaining cattle are being exhausted by the southern portion of the Seminoles. They are anxious to get home to save what few they may be able to secure. They wanted to get home so as to cut hay and prepare cabins for winter; and besides all this the Cherokees are dissatisfied at their long stay on their lands and the using of their timber, when it was understood, when permission was given to camp on their lands, that the Seminoles were only to stay during last winter. They could not go without some assistance from the government. Acting with the advice of Judge Harlin, agent for the Cherokees, and J. W. Dunn, agent for the Creeks, I have assumed the responsibility to attempt their removal. I have employed teams on my own credit and will start them for home in a day or two. I shall provide transportation only for the sick, the children, and their household goods. What they will do for provisions at their homes I cannot tell, but they are suffering here and cannot do worse in the Seminole country. I am aware that I have assumed considerable responsibility, but I know I have acted for the best interests of the government and the Indians, and I hope I may be sustained."

A portion of the Seminoles thus removed themselves, and the remainder were removed by the government, to what was supposed to be the country granted to them by the treaty, before the boundaries of the land thus ceded had been marked. No appropriation had been made for the survey of this tract, except the appropriation of $4,000, before referred to, to survey the Creek dividing line, and this was found to be inadequate even for that purpose. In the mean time the necessity for the survey of the dividing line between the Creek lands ceded to the United States and those retained by the Creeks, as well as for the segregation of the 200,000 acres granted to the Seminoles, was urged by the Creek and Seminole agents, and in August, 1867, the superintendent of Indian affairs was instructed to have the dividing line surveyed if in his opinion the appropriation of $4,000 was sufficient to defray the expenses; if insufficient, that he should submit an estimate of the amount required.

After examination of the matter that officer reported that he was forced to the conclusion that there was a deficiency of information required to make the survey, and especially a deficiency of means on hand to accomplish it, and submitted an estimate made by a practical surveyor, showing that a much larger amount was required than had been appropriated.

Afterward the superintendent was authorized to employ a competent surveyor to execute the survey of the Creek dividing line and the Seminole 200,000 acre tract; an additional estimate to be made to Congress, and payment to be made as far as the existing appropriation of $4,000 would provide, the surveyor to rely upon the favorable action of Congress for the remainder. An additional appropriation of $5,000 was made March 3, 1869, to complete the survey of the dividing line and to survey the exterior boundary of the grant to the Seminoles (Stats. 15, p. 315). The superintendent entered into contract with John C. Rankin to do the work. I am informed that his survey at first located the east boundary of the Seminole tract (and to that extent the Creek dividing line) about seven miles east of the correct location of said line, as afterward ascertained, and this survey was therefore not approved, and he was required to correct it.

This incorrect survey placed the eastern line of the Seminole tract approximately as shown in green on the map. As finally surveyed and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, July 15, 1872, the correct Creek dividing line is as shown in black on the map. The country between these two lines, embracing an area estimated at about 175,000 acres, had been settled upon and occupied by the Seminoles since the fall of 1866, the Indians believing themselves, and the department believing them, to be upon the domain granted by the treaty, and having made for themselves homes and very valuable improvements.

When it became known that the Seminoles were occupying lands belonging to the Creeks, the latter protested against such occupancy. Disputes as to jurisdiction arose between the Creeks and Seminoles, the former contending that as the country was theirs they had jurisdiction over it, and the Seminoles refusing to recognize such jurisdiction over the tract occupied by them. The department held, that while the Creeks were not responsible for the inaccurate survey of the western boundary of their country, the Seminoles certainly should not be subjected to the experience of a jurisdiction to which they were averse and within which it was not designed in the treaty to place them, and the Creeks were accordingly notified that their claim to exercise jurisdiction over the Seminoles was not approved by the department, and that any idea of attempting it should be abandoned.

By act of 3d of March, 1873 (Stat. 17, p. 626), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to negotiate with the Creeks for the relinquishment to the United States of the tract on which the Seminoles had been erroneously located. Under this authorization three attempts were made to effect a satisfactory adjustment of the matter. Soon after the passage of the act a committee, consisting of Enoch Hoag, one of the superintendents of Indian Affairs, Thomas C. Jones, and John M. Milliken, were deputed to negotiate with the Creeks and Seminoles for a final and permanent adjustment of their reservations. They accomplished nothing. The Creeks were unwilling to lessen the area of their reserve, and refused to cede or sell, and demanded that the Seminoles should either become incorporated with them or remove from their land, neither of which the Seminoles would do, as they had been placed there by the government, and were unwilling again to break up their homes and establish new ones. This effort being fruitless of any satisfactory results, in 1875 Hon. J. P. C. Shanks was appointed a special commissioner, among other duties, to settle, or attempt to settle the matter, the records of this office showing that he was authorized to offer the Creeks one dollar per acre for the Seminole tract. In October of that year Mr. Shanks laid before the Creek council a proposition contemplating the cession by the Creeks to the United States for the Seminoles of the tract occupied by them (estimated to contain 175,000 acres), the United States to pay the Creeks one dollar per acre; its true area to be ascertained by survey, to be paid for by the United States.

The Creek council authorized a committee of five "to arrange and settle by a treaty or otherwise all Creek interests with the United States Government." This committee proposed to Mr. Shanks to negotiate for the cession to the United States of the tract upon which the Seminoles were located, but they embraced in such negotiation an agreement on the part of Mr. Shanks to obligate the government to bring to speedy settlement and payment a mass of claims alleged by them to be unsettled.

As the authority of the Secretary of the Interior and the agent appointed under the act of 3d March 1873, was specifically for the adjustment of the question of the location of the Seminoles, the proposition of the Creeks could not be entertained, and General Shanks so informed them. So that effort ended, except that after Mr. Shanks' arrival in Washington he was informed by a letter from the Creek principal chief that the Creek council had authorized a commission of thirteen to negotiate for the sale of the Seminole tract upon such terms "as will give the best satisfaction to the Muscogee people," and directing the commission to "report their negotiations to the next annual session of the national council for its approval or rejection."

Matters rested thus until November, 1876, when the third effort was made, by sending Mr. S. A. Galpin as a special agent to negotiate. He made no report.

I am now informed by letter from the department, dated 12th instant, that the Creek delegation resident in this city have signified their willingness to sell to the United States one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of their land lying east of the "division line," for the use of the Seminoles, at the rate of one dollar per acre, in settlement of all differences and demands on or against the United States growing out of the question of the Seminole occupation thereof. In view of the fact that the tract of country in question is understood to embrace among the most valuable land in the Creek reserve, and that the Creeks have been deprived of its use for more than fifteen years in consequence of the location of the Seminoles on it by the agent of the government, I regard the price named as a just basis for settlement, and therefore respectfully recommend that Congress be requested to insert in one of the appropriation bills yet to be acted on at the present session an item of appropriation in the sum of $175,000 for the payment to the Creeks, at one dollar per acre, for one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of land lying east of the dividing line and between the Canadian River and the North Fork of Canadian River, for the use of the Seminoles, and an additional item of one thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to survey the outboundaries of the tract so purchased. To this end I submit a draught of items as above indicated.

As shown in the foregoing, the homeless condition of the Seminoles, and their unwelcome occupation of lands belonging to another tribe, as well as the necessity of settling them somewhere as soon as possible, in order to enable them to commence to support their families, led the government to locate them on what, at the time, was supposed to be the land that would inure to them, when the "dividing line" should be surveyed, but which, upon correct survey of the line, was found to be included in the Creek reserve. That they were thus erroneously located is, under the circumstances, not to be wondered at, but certainly it was through no fault of the Seminoles, and the government should therefore pay the Creeks for the lands sought to be purchased, and should also meet the expense of the survey thereof. The Seminoles certainly should not be required to do this, especially when it is considered that they received only fifteen cents an acre for the country relinquished by them in the treaty of 1866, while the United States paid the Creeks thirty cents per acre for the half of their domain ceded to the United States, and then charged the Seminoles fifty cents an acre for the part of the same land sold to them, and only after the lapse of nine years made up to them the difference in price.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. M. NICHOL,
Acting Commissioner.

To purchase from the Creek Nation of Indians for the use of the Seminole Indians, at the price of one dollar per acre, one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of land adjacent on the east to the dividing line between that portion of the Creek domain ceded to the United States by the Creek treaty of June 14, 1866, and that portion retained by the Creeks, being the land belonging to the Creek Nation upon which the Seminoles were erroneously located by the authorities of the United States, supposing it to be the land granted to the Seminoles by the 3d article of the treaty with the Seminoles, dated March 21, 1866, one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase said lands from the Creek Nation of Indians for the use of the Seminole Indians.

To pay for the survey of the tract of land to embrace one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres, authorized by this act to be purchased from the Creek Nation of Indians for the use of the Seminole Indians, one thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause said lands to be surveyed and set apart for the use of the Seminole Nation of Indians.

Under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stats., 626), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to negotiate with the Creek Indians "for the relinquishment to the United States of such portions of their country as may have been set apart in accordanee with treaty stipulation for the use of the Seminoles and the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi tribes of Indians, respectively, found to be east of the line separating the Creek ceded lands from the Creek reservation, and also to negotiate and arrange with said tribes for a final and permanent adjustment of their reservations." * * *

So much of said act as relates to the Sacs and Foxes has been carried into effect by their removal to their proper location on lands west of the said "dividing line." The Seminoles are, however, still occupying the lands belonging to the Creeks, for which occupancy the Creeks have as yet received no compensation, from the fact that no agreement could be arrived at between them and the United States as to the price per acre to be paid to the said Creeks by the United States for said lands.

The undersigned, members of the Creek delegation, resident in Washington, duly authorized to act in the premises, both by appointment for general purposes under the certificate of the governor, under the national seal, and also by special action of the National Council in this instance, copies of which general and special authority are hereto attached, do promise and agree for themselves and for their nation that they will sell, cede, and dispose of the lands now occupied by the Seminoles, belonging to the Creek Nation, to the United States for the sum of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

And the said Creek delegation do hereby agree for and on behalf of said nation that they will cede to the United States, and do hereby cede, a strip of land in the Indian Territory, now occupied by the Seminole Nation of Indians, lying east of the said line dividing the Creek lands from the lands ceded to the United States in the treaty of June 14, 1866; bounded on the north by the North Fork of the Canadian River; on the south by the Canadian River; on the west by the dividing line between the Creek reservation and the lands ceded under treaty of 1866 above noted; and on the east by a line running north and south between the rivers named, so far east of said division line as will comprise within said described boundaries one hundred and seventy-five thousand (175,000) acres at the price of one dollar ($1) per acre; said cession to be in full force and effect when the sum of one hundred and seventy five thousand dollars shall have been deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation, to draw interest at the rate allowed in the treaty of June 14, 1866, wherein certain of their lands in Indian Territory were ceded to the United States; and one-third of said fund shall be forever set aside for educational purposes and the remaining two-thirds shall be subject to such use as the Creek Council shall determine.

Be it enacted by the National Council of the Muskogee Nation: That the delegates to be appointed to represent this government at the city of Washington during the next session of Congress are hereby instructed as follows: They shall endeavor to obtain a release from the United States of the land now occupied by the Seminoles, and also of all land of which we have been dispossessed by mistake in survey by representatives of the United States Government.

Secondly, if they find it impossible to reobtain possession of the said lands, they shall then endeavor to obtain a grant of the same quantity and quality of which we have been dispossessed; said grant to be contiguous to our present reservation.

Thirdly, if they then find it utterly impossible either to reobtain the land of which we have been dispossessed, or to obtain other land of similar quality and quantity, in its place, they shall then endeavor to make a final adjustment of the whole matter, by obtaining from the United States Government the largest possible amount of money for a release to the United States both of the land on which the Seminoles now reside and the land of which we were dispossessed by mistake in survey. But in no case shall they accept a smaller amount than one dollar per acre for all land so released, and

Be it further enacted, That should the delegates be forced to release the above mentioned land, one-third of the money obtained for the release shall be devoted to educational purposes, and the remaining two-thirds shall be subject to the action of the National Council of the Muskogee Nation.

Hon. H. PRICE,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

SIR: Representing the Muskogee Nation, we respectfully call attention to the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1873 (vol. 17, 626), enacting "that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, to negotiate with the aforesaid Creek Indians for the relinquishment to the United States of such portion of their country as may have been set apart in accordance with treaty stipulations for the use of the Seminoles and the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi tribe of Indians respectively, found east of the line separating the Creek ceded lands from the Creek Reservation, and also to negotiate and arrange with said tribes for a final and permanent adjustment of their reservations, and the Secretary shall report the result to Congress."

Under said statute negotiations were concluded, and the Secretary of the Interior made a report asking for an appropriation of $175,000 to compensate the Muskogee Nation for 175,000 acres of land in the possession of the Seminoles, but said report was received too late for consideration and adoption by Congress.

We therefore request that an estimate of appropriations for said sums be again submitted to Congress at your earliest convenience, and in this connection we would refer to a letter from the Office of Indian Affairs, dated July 29, 1881, directed to our chief, in which occurs the following language: "It is the intention of this office to renew the recommendations for the adjustment of the case at the next session of Congress."

UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1882.

SIR: To comply with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881, I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a report to this office from Capt. O. H. Ernst, Corps of Engineers, of the results of a survey under his direction of Fish Bend, in the Mississippi River, near Fort Chartres.

Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

HON. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

SURVEY OF FISH BEND, NEAR FORT CHARTRES, IN THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Saint Louis, Mo., December 31, 1881.

GENERAL: I have the honor to transmit herewith a map of Fish Bend, near Fort Chartres, in the Mississippi River, surveyed in August and September last, to comply with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881.

Fish Bend is situated about 40 miles below Saint Louis. The river leaves the Missouri bluff near Rushtown Landing and makes an incursion into the alluvial bottom on the Illinois side, returning to the Missouri bluff again at Penitentiary Point. The channel following the Missouri shore as far as Rush Island, crosses over to the Illinois shore below Goodman's Landing, and thence follows that shore nearly to Penitentiary Point. The deep concave bend which it has excavated for itself in the Illinois shore is known as Fish Bend.

The land on the Illinois side is almost entirely cleared of trees, and is under cultivation; the soil is the light sandy alluvion of the Mississippi Valley, and the direction of approach of the river is favorable to attack. These circumstances are all conducive to rapid erosion.

The bend was surveyed under the direction of my predecessor in 1874, and again in 1879. The shore lines, as developed by those surveys, are indicated on the map. They show a marked advance into the Illinois bottom, with a general movement of the bend down-stream. The greatest amount of excavation since 1874 is found just below Salt Lake, where the Illinois bank has receded about 1,875 feet, which is at the rate of 268 feet per year. The greatest excavation since 1879 is found just above Salt Lake and above Penitentiary Point. At the former place the bank has receded 794 feet; or 397 feet per year; and at the latter place 835 feet, or 417½ feet per year. Between these points there is one place where for a short distance the excavation has been almost nothing since 1879, though very large since 1874. The amount of land destroyed since 1874 is about 523.8 acres, or about 75 acres per year; and since 1879 about 180 acres, or 90 acres per year. Estimating the value of the land at $50 per acre and taking the more recent rate of annual destruction, the annual loss is about $4,500. The obvious means to prevent this loss is to strengthen the bank by a revetment. An efficient revetment includes a continuous mattress 120 feet wide laid at the foot of the slope below low-water mark, above which the bank is to be graded to a gentle slope and covered with a layer one foot thick of broken stone up to a height of 16 feet above low-water mark, and above that level to be planted with willows. The foot mattress should be made absolutely continuous if practicable, but if the current be too swift for progressive sinking, it should be made in sections not less than 1,000 feet long, and these should overlap each other so as to make the protection absolutely continuous when in place.

The cost of such a revetment is now estimated at about $10 per running foot, though it is possible that, as the men are trained and become more expert, the cost may be reduced. The total length of bank requiring protection from Goodman's Landing to Penitentiary Point is 19,166 feet. The total cost of protecting Fish Bend would be $191,660.

The annual interest upon this sum at 4 per cent. is $7,666.40, while the present annual loss from the destruction of land is but $4,500.

In stating the amount of commerce to be benefited by such an improvement, some explanations are necessary. The result of rapid caving of a bank is not only to inflict loss upon the riparian proprietor, but it is also injurious to navigation, by throwing into the stream a larger amount of material than it can carry. This material is at first swept along by the swift current usually prevailing in a sharp bend, until it reaches a crossing or wide place below, where it is deposited, and where it forms a shoal. In general terms, the protection of any bank from erosion is beneficial to navigation, by shutting off that supply of channel-choking material. But to stop the caving in a single detached bend may or may not be of permanent value to navigation. In a river having alluvial banks one bend is supplemented by other bends on the opposite side, above and below. The material excavated from one bend is often dropped upon or below the adjacent point, causing accretions, and the result is that the location of the bend is steadily moving down-stream, the upper portion being filled up as this movement progresses. If, in such a case, a detached bend be protected, and the opposite bend above be left unprotected, the works placed in the former will, in time, be buried, and will have served only a temporary purpose, the river seeking a new location for itself somewhere else. It sometimes happens, also, that the river will desert a well-defined bend, cutting a new channel for itself across the opposite point. It may be laid down as a rule that no permanent benefit to navigation can be expected with confidence from the protection of a single detached bend.

To insure permanent benefit the direction of approach of the channel must be fixed, and this involves the systematic improvement of the river above. While the protection of Fish Bend at this time would, without doubt, be of benefit to navigation for the time being, the work should not be undertaken in the interest of navigation until it shall be known with certainty where the bank of the river in this vicinity is to be in the future. The general improvement of the river now progressing down-stream from Saint Louis will reach a point about 15 miles above Fish Bend during the coming year. Its rate of advance being dependent upon the amount of future appropriations, it is uncertain when this locality will be reached.

It is therefore concluded that the protection of Fish Bend at this time will be a work for the protection of land, and that the benefit to commerce to be derived from it will be insignificant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. ERNST,
Captain of Engineers.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a report to this office from Maj. G. J. Lydecker, Corps of Engineers, of the results of a survey under his direction of "the Calumet River, from South Chicago to the village of Pullman, on Lake Calumet," made to comply with provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

SURVEY OF CALUMET RIVER, FROM SOUTH CHICAGO TO THE VILLAGE OF PULLMAN, ON LAKE CALUMET.

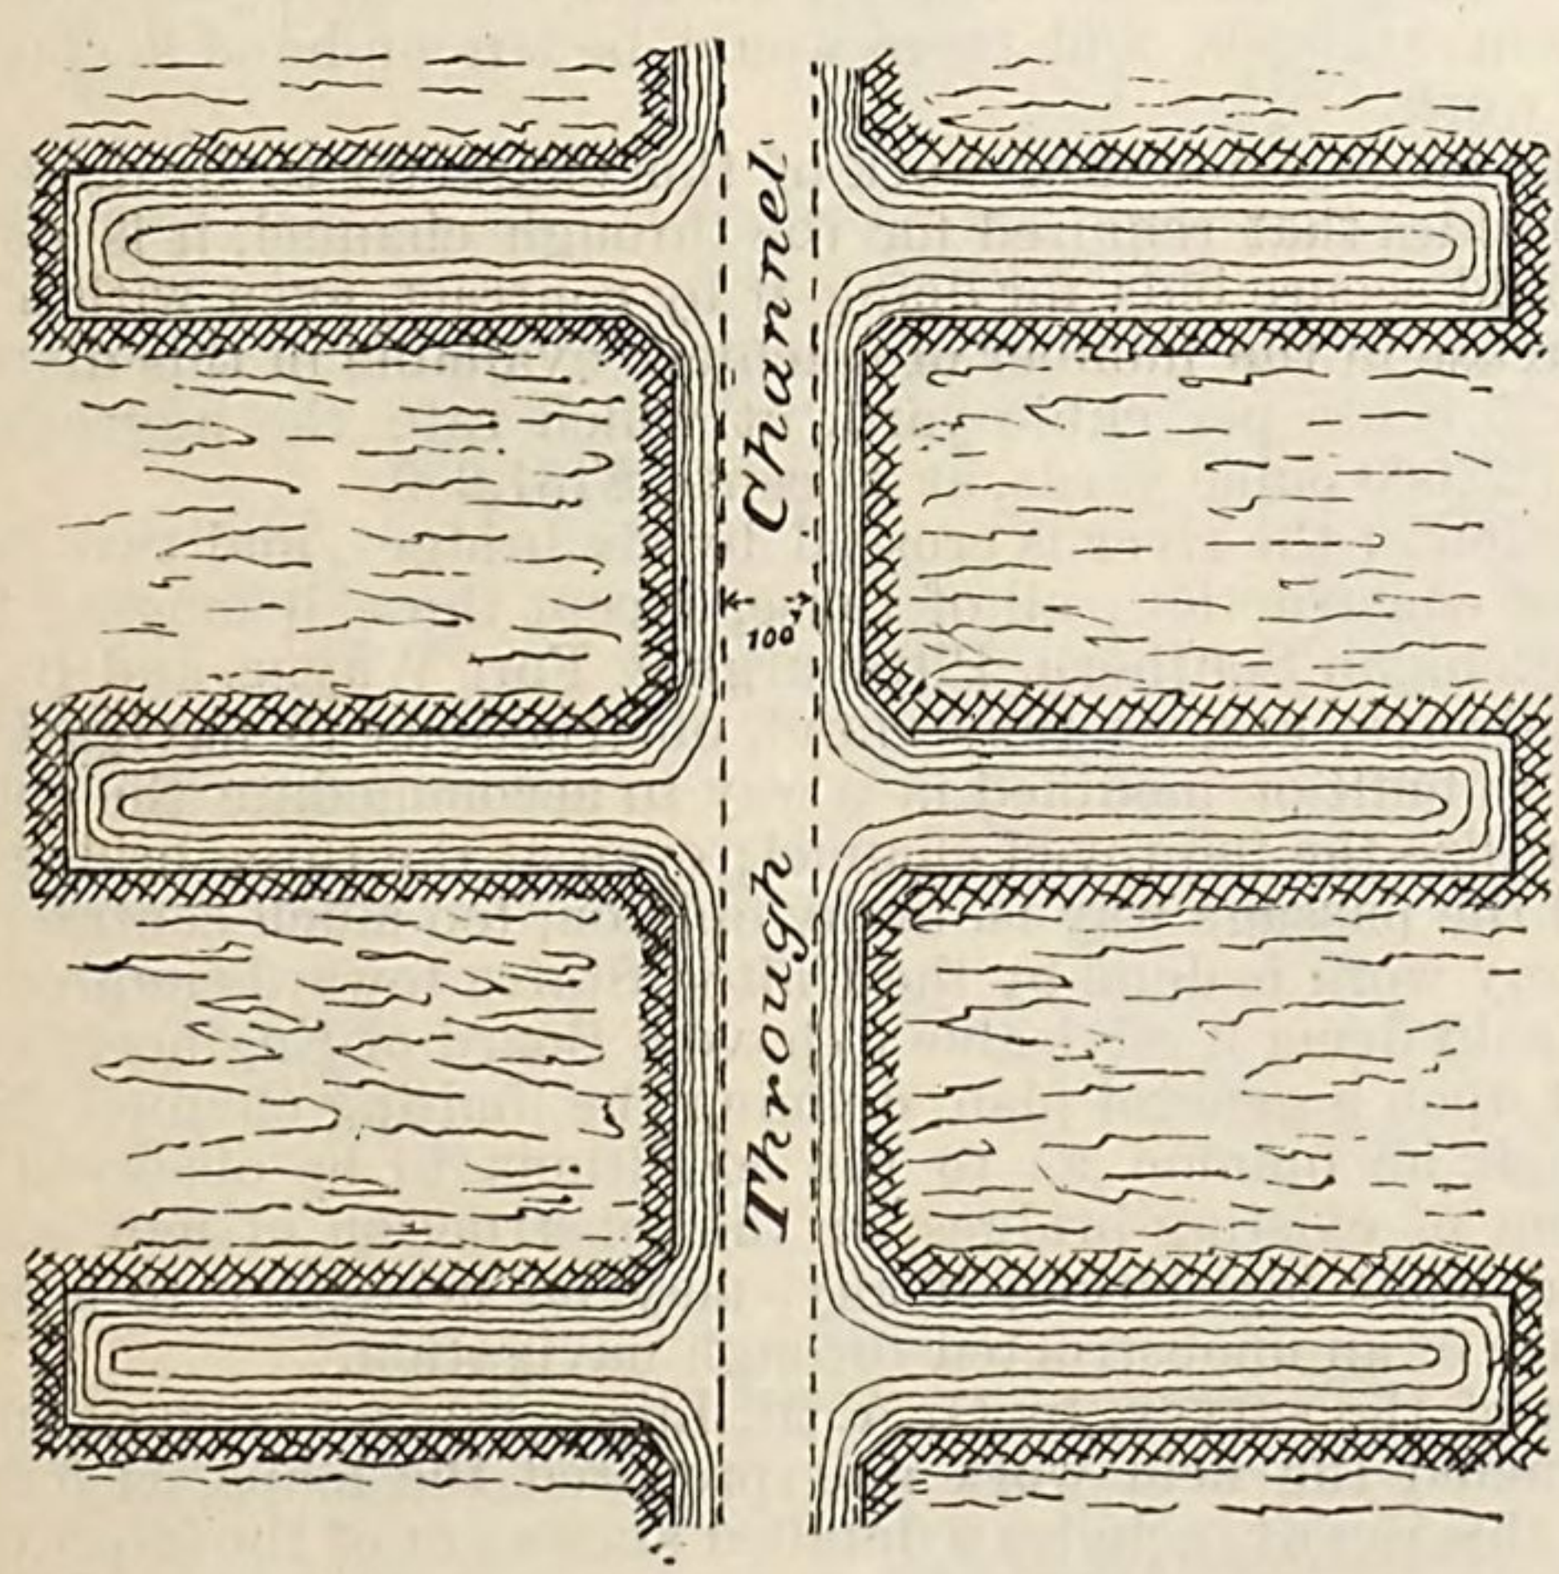
UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Chicago, Ill., January 7, 1882.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report on a "survey of the Calumet River, from South Chicago to the village of Pullman, on Lake Calumet," made in compliance with requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881.

This river empties into Lake Michigan at South Chicago, at which point the United States has constructed "Calumet Harbor," through which the commerce of the lakes is afforded entrance to the river, the channel depth through the harbor admitting vessels drawing 15 feet at low-water. Passing up the river a distance of 6½ miles, we arrive at the inlet to Lake Calumet, at the northwest extremity of which is located the town of Pullman, distant 2½ miles from the river; the general level of the lake is about 10 inches above that of Lake Michigan, its absolute level at any given time being dependent upon that of the latter.

At ordinary stages vessels drawing 15 feet cannot pass above the limits of the improved harbor; 12 feet can be carried to Brown's Mills, at Irondale, 3¼ miles above; beyond these mills the natural low-water channel has a navigable depth of not less than 10 feet for a distance of 2 miles further, thence 8 feet for a distance of 1 mile, and thence gradually diminishing to a depth of 7 feet at the entrance to Lake Calumet. The connection between the latter and the river is through a narrow channel about 2,000 feet long, varying in depth from 4 to 6 feet. From the point at which this channel enters the lake the general depth on a straight line to Pullman is from 5 to 6 feet.

Throughout the limits of our survey the bed of river and lake presents no well defined boundary, but is bordered by extensive marshes, over which the water is generally several inches deep.



The great trunk lines of railway (including the Michigan Central, Illinois Central, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne, Baltimore and Ohio, Grand Trunk, Western Indiana, and others) centering in Chicago, and reaching to all points east, south, and west, cross these marshes between the village of Pullman and Calumet Harbor.

The marked advantages for commercial and manufacturing enterprise offered by the conditions above indicated will, with a continuation of the present activity and success in business, insure the occupation and improvement of every foot of land contiguous to the river and lake in the immediate future; indeed, work to that end has been in progress on a large scale for more than a year past, and a large amount of capital is invested in pushing it forward. A free and commodions water communication with Lake Michigan is an essential factor in these improvements, and the certainty that such communication will be established has had a controlling influence on all investments in this locality.

The Calumet River must be rectified and deepened to an extent that will make it navigable for the largest of lake craft. Whether the work should be undertaken by the United States Government is a matter for Congress to determine, but I would note that a vast commerce, including a heavy tonnage in iron, coal, and lumber, is already directly interested in its accomplishment, while it is likely that the difficulties of communication through the Chicago River, owing to its overcrowded condition, will develop an extensive traffic in grain and other bulky commodities at this locality. The moneyed interests involved may be mainly local, but the advantage that will result from any considerable increase in the facilities for transfer between rail and lake communication in this vicinity will be as far-reaching as the general advantages of our lake commerce are felt; and, finally, a considerable revenue to the government, in excess of the cost of improvement, will result from the increased commerce and speedy development of industries that will surely attend the enlargement and perfection of the navigable capacity of the Calumet River.

If, now, the goverment should undertake the improvement of this river, its efforts should, in my opinion, be limited to the establishment and maintenance of a channel in the river bed (with cut-offs at the worst bends), to be used solely as a through line of water communication, and utilized at no point simply as a berth or dockage for vessels or other craft. To this end a dock-line should be established outside of the limits of the channel-way, such that vessels lying alongside would in no case encroach upon, nor be allowed to encroach upon, the through channel. The dredging necessary to enable vessels to lie at the docks should be done by the owner or occupant of the adjoining property, who is immediately interested in utilizing it, and who derives the benefit from it individually. In order to occupy the low marsh lands contiguous to the river, it will be necessary to raise them, and this will be done by excavating an extensive system of slips projecting into the marshes from the general channel of the river. Such is now the practice wherever any work is in progress. The effect would be to give a clear channel connecting a series of slips and docks, as indicated in the marginal sketch.

The estimated amount of dredging for a channel 100 feet wide, with a low-water depth of 15 feet, from Calumet Harbor to the entrance to Lake Calumet, is, in round numbers, 725,000 cubic yards; thence through the lake to the village of Pullman, 525,000 cubic yards; total, 1,250,000 cubic yards. A shorter and more direct line to Pullman would be to leave the river at Brown's Mill (Irondale), and make a direct cut in continuation of the slip indicated on the maps that are transmitted herewith. The total excavation by this route will be 850,000 cubic yards, of which, however, only 250,000 cubic yards would be in the river. The distance to Pullman by the first route is 9¼ miles, by the latter 5½ miles.

But the operations by the government should be confined to the river, in a way to benefit all interests, and not only a single enterprise; access by the river to property adjoining Hyde and Wolf lakes, as well as to Calumet, is needed, and it seems quite clear that our operations should have in view the construction of a main trunk line, from which special channels may be made in any direction by the parties interested in developing each particular locality.

Sketch No. 2 is attached to illustrate these features, and show the general relation which the main river bears to its branches and connecting lakes.

The best way to accomplish the work would be to build a dredging outfit adapted to the work in view, the special condition being that the excavated material may, without second handling, be deposited from the center of the channel to a position beyond the established dock-line, where it may then be utilized for filling up the marshes as desired.

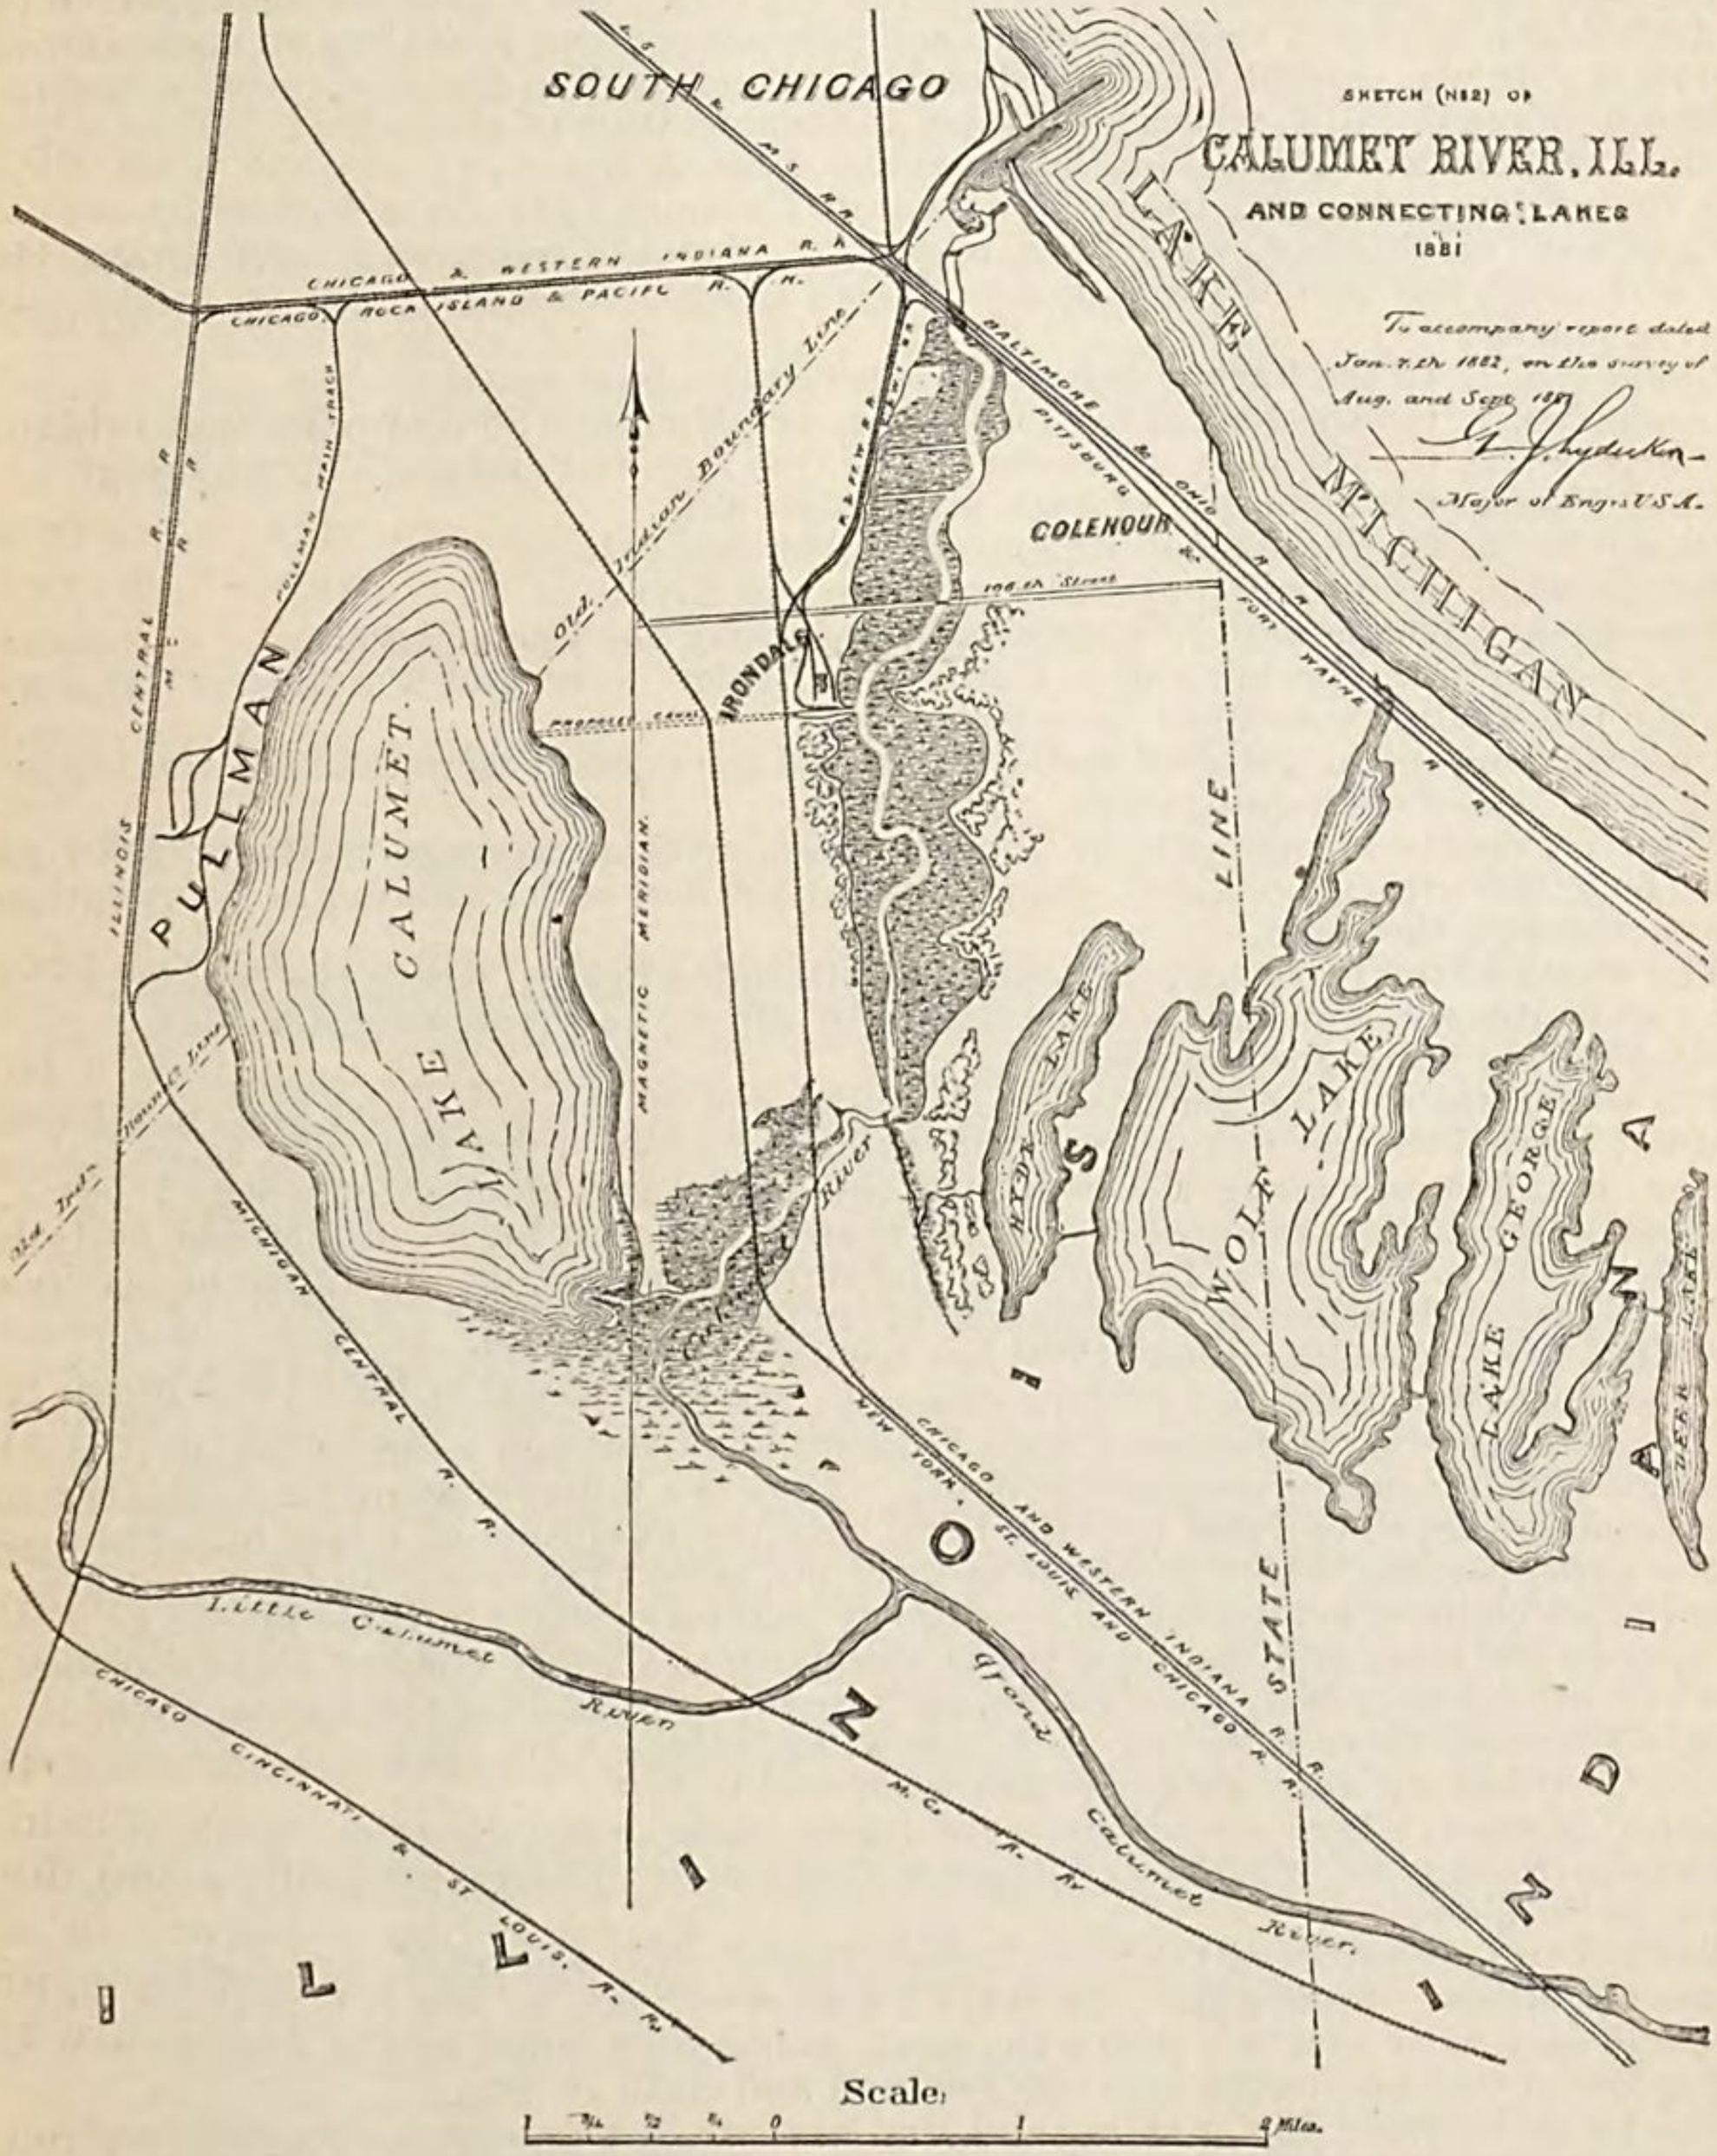
The cost of two such machines complete, would be $50,000; the annual cost of operating them, including current repairs, $25,000; assuming that with this plant the channel would be completed up to Lake Calumet in three years (and it could be completed in less time), the total cost of operating would be $75,000, making the aggregate cost of the improvement $125,000, and there would be left on hand a good plant for future work.

With the large amount of work of this character to be done in this vicinity, besides that required for the through channel, it is not likely that we could secure bids for doing it by contract, even with a considerable increase in the number of machines available in this district, for less than 25 cents per cubic yard, at which rate the aggregate cost would be 725,000 cubic yards, at 25 cents, $181,250.

This section of the river is crossed by six bridges, and two more are in course of construction; all of these, except those belonging to Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, Pittsburgh & Fort Wayne, and Baltimore & Ohio railways, are, as they stand, obstructions to navigation, and should be re-built or modified in a way to accommodate the commerce that will utilize the improved channel; even at the three bridges above mentioned the passage way is, in my opinion, too much contracted.

Before any work is done by the United States towards improving the river, I should deem it advisable to have a Board of Engineers consider and report upon a general plan, defining the limiting channel and dock lines, submit an opinion as to the conditions to be observed in the modification of existing bridges, or the construction of new ones, and recommend what legislation, if any, may be necessary to secure the maintenance of an unobstructed through navigation.

A report of the survey, by G. A. M. Liljencrantz, assistant-engineer, who conducted the field work and prepared the maps, is forwarded herewith; this report includes a detailed statement of the improvements in progress and projected, and other statistics tending to show the growing demands for an enlarged channel for commerce.



Two maps (tracings) are forwarded in a separate roll, viz: Sheet A, scale 1 inch = 1,000 feet, showing Calumet Lake, River, and Harbor, Hyde Lake, &c., &c. Sheet B, scale 1 inch = 150 feet, details showing soundings in harbor and river up to Lake Calumet, limits of channel on which estimate is based, principal cuts off, &c., &c.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. J. LYDECKER,
Major of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. H. G WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

REPORT OF MR. G. A. M. LILJENCRANTZ, ASSISTANT ENGINEER.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Chicago, Ill., December 13, 1881.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit herewith a report of the survey of Calumet River, Ill., from South Chicago to the village of Pullman, at the northwest end of Lake Calumet, made in compliance with an act of Congress approved March 3, 1881.

Operations were commenced on the 11th of August, and completed September 20, 1881.

It had been expected to accomplish the work in a shorter space of time, but the general inaccessibility of the shores from the navigable channel, and other topographical features of this locality, as well as loss of time by unfavorable weather, and by an accident to the transit instrument, &c., tended to delay the progress of the work.

It was found necessary to erect triangulation stations to a height of 10 feet above the ground on account of the slight elevation of the shores above the water level, and of the high growth of weeds in intermediate marshes.

Sounding stations were marked by 16 feet long stakes placed in pairs on either side of the channel, and their location determined by observations from the triangulation stations.

The base line was chosen between the Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railway tracks, and extending about 1,000 feet on each side of the river. It was carefully measured on the rails of each of the said railway tracks, which here run parallel, with a steel tape, at a temperature of about 70° F. The length of the base line (marked GH on the map) was 2,064.42 feet.

A line of levels was run from the harbor to Calumet Lake, by aid of which water gauges were established, with their respective planes of reference in the horizontal plane through the zero of the Calumet Harbor gauge. They were put up in the following places:

Gauge No. 1. In the harbor near the United States boat-house.
Gauge No. 2. On the dock at the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway bridge.
Gauge No. 3. On the west abutment of the One hundred and sixth street bridge.
Gauge No. 4. On inner end of dock in Irondale slip.
Gauge No. 5. On the west abutment of Chittenden Bridge.
Gauge No. 6. At junction of Calumet Lake and River.

Permanent "bench-marks" were established along the line of levels.

The gauges in the harbor and at Chittenden Bridge were read five times a day during the times when soundings were taken.

Observations on the velocity and directions of the current were taken at the beginning and close of each day's work.

The river consists practically of a broad marsh, with an average width of 2,000 to 3,000 feet, and with a navigable channel about 150 feet wide, winding in a serpentine course through the same.

The width of the marsh is contracted at Chittenden Bridge, where the channel runs for a short distance through meadow lands, of which, however, a considerable part is flooded during the high-water season.

The soundings were commenced at the outer end of the south pier in the Calumet Harbor, carried thence up the river and extended about 1,000 feet into Lake Calumet, a total distance along the center of the deep-water channel of nearly 7 miles. The soundings show a channel of not less than 12 feet (but for a considerable portion as much as 14 to 15 feet) as far up as to the slip at Irondale, or a distance of 3 miles and 1,000 feet. Further up is a channel of 10 feet, or more, for a distance of 2 miles and 1,000 feet, extending about 1,000 feet beyond Chittenden Bridge, thence an 8-foot channel 3,600 feet long and a 7-foot channel 2,300 feet in length, or to the so-called fork, where the river is connected with Lake Calumet through a somewhat contracted passage, which is rather irregular in depth. Here is a 6-foot channel for a distance of 600 feet and a depth of 5 feet into the lake, with the exception of a few hundred feet of the upper portion, which has some spots of not more than from 3 to 4 feet of water. The 10-foot channel is interrupted by slightly shallower water in three places, as may be seen on the map, and the same is the case with the 8-foot channel in two places. There is otherwise a clear channel, uninterrupted by bars, from the harbor up to the fork. The main river above the fork, where soundings were taken for a distance of about 1,000 feet up, shows a good channel of 8 to 10 feet.

Lake Calumet, where soundings were taken under your direction by the undersigned, in November, 1878, has an average depth of 5½ to 6 feet, gradually decreasing towards the shore.

The general character of the river bottom is sand with a cover of mud wherever the water is shallow. Stones and clay were found occasionally, and it is probable that layers of clay exist as a rule below the sand, as has been found by the dredges working between One hundredth and One hundred and sixth streets.

The limits between the marshes and dry land are in most cases very indefinite, on account of the very slight slope of the ground. This is more particularly the case in the neighborhood of Calumet Lake, where it was very difficult to select firm and accessible ground on which to establish triangulation stations; hence triangles could not be secured here as favorable as desired.

The current in the river was very variable, both in regard to direction and velocity. It was found to be governed to a great extent by the prevailing winds; a southerly or southeasterly wind causing a rapid current down stream, or into Lake Michigan, and a northerly or northwesterly a current in the opposite direction. The down-stream current is, however, the prevailing one.

The observations were taken at points wherever the work of the sounding party commenced or closed for the day, and consequently at channel sections of different dimensions. The greatest velocity obtained down stream was 75 feet per minute; the smallest was, no current; average of all down-stream velocities was 26.3 feet per minute.

The greatest up-stream velocity was 9.1 feet per minute.

The river in the limits of the survey is at present crossed by six swing bridges, viz:

One wagon-road bridge at Ninty fifth street.

Three railroad bridges, for the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, and the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Railway.

One wagon-road bridge at One hundred and sixth street, and one wagon-road at Chittenden Bridge, about 5¼ miles from the Calumet Harbor.

Two railroad bridges are being built above this place; one where the Chicago and Western Indiana Railway crosses the river, and the other at the crossing of the New York, Saint Louis and Chicago Railway, 6 miles from the harbor.

These two roads are in process of construction. Piles have been driven for both the bridges. The construction of an additional wagon bridge at One hundredth street is contemplated, bnt not as yet definitely decided upon.

Arrivals and clearances in the Calumet Harbor during the season, as kindly furnished by the special deputy collector, J. W. Hill, of Chicago, are:

	Arrivals.		Clearances.
	Number.	Tonnage.	Number.	Tonnage.
Steam	105	89, 157	90	78, 259
Sail	290	92, 355	300	84, 104
Totals	395	181 512	390	162, 363

The traffic up the river during past season is shown by following approximately correct figures, furnished by Mr. C. McLennan, engineer of Hyde Park Village:

One hundred vessels passed beyond One hundred and sixth street bridge to Irondale; fifty vessels passed beyond Chittenden street bridge to Hammond; twenty-eight vessels passed beyond Chittenden street bridge to Riverdale; besides a number of scows, dredges, and pile-drivers for the different works up the river.

Hammond is a village on the "Grand Calumet" River, with pork packing and rendering establishments, several ice-houses, &c. The village of Riverdale, with some prominent lumber yards, ice-houses, &c., is located on the "Little Calumet" River. The junction of these two rivers, forming the "Calumet River", is about 1¼ miles above the fork, before spoken of.

The real estate adjoining the river banks has in later years increased considerably in value, and various improvements have been made in the interest of manufacture and commerce, by way of building mills and factories, docks and slips, filling up marshes for creating additional land, &c. Other enterprises are contemplated.

The village of South Chicago, at the mouth of Calumet River, with a population of 1,961, according to census of 1881, has grown very rapidly, owing largely to the improvements of the Calumet Harbor by the United States Government, for which has been appropriated by acts of Congress up to date the amount of $327,000. The first appropriation of $50,000 was made July 11, 1870. The most prominent enterprises here are:

The "North Chicago Rolling Mill Company's" works, on the shore of Lake Michigan, and north of the harbor entrance. These works are built for the manufacture of pig iron and Bessemer steel rails, and when quite complete are expected to yield an annual production of 200,000 tons of pig metal and 170,000 tons of Bessemer steel rails.

For the manufacture of the above will be required:

250,000 tons of fuel (coal and coke.)
120,000 tons of limestone.
15,000 tons of spiegeleisen.
3,000 tons of quartz.

About the following part of the above amounts must be brought by water during the season of navigation:

350,000 tons of iron ore.
50,000 tons of coal.
30,000 tons of limestone.
3,000 tons of quartz.

The entire amount to be handled on the property, counting the hauling of raw materials and finished products, is estimated at 4,000 tons per diem. The company has built a slip 100 feet wide by 1,000 feet long in a northerly direction from the harbor.

Next westward along the river is the Langdon, Richardson & Co.'s coal yard, with exceptional facilities for a time and labor-saving handling of their coal. Over 16,000 tons were here received during the months of August, September, and October last.

Adjoining this coal yard is the Getty, Blanchard & Co.'s lumber yard, with about 620 feet of dock frontage.

The firm received during the season a total amount of 10,000,000 feet, board measure, of lumber of different grades and dimensions.

Next in order comes A. R. Beck & Co.'s lumber yard (formerly South Chicago Lumber Company). Fifty-seven cargoes were received during the season up to December 5, and following amounts had in that time been handled by sales:

11,000,000 feet, board measure, lumber.
3,146,000 shingles.
2,600,000 lath.

The business is principally local.

At G. B. Hannah's lumber yard, seventeen cargoes were received, containing:

1,566,939 feet, board measure, lumber.
843,000 shingles.
343,000 lath.

The "Duffy Tool Company" is located near the Ninety-fifth street bridge.

On the corner of Ninety-fifth street and Escanaba avenue is the "Robert Atchison's Perforated Metal Company," with foundry and machinery for the manufacture of perforated metal for screens, &c., and of mantels and grates.

The business is valued at about $50,000 per annum. The pig-iron and sheet-metal used is brought from Ohio.

Besides the above mentioned, there are a number of other mills, factories, and business firms, &c., in the village, which, being either of less importance or located at some distance from the river, have not been regarded as requiring a special mention in this report.

The village has also post-office, bank, telegraph, and express offices, schools, churches, stores, &c.

On the south side of the river, and west of the old outlet, is a tract of land which, from want of dockage to protect it against the actions of current and sea, has decreased considerably in area, to the detriment of the navigable channel, which has been reduced accordingly both in width and depth.

Great improvements are, however, here projected; and operations are confidently expected to commence in 1882, though bargains have not as yet been definitely closed.

The general plan is the location of a number of the most prominent eastern coal companies, which propose to build docks and slips, and erect the best possible machinery and appliances for transferring their coal from the loaded vessels to railroad cars, which, on numerous local tracks, will be connected with the main lines of the Chicago Belt Railroad, west of the river, by tracks along Ninety-fifth street.

The "Anglo-American Dock Company" of Brooklyn, N. Y., are also negotiating for dock property here, for the building of coal vessels.

On the west side of the river, and between the Pittsburgh & Fort Wayne Railway in the north, and One hundred and sixth street in the south, considerable work of improvement has been done and is still progressing. The following enterprises will be found on this side of the river going southward:

The "Chicago Car-Axle Company," manufacturing locomotives and car axles, engine and mill shaftings, shape-work, &c. The firm employs about 100 hands. Business is estimated at about $400,000 per annum. About 500 tons of scrap is handled per month.

The "Willard Sons and Bell's Forge Works" are of the same character as the preceding, viz, car axles, mill, and boat shafting, &c. Their buildings have been erected quite recently, and their works moved down from Chicago. A slip is being constructed, 50 feet by 1,400 feet, to connect their works with the river. About 15,000 tons of iron are handled at their works per annum, for which is used 10,000 to 15,000 tons of coal, brought by water. The company's annual business is estimated at about $600,000, and is still to be greatly enlarged. They employ 400 hands.

The "Washington Ice Company" have commenced the construction of a basin, about 40 acres in area, by removing the vegetation and enclosing it by an earth dam. Its southerly limit is on One hundredth street.

Between One hundredth and One hundred and sixth streets, the "South Chicago Dock Company" are making extensive improvements, consisting in docking the west bank of the river channel, in the construction of four slips (two of which are now completed), with an aggregate dock frontage of about 14,600 linear feet of railroad tracks between the slips, and of a system of switch and side tracks along the westerly limit of this tract

On the east side of the river, opposite Washington Ice Company's basin, are "Shedd & Company's" ice houses, with a capacity of 20,000 tons of ice. Two thousand feet further south is Cohn's ice house, originally designed for a rolling mill; it is a structure of large dimensions but at present not used. East of these ice houses, and north of One hundred and sixth street, is the village of Colehour. This is a small place consisting principally of dwellings, and is of no present commercial importance, having only a few small factories, supplying the local demands. It has, however, a post office, two public schools, churches, &c. The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, the Baltimore & Ohio, and the Pittsburgh & Fort Wayne railroads pass through the village, and have depots here. The population, according to census of 1880, was 1,098.

South of One hundred and sixth street, and west of the river, is the village of Irondale, with the "Calumet Iron and Steel Companies'" (formerly the J. H. Brown's Iron and Steel Co.) grounds and works for the manufacture of pig metal, merchant bar iron and nails. The extent of business done here is represented by the following list of materials used per annum:

Iron ore (by water from Escanaba)	50,000 tons.
Coal (mostly from Indiana)	65,000 tons.
Coke (from Pittsburgh, Pa.)	40,000 tons.
Limestone (by water)	25,000 tons.
Pig iron (by water)	10,000 tons.
Miscellaneous freight (by water)	20,000 tons.

The annual production is:

Pig iron	40,000 tons.
Bar iron	30,000 tons.
Nails	300,000 kegs.

The capacity of the works is to be greatly increased during the coming season.

The village is as yet in its infancy, with a population, according to census of 1880, of 926, mostly employés at the mill. There is a fourth class post-office, a few stores, and small hotels. The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, and Western Indiana railroads run through the place, and are by side tracks connected with the steel works. A slip has been made in a westerly direction from the river, at the south limit of the mill property for receiving cargoes by water. Its projected dimensions are 100 feet wide by 1,400 feet long, but docking is as yet only made on the north side of the slip for a distance of about 1,000 feet.

It is proposed to build by extending this slip westward, a ship-canal by which to make a short and direct connection between the river and Lake Calumet, opposite Pullman.

No further manufacturing enterprises are as yet established further up the river, within the limits of this survey.

On the southwest end of Lake Calumet is J. P. Smith's ice house. This was burned down on the 10th of August last, but is being rebuilt; its capacity is 45,000 tons of ice.

On the northwesterly shore of Lake Calumet is the lately organized, but rapidly progressing village of Pullman, located on the property of the "Pullman Land Association" (the work of actual construction commenced May 25, 1880).

This is quite an ideal town, there being probably nothing of the kind like it on the continent. Only stone and brick buildings are made, and these of the best kind, both in regard to quality and architectural taste. The village has its own gas and water works, and an excellent system of sewerage. It is designed for a manufacturing town, and works of immense proportions are already established and in active operation. (All the machinery in town receive their power from the great Centennial Corliss engine, rated at 2,500 horse power.)

The names and extent of business of the most prominent of the works are—

1. The "Pullman Palace Car Company." The estimated annual revenue for this company is reported as follows:

Building of 313 coaches, at $5,500	$1,721,500
Building of 7,125 freight cars, at $550	4,303,750
Rentals from dwellings, water, and sewage	250,000
Railroad earnings	40,000
20,000,000 bricks	200,000
27,000,000 gas	54,000
Total annual revenue	6,569,250

2. The "Allen Paper Car Wheel Company" is expected to manufacture, during the ensuing year, 20,000 paper car wheels valued at $1,400,000.

3. "Union Foundry" and "Pullman Palace Car Wheel Company."

The foundry, when completed, will employ about 450 men and turn out 160 tons of iron per day. The machine and blacksmith shops will employ about 300 men, and the work expected to be done here is valued at $400,000 per annum.

4. "Chicago Steel Horseshoe Company" is also an enterprise of some magnitude, but the extent of their business has not been ascertained.

The "Pullman Land Association" owns about 3,000 acres of land, along the west shore of Lake Calumet, and its business is to build houses and public buildings for the mechanics connected with the various industries. About $200,000 have already been expended, and it is the purpose of the association to expend about $1,000,000 during the ensuing year.

The Illinois Central and the Michigan Central railroads run through the heart of the village, where they have passenger and freight depots.

The Pullman main track connects the various works with the South Chicago Branch of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway, which runs east and west at the northerly limit of the present town, and parallel with the South Chicago Branch of the Western Indiana Railway.

For a lengthy description of this place, I would respectfully refer to an interesting illustrated article, published in No. 107, vol. 9, of the "Western Manufacturer."

Details of grounds and buildings and data indicating the extent and character of the enterprises referred to in this report, have been kindly furnished by the respective officials.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. A. M. LILJENCRANTZ,
Assistant Engineer.

LETTER OF MAJOR G. J. LYDECKER, CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
CHICAGO, ILL., January 13, 1882.

GENERAL: My report on the survey of the Calumet River, dated January 7, 1882, is forwarded to-day, having been withheld pending the completion of maps, and I am so impressed with the importance of fixing, by timely legislation, the conditions that should be observed if the United States undertakes the work of improving this river, as to venture the suggestion that, if any appropriation be made, such part of the bill as relates to this work may read somewhat as follows:

> For improving the Calumet River, Illinois, from its mouth to the fork at Lake Calumet, $—: Provided, That all expenditures for this purpose shall be limited to perfecting and maintaining a channel for through navigation, adapted to the passage of the largest vessels navigating the northern and northwestern lakes; that before any work be done, the limiting lines of channel to be improved by the United States, and of docks that may be constructed by private individuals, corporations or other parties, shall have been clearly defined under the directions of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, with the approval of the honorable Secretary of War, who, is requested, to report what legislation, if any, is needed to prevent encroachments being made or maintained within the limits of the channel designed as aforesaid.

I am aware that such course is unusual, but so are the conditions with which we have to deal in the present case. The improved channel will become a passage-way, bordered by an extensive and continuous system of docks and slips, just as the Chicago River with its branches now is; and, in order to avoid the continual blockades to which commerce is here liable, the work should be started on a proper basis. It would become a subject of lasting trouble and regret if the mistakes made in opening up the Chicago River to commerce should be repeated on the Calumet.

So long as the government assumes the responsibility of making and maintaining the improvement, it should see that its value is not impaired. To prevent parties from willfully encroaching upon or obstructing the channel-way, some provision should be made by which the offender may be subjected to a summary penalty, without the annoyance and loss of time incident to judicial proceedings under the general law.

It would seem that the better way to reach such cases would be to authorize the Secretary of War to promulgate such regulations as are necessary to keep the channel open, and provide by law a suitable penalty for their violation, as in the case of violation of the navigation rules; for example, a penalty of $100, or even $50, for each offense, to be levied by the officer in charge of the improvement, the United States commissioner, or other designated officer, and make the penalty a lien on the offending craft, with authority to proceed against her as in libel in the United States district courts.

The purpose of this letter, however, is not to recommend what the penalty shall be, but to urge the passage of such a law as will provide a certain and efficient one.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. J. LYDECKER,
Major of Engineers.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING,

In further compliance with Senate resolution of December 12, 1881, the remainder of the correspondence touching the desired modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

JANUARY 27, 1882.—Read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

In further answer to the resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1881, I herewith transmit the remainder of the correspondence touching the desired modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The dispatch of the Secretary of State of November 29, 1881, was not sent to the Senate with the former dispatches, because at that time no advice had been received that its contents had been communicated to the British Government.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 27, 1882.

List of inclosures.

1. Mr. Hoppin to Mr. Blaine. No. 218. London, November 11, 1881 (with inclosure).
2. Mr. Blaine to Mr. Lowell. No. 281. Washington, November 29, 1881.
3. Mr. Lowell to Mr. Blaine. No. 266. London, December 15, 1881.
4. Mr. Lowell to Mr. Blaine. No. 277. London, December 27, 1881.

No. 1.

Mr. Hoppin to Mr. Blaine.

No. 218.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 11, 1881. (Received November 26, 1881.)

SIR: Referring to your instructions No. 187, of the 24th of June last, and No. 188, of the 25th of June last, to Mr. Lowell, in relation to the proposed guarantee by European powers of the neutrality of the projected canal across the Isthmus of Panama, I have the honor to acquaint you that Mr. Lowell, agreeably to the suggestion in No. 187, left a copy of that instruction at the foreign office on the 12th of July last. I have to-day received a letter from Lord Granville in reply to that instruction, and I beg to inclose a copy of the same herewith.

I have, &c.,

W. J. HOPPIN.

[Inclosure with No. 1.]

Lord Granville to Mr. Hoppin.

FOREIGN OFFICE, November 10, 1881.

SIR: You are doubtless aware that Mr. Lowell left with this department on the 12th of July last a copy of a dispatch which had been addressed to him by Mr. Blaine on the 24th of June, in which the Secretary of State calls attention to the right and duty which are imposed on the United States Government under the treaty signed in 1846 between the United States of America and the Republic of New Granada, now known as the United States of Colombia, to guarantee the neutrality of the interoceanic canal which is projected across the Isthmus of Panama. Mr. Blaine further points out the special interest which the United States have in the preservation of this neutrality, and in preventing the use of the canal in a manner detrimental to themselves during any war in which the United States or Colombia might be a party.

But the point on which especial stress is laid in this dispatch is the objection entertained by the Government of the United States to any concerted action of the European powers for the purpose of guaranteeing the neutrality of the canal or determining the conditions of its use.

I have now the honor to state to you that although some time has elapsed since the views of the United States Government on this question were communicated to Her Majesty's Government, they have not failed in the meanwhile to bestow upon it all the consideration to which the importance of the subject gives it every claim, and if it has not received an earlier recognition the delay has been mainly caused by the suspense which so long existed as to the termination of the sad tragedy of the 2d of July.

Her Majesty's Government have noted with satisfaction the statement made by Mr. Blaine that there is no intention on the part of the Government of the United States to initiate any discussion upon this subject, and in the same spirit I do not now propose to enter into a detailed argument in reply to Mr. Blaine's observations.

I should wish, therefore, merely to point out to you that the position of Great Britain and the United States with reference to the canal, irrespective of the magnitude of the commercial relations of the former power with countries to and from which, if completed, it will form the highway, is determined by the engagements entered into by them, respectively, in the convention which was signed at Washington on the 19th day of April, 1850, commonly known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and Her Majesty's Government rely with confidence upon the observance of all the engagements of that treaty.

I have, &c.,

GRANVILLE.

No. 2.

Mr. Blaine to Mr. Lowell.

No. 281.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 29, 1881.

SIR: One week after mailing my instruction to you, on the 19th instant, touching the presentation to Her Majesty's Government of a proposal for the modification of the convention between the two countries of April 19, 1850, better known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, I received Mr. Hoppin's No. 218, of the 11th instant, communicating the response of Lord Granville to my circular note of the 24th of June last, in relation to the neutrality of any canal across the Isthmus of Panama. I regret that Mr. Hoppin should not have advised me by telegraph of the purport of his lordship's reply, as it would have enabled me to present the arguments of my dispatch of the 19th instant in a more specific form, as meeting a positive issue, rather than as generally dealing with a subject, which for thirty years has been regarded in but one light by the public opinion of the United States. It seems proper now, however, in reply to his lordship's note of November 10, to give a summary of the historical objections to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the very decided differences of opinion between the two governments to which its interpretation has given rise.

I need hardly point out to you the well-known circumstance that, even at the time of the conclusion of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, a very considerable opposition was shown thereto on the part of the far-sighted men in public life who correctly estimated the complications which the uncertain terms of that compact might occasion. It was ably contended in Congress that its provisions did not, even then, suffice to meet the real points at issue with respect to the guarantee of the neutrality of the whole American isthmus on bases comporting with the national interests of the United States, and the differences of interpretation became soon after so marked as to warrant the extreme proposal of Her Majesty's Government to refer them to the arbitration of a friendly power.

The justice of those doubts became still more evident six years later, when the pretensions put forth by Her Majesty's Government toward territorial protection, if not absolute control, of portions of Nicaragua and of the outlying Bay Islands brought up the precise question of how far the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer contract operated to restrain the projected movement, and thereupon the interpretations respectively put upon that instrument by the United States and Great Britain were perceived to be in open conflict. The attempt made in the Clarendon-Dallas treaty, which was negotiated on the 17th of October, 1856, to reconcile these opposing contentions and place the absolute and independent sovereignty of Nicaragua over its territory on an unmistakable footing, so far as the United States and Great Britain were concerned, failed to be completed by reason of the rejection by Her Majesty's Government of an amendment introduced by the Senate into the Clarendon-Dallas project. From that time onward the inability of the two governments to agree upon a common interpretation of the letter and spirit of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty may be accepted as a historical fact.

In the discussions between the two governments which attended the failure of the Clarendon-Dallas treaty the attitude of the United States with respect to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was amply defined. As early as the 12th of March, 1857, I find that General Cass, then Secretary of State, in the course of a conference with Lord Napier, Her Majesty's representative, > Passed some reflections on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; he had voted for it, and in doing so he believed that it abrogated all intervention on the part of England in the Central American territory. The British Government had put a different construction on the treaty, and he regretted the vote he had given in its favor. (Dispatch of Lord Napier to the Earl of Clarendon, March 12, 1857.

On the 6th of May, 1857, President Buchanan, in an audience given to Lord Napier, and in response to his lordship's suggestion that if the attempted adjustment of the difference between the governments as to the Clarendon-Dallas treaty should fail, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty remained to fall back upon, characterized that instrument in much stronger terms than General Cass had done. To quote Lord Napier's words:

> The President denounced the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as one which had been fraught with misunderstanding and mischief from the beginning. It was concluded under the most opposite constructions by the contracting parties. If the Senate had imagined that it could obtain the interpretation placed upon it by Great Britain it would not have passed. If he had been in the Senate at the time that treaty never would have been sanctioned. (Dispatch of Lord Napier to the Earl of Clarendon, May 6, 1857.)

These views are more explicitly and formally repeated in a note addressed by Secretary Cass to Lord Napier on the 29th of May, 1857. He says:

> The Clayton-Bulwer treaty, concluded in the hope that it would put an end to the differences which had arisen between the United States and Great Britain concerning Central American affairs, had been rendered inoperative in some of its most essential provisions by the different constructions which had been reciprocally given to it by the parties. And little is hazarded in saying that, had the interpretation since put upon the treaty by the British Government, and yet maintained, been anticipated, it would not have been negotiated under the instructions of any Executive of the United States nor ratified by the branch of the government intrusted with the power of ratification

The publicity of these statements, and the strong feeling which then prevailed in all quarters that the Clayton-Bulwer convention was inadequate to reconcile the opposite views of Great Britain and the United States towards Central America, led to a very decided conviction that the treaty should be abrogated. Lord Napier reflected this growing impression when, on the 22d of June, 1857, he wrote to Lord Clarendon that—

> It is probable that if the pending discussions regarding Central America be not closed during the present summer, an attempt will be made in the next session of Congress to set aside the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. * * * There can be no doubt of the views of the President and Cabinet on this matter.

Before this tendency could, however, find its expression in any official act, a movement on the part of Her Majesty's Government placed the whole matter in a new aspect. Sir William Gore Ouseley was sent out, October 30, 1857, as a special minister, with the double purpose of concluding with the Central American States, and especially with Guatemala and Honduras, settlements of the questions relative to the Bay Islands, the Mosquito territory, and the boundaries of British Honduras, and also of visiting Washington on the way, and conferring with the Secretary of State of the United States for the purpose of ascertaining the views of his government, and establishing "a perfect understanding with the United States upon the points respecting which differences have hitherto existed between the two countries."

Among these differences was now superadded to the territorial question of Mosquito and the islands, the very question which to-day most concerns us, the question of interoceanic communication, which had for some time been the occasion of correspondence between General Cass and Lord Napier, and in relation to which General Cass wrote, on the 20th of October, 1857, as follows:

> I have thus endeavored to meet the frank suggestions of your lordship by restating with corresponding frankness the general policy of the United States with respect to the governments and the interoceanic transits of Central America. But since your lordship has referred to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, as contemplating a "harmonious course of action and counsel between the contracting parties in the settlement of Central American interests," you will pardon me for reminding your lordship that the differences which this treaty was intended to adjust between the United States and Great Britain still remain unsettled, while the treaty itself has become the subject of new and embarrassing complications.

Prior to the arrival of Sir William Ouseley in the United States Lord Napier held an important interview with President Buchanan on the 19th of October, 1857, with the object of obtaining "further elucidation of the opinions of the President with reference to the adjustment of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty." On that occasion Lord Napier declared that he believed it the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in Sir William Ouseley's mission, "to carry the Clayton-Bulwer treaty into execution according to the general tenor of the interpretation put upon it by the United States; but to do so by separate negotiation with the Central American Republics, in lieu of a direct engagement with the Federal Government," and asked that, pending the negotiation intrusted to Sir William Ouseley, "no proposal to annul the [Clayton-Bulwer] treaty would be sanctioned or encouraged" by the President or the members of the United States Government. To this the President cheerfully consented, and promised to modify the statements in his annual message to Congress accordingly and under no circumstances to countenance any attempt against the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in Congress.

Matters being in this state, with Sir William Ouseley's mission announced, and the benevolently expectant attitude of the United States toward it assured, Lord Napier, on the 28th of October, 1857, in conference with General Cass, brought up contingently, as a discarded alternative of his government, a former proposal to refer the disputed questions to arbitration.

The general remarked in reply [says Lord Napier, writing to the Earl of Clarendon]:

> That he did not repudiate the principle of arbitration on all occasions; he had invoked it, and would do so again where it seemed justly applicable, but that in this matter it was declined by the American Government for the following reasons: The language of the treaty was so clear, that in his opinion there ought not to be two opinions about it. * * * Then it was a mere question of the interpretation of the English language, and he held that a foreign government was not so competent to decide in such a question as the United States and England, who possessed that language in common.

The Earl of Clarendon, in reply, approved of Lord Napier's course in broaching anew the suggestions of arbitration, and authorized him to renew formally in writing the offer to refer the disputed questions arising out of the interpretations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to the decision of any European power (instruction of November 13, 1857), and this was accordingly done by Lord Napier in a note to General Cass dated November 30, 1857.

In his annual message to Congress in December, 1857, President Buchanan, after narrating the negotiation and failure of the Clarendon-Dallas treaty, said:

> The fact is, that when two nations like Great Britain and the United States, mutually desirous as they are, and I trust ever may be, of maintaining the most friendly relations with each other, have unfortunately concluded a treaty which they understand in senses directly opposite, the wisest course is to abrogate such a treaty by mutual consent and to commence anew. * * * Whilst entertaining these sentiments, I shall nevertheless not refuse to contribute to any reasonable adjustment of the Central American questions which is not practically inconsistent with the American interpretation of the treaty. Overtures for this purpose have been recently made by the British Government in a friendly spirit, which I cordially reciprocate.

Meanwhile the Earl of Clarendon had instructed Sir William Ouseley, under date of November 19, 1857, "not to commit Her Majesty's Government to any course whatever in respect to the Bay Islands till the intentions of the Congress of the United States in regard to the treaty of 1850 are clearly ascertained."

The situation, then, at the close of 1857 presented a triple dead-lock.

The United States had agreed not to move toward the abrogation of the treaty until it could be seen what interpretation of its provisions would result from Sir William Ouseley's mission. Sir William had received positive instructions not to move until the United States should decide whether to abrogate the treaty or not, and Lord Napier was forbidden to move until the United States should make formal answer to the proposal for arbitration. The instructions of Lord Clarendon to Lord Napier, January 22, 1858, contained these words:

> We are decidedly of opinion that it would neither be consistent with our dignity or our interest to make any proposal to the United States Government until we have received a formal answer to our formal offer of arbitration. In event of the offer being refused, it will be a great and hardly justifiable proof of the spirit of conciliation by which we are animated if we then show ourselves disposed to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; but we must not be in too great haste.

In order, apparently, to break this dead-lock, Lord Napier wrote to General Cass, February 17, 1858, that—> Something in the nature of an alternative was thus offered to the American Cabinet. Should the expedient of arbitration be adopted a great portion of Sir William Ouseley's duty would be transferred to other agencies. Should arbitration be declined, it was hoped that the efforts of Her Majesty's envoy would result in a settlement agreeable to the United States, inasmuch as in essential points it would carry the treaty of 1850 into operation in a manner practically conformable to the American interpretation of that instrument.

On the 10th of March, 1858, the Earl of Malmesbury, who had succeeded Lord Clarendon in the foreign office, instructed Lord Napier that until an answer was returned to the proposal for arbitration "no further steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government with that of the United States in regard to that matter"; and, further, that—

> When this point is cleared up, Her Majesty's Government, supposing that the Government of the United States decline arbitration, will have to determine whether they should originate a proposal for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or adopt any other course which the circumstances at the moment may seem to recommend.

It appears, however, that the proposal to abrogate the treaty which Lord Malmesbury reserved the right to originate had already been communicated to the Government of the United States by Lord Napier, under instructions from Lord Clarendon. In a dispatch dated March 22, 1858, Lord Napier wrote:

> The Earl of Clarendon authorized me to inform General Cass that Her Majesty's Government would not decline the consideration of a proposal for the abrogation of the treaty by mutual concert. * * * I have accordingly, on two occasions, informed General Cass that if the Government of the United States be still of the same mind, and continue to desire the abrogation of the treaty of 1850, it would be agreeable to Her Majesty's Government that they should insert a proposal to that effect in their reply to my note respecting arbitration.

Lord Napier further reports in detail the conversations had with General Cass as to the most proper method of effecting such abrogation, if agreed to.

In reply to this dispatch of Lord Napier, the Earl of Malmesbury instructed him, April 8, 1858, that his action was approved, and that he should confine himself to pressing for an answer to his proposal for arbitration. His lordship added these significant words:

> Her Majesty's Government, if the initiative is still left to them by the unwillingness of the United States themselves to propose abrogation, desire to retain full liberty as to the manner and form in which any such proposal shall be laid on their behalf before the Cabinet at Washington. * * * The Clayton-Bulwer treaty has been a source of unceasing embarrassment to this country, and Her Majesty's Government, if they should be so fortunate as to extricate themselves from the difficulties which have resulted from it, will not involve themselves, directly or indirectly, in any similar difficulties for the future.

The answer of General Cass to Lord Napier's several proposals was, briefly, to the effect that pending the results expected from Sir William

Ouseley's mission to the Central American States the United States could not adopt the alternative of arbitration, "even if it had not been twice rejected before," and, that, if

> The President does not hasten to consider now the alternative of repealing the treaty of 1850, it is because he does not wish prematurely to anticipate the failure of Sir William Ouseley's mission, and is disposed to give a new proof to Her Majesty's Government of his sincere desire to preserve the amicable relations which now happily subsist between the two countries. (General Cass to Lord Napier, April 6, 1858.)

In this posture of affairs the Earl of Malmesbury instructed Sir William Ouseley to open direct negotiations with the Central American States, and on the 18th of August instructed Lord Napier to inform the Government of the United States of the intentions and object of Her Majesty's Government in the premises. His lordship added:

> Modification, arbitration, and abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty have been flatly rejected [the italics are my own]. Great Britain and Nicaragua are now about to treat as independent States.

I have emphasized the phrase "flatly rejected" in view of a subsequent instruction of the Earl of Malmesbury to Lord Napier on the 8th of December, 1858, wherein he said:

> I think you would have done better if you had not too pointedly brought before the United States Government the notion that the British Government might view with favor a proposal to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

It is not difficult, in following this narrative, to discern that General Cass, though not desiring to express it, had an additional motive for declining at that particular time to propose the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. He did not desire by such proposed abrogation to indicate his willingness that Sir William Gore Ouseley should make treaties with the separate States of Central America, unrestrained by the clauses of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, inhibiting the extension of British power in that region. General Cass, with his accustomed caution and wisdom, clearly perceived that for the United States to propose abrogation on the very eve of Sir William Ouseley's mission would lead to injurious inferences, and would imply conclusions which the United States was not prepared to admit.

Objectionable as General Cass thought the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, he thought it was better than giving the implied consent of this government that Great Britain should obtain such treaties as the force of her power might secure in Central America.

The subsequent note of Lord Malmesbury, not strained by an uncharitable construction, throws additional light on the subject, and confirms the wisdom of General Cass in declining to propose abrogation at that time. And, besides, General Cass evidently desired to retain those very clauses of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to which, in my dispatch of the 19th, I proposed on the part of this government to adhere.

I have dwelt with somewhat of detail on this particular historic episode, partly because it admirably illustrates the spirit with which both governments have regarded the Clayton-Bulwer treaty from the first, and partly because it had more direct bearing on the question of the guarantee of any isthmian transit than any other discussion of the time. In perusing the voluminous correspondence, unprinted as well as that printed and submitted at the time to Congress and to Parliament, I am more than ever struck by the elastic character of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the admirable purpose it has served as an ultimate recourse on the part of either government to check apprehended designs in Central America on the part of the other; although all the while it was frankly admitted on both sides that the engagements of the treaty were misunderstandingly entered into, imperfectly comprehended, contradictorily interpreted, and mutually vexatious.

I am, as I must confess, strengthened in this impression by the circumstance that, in his response to my dispatch of the 24th of June last, Earl Granville takes the ground that the position of Great Britain and the United States toward the projected Panama Canal is determined by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. It does not seem likely to become a subject for discussion how far the engagements of that compact in reality extend to the Isthmus of Panama under the provisions of Article VIII thereof, in the same precise sense in which they extend to the projected Nicaraguan transit.

For it will be observed that this article does not stretch the guarantees and restrictions of Article I over either the Tehauntepec route through Mexican territory, or the Panama route through Colombian territory. It is in terms an agreement to extend the protection of both countries, by treaty stipulations, to those or any other practicable waterways or railways, from ocean to ocean, across the isthmus, outside of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America. So far as this inchoate agreement to hereafter agree is applicable to the Panama transit, I have amply shown, in my No. 270 of the 19th instant, that the obligations embraced on the part of the United States in concluding the prior convention with the Republic of New Granada (now Colombia) in 1846 require that the United States should be freed from unequal and unequitable obligations to Great Britain under the vague and, as yet, unperfected compact of 1850.

My main object in writing this instruction has been to strengthen your hands in any discussion which may now ensue as to the benefits of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the mutual interest of the two countries in conserving it as the basis of a settlement of all disputes between them touching Central American and isthmian questions. It will be seen that, from the time of its conclusion in 1850 until the end of 1858, its provisions were thrice made the basis of a proposal to arbitrate as to their meaning, that modification and abrogation have been alike contingently considered, and that its vexatious and imperfect character has been repeatedly recognized on both sides. The present proposal of this government is to free it from those embarrassing features, and leave it as its framers intended it should be, a full and perfect settlement, for all time, of all possible issues between the United States and Great Britain with regard to Central America.

If in your conferences with Earl Granville it should seem necessary, you will make free use of the precedents I have cited, and should you, within the discretionary limits confided at the end of my number 270, have given a copy thereof to His Lordship, you are equally at liberty to let him have a copy of this also, with the same explanation that it is for your use, and not written as a formal note for communication to Her Majesty's Government.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

London, December 15, 1881. (Received December 29.)

SIR: I have the honor to acquaint you that on the 13th instant I had an interview with Lord Granville at the foreign office, and communicated to him the substance of your instruction No. 270, of the 19th ultimo. I then, at his request, read it to him, beginning, however, with the concluding paragraph, for obvious reasons. At his desire I left a copy with him.

I though it wiser, in a matter of so much moment, that he should receive the views of the President as they were conveyed in the dispatch, rather than, perhaps, to weaken their force by communicating them in my own manner, as I was authorized by you to do.

Lord Granville listened with great attention, and merely said that he should reserve his answer.

London, December 27, 1881. (Received January 9.)

SIR: I have the honor to report that so soon as I received your insruction No. 281, the 29th ultimo, I addressed a private note to Lord Granville informing him of the fact, and asking him when it would be convenient for him to favor me with an interview. In his reply he asked me if I could come to see him at Walmer, where he was detained by the hospitalities of the Christmas season. Thinking it important that he should see the dispatch as soon as possible, because it was so nearly related to your No. 270, I accordingly went down to Walmer on the 23d instant. I there read the dispatch to him, and at his desire left a copy of it with him. I did not think it prudent or proper to enter upon any discussion with Lord Granville upon the general topics of the dispatch, but as some of the newspapers here had criticised it as untimely, I thought it not out of place to remind him that the policy of the United States had already been clearly indicated in a message to Congress by President Hayes, and more strongly reiterated in the same public manner by President Garfield.

Lord Granville was, as usual, exceedingly courteous and friendly, but made no remark except that the publication of No. 270, before an opportunity was given him of replying to it, "seemed, to him, to say the least, unusual."

MESSAGE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

Report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in further response to Senate resolution of December 12, 1881, respecting the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

FEBRUARY 17, 1882.—Read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 12th of December, 1881, respecting the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, I transmit herewith a further report by the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of papers, on the subject.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 17, 1882.

In further response to the resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1881, requesting the President to communicate to that body, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, the instructions sent to our minister in London in regard to the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, the Secretary of State has the honor to lay before the President two notes addressed by Earl Granville to Her Britannic Majesty's representative in the United States, dated, respectively, the 7th and 14th of January last.

Respectfully submitted.

FRED'K T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

The PRESIDENT.

Earl Granville to Mr. West.

FOREIGN OFFICE, January 7, 1882.

SIR: In my dispatch of the 13th ultimo I informed you that the United States minister at this court had communicated to me the substance of a dispatch which he had received from Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State, on the subject of the convention of the 19th April, 1850. Finding that Mr. Lowell was authorized to give me a copy of this dispatch if I wished it, I requested him to do so, and I have already forwarded to you a copy for your information.

Her Majesty's Government have given their careful consideration to the views set forth in this paper. They entirely agree in the statement made towards its conclusion as to the cordial relations so happily existing between the two countries, and as to the opportunity which this state of things affords for a frank exposition of the views held by either government without risk of misconstruction. They have no hesitation, therefore, in proceeding to examine the grounds advanced by Mr. Blaine for desiring a modification of the convention.

The principles upon which the whole argument of the dispatch is founded are, as far as I am aware, novel in international law. If a discussion of the subject on the abstract grounds of public right were deemed useful or opportune, it would not be difficult to quote passages from publicists of acknowledged authority in both countries in support of this opinion. But for several reasons it will be better to treat the matter from the side of the practical consideration which it involves, without, of course, being precluded from reverting at any future stage, in case of need, to its other aspect.

Her Majesty's Government cannot admit that the analogy which it is sought to draw from the conduct of Great Britain in regard to the Suez Canal is correct or justified by the facts. They have made no attempt to fortify the Island of Cyprus, or to establish it as an armed position on an important scale, though they have an undoubted right to do so. The fortress of Gibraltar, the Island of Malta, and the military establishment at Aden came into the possession of England at a date long anterior to the time when the Mediterranean and the Red Sea could be regarded as a military route to India. For years afterwards the whole mass of reinforcements for India was sent by way of the Cape of Good Hope. Nor has any serious addition been made to the strength of these positions since the opening of the canal beyond what has been a natural consequence of the improvements in military science. Although no doubt well adapted by its situation to command the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb, the Island of Perim has not in any real sense been made a fortified position. The fort and garrison on the island are, in fact, sufficient only to protect the light-house, which has been erected there for the general benefit of navigation from possible attack by predatory Arabs.

The Navy Department of the United States must be well aware that Her Majesty's Government have never sought to bar or even to restrict the use of the canal by the naval forces of other countries, and that even during the recent war between Russia and Turkey, when the canal itself formed a portion of the territory of one of the belligerents, when the deadly conflict was close at hand, and when British interests might in many other respects have been nearly involved, they contented themselves with obtaining an assurance that the sphere of operations should not be extended to the canal.

Her Majesty's Government cordially concur in what is stated by Mr. Blaine as regards the unexampled development of the United States on the Pacific coast, and the capacity which they possess for further progress. That development has been watched in this country with admiration and interest, and will continue to be so regarded. But though in rapidity it may, and probably has, exceeded the most sanguine calculation, Her Majesty's Government cannot look upon it in the light of an unexpected event, or suppose that it was not within the view of the statesmen who were parties on either side to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The declarations of President Monroe and of his cabinet, in 1823 and 1824, whatever may be the view taken of their scope and bearing, and of the admissibility of the principles which they involve, or which it is sought to deduce from them, show at least that at that period—twenty-six years anterior to the treaty now under discussion—there was a clear prevision of the great future reserved to the Pacific coast. It is, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, an inadmissible contention, that the regular and successful operation of causes so evident at the time, and in their nature so irrepressible, should be held to have completely altered the condition of affairs to the extent of vitiating the foundations of an agreement which cannot be supposed to have been concluded without careful thought and deliberation.

While recognizing to the fullest degree the extent to which the United States must feel interested in any canal which may be constructed across the Isthmus of Panama, Her Majesty's Government would be wanting in regard to their duty if they failed to point out that Great Britain has large colonial possessions no less than great commercial interests, which render any means of unobstructed and rapid access from the Atlantic to the North and South Pacific Oceans a matter for her also of the greatest importance.

The development of these possessions and interests has steadily continued, possibly with less rapidity, but on a scale which has some relation even to that of the Pacific States. Her Majesty's Government do not wish to ignore the share which other nations have acquired in the commerce of Central and South America, nor to exclude from consideration the interest of those countries in any canal which may be made across the isthmus. They are of opinion that such a canal as the waterway between two great oceans and between all Europe and Eastern Asia is a work which concerns not merely the United States or the American Continent, but the whole civilized world. This is a view which finds its expression in the VIth article of the treaty of 1850. Her Majesty's Government are as anxious as that of the United States that while all nations should enjoy their proper share in the benefits to be expected from the undertaking, no single country should acquire a predominating influence or control over such a means of communication; and they will not oppose or decline any discussion for the purpose of securing on a general international basis its universal and unrestricted use.

With all deference to the considerations which have prompted the proposals made in Mr. Blaine's dispatch, Her Majesty's Government cannot believe that they would promote this object or be beneficial in themselves. The relations of the United States with the European powers are fortunately of a nature to give rise to no feelings of suspicion or alarm. The general tendency of their foreign policy gives good promise that they will so continue. But if provision is to be made on one side for a different state of affairs, it must be expected that the course thus indicated will find its natural and logical counterpart on the other. Her Majesty's Government can conceive no more melancholy spectacle than a competition among the nations holding West Indian possessions, and others on the Central and South American Continent, in the construction of fortifications to obtain the command over the canal and its approaches, in the event of occasion arising for such a measure. They cannot believe that it would be agreeable or convenient to any South American state through which the canal may pass to find itself called upon to admit a foreign power to construct and garrison on its territory a succession of fortresses of increasing magnitude, designed to oppose such attempts, even though that foreign power be a neighboring one, and situated upon the same continent. And when the claim to do this is accompanied by a declaration that the United States will always insist on treating the water-way which shall unite the two oceans "as part of her coast line," it is difficult to imagine that the states to which the territory lying between that water-way and the United States belongs can practically retain as independent a position as that which they now enjoy.

These are the consequences which, in the conviction of Her Majesty's Government, would almost certainly follow from a claim on the part of the United States to assume the supreme authority over the canal and all responsibility for its control. Her Majesty's Government hold, on the contrary, that the principles which guided the negotiators of the convention of 1850 were intrinsically sound, and continue to be applicable to the present state of affairs. Their wish would be that those principles should receive the practical development which was contemplated at the time; and that effect should be given to that portion of the treaty which provides that the contracting parties shall invite all other states with whom they have friendly intercourse to enter into similar stipulations with them.

A certain amount of progress was made in this direction by the conclusion of conventions with Honduras and Nicaragua by Great Britain in 1856 and 1860, and by the United States in 1864 and 1867, and by Nicaragua with France in 1859, with the object of upholding the general principles inserted in the treaty. During the period when there were still matters to regulate with respect to Grey Town, the Bay Islands, the frontier of British Honduras, and the protection of the Mosquito Indians, and when the construction of a canal still seemed a contingency more or less doubtful and remote, it was not strange that the engagement to address other powers should have been allowed to remain dormant; but the project of the canal has now assumed sufficient shape to render such an application reasonable and pertinent.

Her Majesty's Government believe that the extension of an invitation to all maritime states to participate in an agreement based on the stipulations of the convention of 1850 would obviate any objection that may possibly be raised against it as not being adequate in its present condition for the purpose for which it was designed. This course formed the basis of Mr. Fish's proposal to Dr. Cardenas, the Nicaraguan minister, in 1867; and Her Majesty's Government would gladly see the United States again take the initiative in an invitation to the powers, and will be prepared either to join it or to support and indorse it in the way that may be found most fitting and convenient, provided it does not in any way conflict with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

You are authorized to read this dispatch to the Secretary of State, and to give him a copy of it if he should desire it.

I am, &c.,

GRANVILLE.

The honorable LIONEL S. S. WEST.

Earl Granville to Mr. West.

FOREIGN OFFICE, January 14, 1882.

SIR: In my dispatch of the 31st ultimo, I have forwarded to you a copy of a dispatch from Mr. Blaine to the United States minister at this court, containing further observations in support of his arguments and proposal for a modification of the treaty between this country and the United States of the 19th of April, 1850. In this dispatch Mr. Blaine gives extracts from the correspondence which passed between the two governments between 1856 and 1858, in consequence of questions that arose as to the construction to be placed on certain provisions of the treaty. Mr. Blaine seeks to establish from these extracts that "the vexatious and imperfect character of the treaty has been repeatedly recognized on both sides;" and, he adds, that the present proposal of the United States Government "is to free it from those embarrassing features, and to leave it, as its framers intended it should be, a full and perfect settlement, for all time, of all possible issues between the United States and Great Britain with regard to Central America."

The correspondence in question was laid before Parliament in 1860, and the principal papers included in it have also been published in Hertslet's State Papers.* A reference to the context of the passages quoted by Mr. Blaine will be necessary in order to appreciate the character which Mr. Blaine has attributed to them.

In cases where the details of an international agreement have given rise to difficulties and discussions to such an extent as to cause the contracting parties, at one time, to contemplate its abrogation or modification as one of several possible alternatives, and where it has yet been found preferable to arrive at a solution as to those details rather than to sacrifice the general basis of the engagement, it must surely be allowed that such a fact, far from being an argument against that engagement, is an argument distinctly in its favor. It is equally plain that either of the contracting parties which had abandoned its own contention for the purpose of preserving the agreement in its entirety would have reason to complain if the differences which had been settled by its concession were afterwards urged as a reason for essentially modifying those other provisions which it had made this sacrifice to maintain. That both these arguments apply in the present instance, a brief review of the correspondence will, I think, suffice to show.

The treaty of 1850 was concluded (as is declared in the VIIIth Article with the desire "not only to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle," in regard to the protection, by treaty stipulations, of any practical communications, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America.

The preamble and 1st article of the treaty run as follows:

> Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America, being desirous of consolidating the relations of amity which so hapily subsist between them, by setting forth and fixing in a convention their views and intentions with reference to any means of communication by ship-canal, which may be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, by the way of the river St. Juan de Nicaragua, and either or both of the lakes of Nicaragua or Managua, to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean; * * *
> ART. I. The Governments of Great Britain and the United States hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship-canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same, or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords, or may afford, or any alliance which either has, or may have, to or with any state or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Musquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same. Nor will Great Britain or the United States take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either may possess with any state or government through whose territory the said canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the subjects or citizens of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal, which shall not be offered, on the same terms, to the subjects or citizens of the other.

Soon after the signature of the treaty various discussions arose as to the interpretation to be put upon those clauses which debarred either of the contracting parties from occupying, fortifying or colonizing, or assuming or exercising any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, &c. Great Britain being at the time in possession of Ruatan and other islands off the coast of Honduras, and having a protectorate over the Mosquito Indians located on the coast of Nicaragua, a lengthened correspondence arose as to the effect to be given to the treaty in this respect, and also as to the boundary of British Honduras. A treaty was eventually signed by Lord Clarendon and Mr. Dallas, for the settlement of the various questions at issue, on the 17th October, 1856; but this agreement was not received with favor by the United States Senate, and the incoming government of President Buchanan, who had acceded to office in March, 1857, declined to confirm it without certain modifications. To these the British Government proposed further amendments, which were not at that time deemed acceptable by that of the United States, and the treaty was never formally ratified.

To show how far this part of the discussion belonged in some of its features to a state of affairs that is now past, one of the objections taken by General Cass to the treaty in its last amended form was that it involved a recognition by the United States of a treaty between Great Britain and Honduras for the cession of the Bay Islands to the latter country, in which it was stipulated that slavery should not at any time be permitted to exist there. General Cass stated that "a treaty with such a provision would never be recognized by a United States Senate." (Lord Napier to Lord Clarendon, May 3, 1857.)

I now proceed to examine some of the extracts given in Mr. Blaine's dispatch.

The first paper quoted is one from Lord Napier to the Earl of Clarendon, dated the 12th March, 1857.

The only passage quoted is as follows:

> General Cass then passed some reflections on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; he had voted for it, and, in doing so, he believed that it abrogated all intervention on the part of England in the Central American territory. The British Government had put a different construction on the treaty, and he regretted the vote he had given in its favor.

But the dispatch goes on to say:

> He did not, however, pretend that the British Government should now unconditionally abandon the Mosquitos, with whom they had relations of an ancient date; it was just, and consistent with the practice of the United States, that those Indians should be secured in the separate possession of lands, the sale of which should be prohibited, and in the enjoyment of rights and franchises, though in a condition of dependency and protection. The British Government had already removed one impediment to the execution of the Bulwer-Clayton treaty, by the cession of their claims on Ruatan; two difficulties now remained—the frontier of Belize, and delimitation and settlement of the Mosquito tribe. If the frontier could be defined, and if the Mosquitos could be placed in the enjoyment of their territory by treaty between Great Britain and Nicaragua, in which the concessions and guarantees of the latter in favor of the Indians should be associated with the recognition of the sovereignty of Nicaragua—so I understood the general—then the Bulwer-Clayton treaty might be a permanent and satisfactory settlement between the contracting parties; the United States desiring nothing else than a absolute and entire neutrality and independence of the Central American region, free from the exercise of any exclusive influence or ascendancy whatever.

The next quotation is from another dispatch of Lord Napier, dated the 6th May, 1857, and the passage given runs thus:

The President denounced the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as one which had been fraught with misunderstanding and mischief from the beginning; it was concluded under the most opposite constructions by the contracting parties. If the Senate had imagined that it could obtain the interpretation placed upon it by Great Britain, it would not have passed. If he had been in the Senate at the time, that treaty never would have been sanctioned.

But President Buchanan went on to say:

With reference to arbitration (which Lord Napier had only thrown in as a suggestion of his own), he could not give any opinion at present. The President also inveighed against the excess of treaties, affirming that they were more frequently the cause of quarrel than of harmony, and that, if it were not for the interoceanic communications, he did not see there was any necessity for a treaty respecting Central America at all.

It seems, therefore, that the President's condemnation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was principally founded on the construction placed upon it by Great Britain at the time, and was also in some measure explained by his objections to treaties in general, but that he admitted that the question of the interoceanic connection made such an agreement necessary.

Mr. Blaine then quotes a note from Mr. Cass to Lord Napier, of the 29th May, 1857, as follows:

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty, concluded in the hope that it would put an end to the differences which had arisen between the United States and Great Britain, concerning Central American affairs, had been rendered inoperative in some of its most essential provisions by the different constructions which had been reciprocally given to it by the parties. And little is hazarded in saying that, had the interpretation since put put upon the treaty by the British Government, and yet maintained, been anticipated, it would not have been negotiated under the instructions of any Executive of the United States, nor ratified by the branch of the government intrusted with the power of ratification.

But how does General Cass continue? He goes on to say:

A protracted discussion, in which the subject was exhausted, failed to reconcile the conflicting views of the parties; and, as a last resort, a negotiation was opened for the purpose of forming a supplementary treaty which should remove, if practicable, the difficulties in the way of their mutual good understanding, and leave unnecessary any further discussion of the controverted provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. It was to effect this object that the Government of the United States agreed to open the negotiation which terminated in the treaty of the 17th October, 1856, and though the provisions of that instrument, even with the amendments proposed by the Senate, were not wholly unobjectionable either to that body or to the President, still, so important did they consider a satisfactory arrangement of this complicated subject, that they yielded their objections, and sanctioned, by their act of ratification, the convention as amended. It was then transmitted to London for the consideration of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and, having failed to meet its approbation, has been returned unratified. The parties are thus thrown back upon the Bulwer-Clayton treaty, with its disputed phraseology and its conflicting interpretations; and, after the lapse of seven years, not one of the objects connected with the political condition of Central America, which the United States had hoped to obtain by the arrangement, has been accomplished.

It was not, therefore, to the principles or basis of the arrangement (the importance of which was fully recognized), but to the unfortunate phraseology of a single portion of the treaty, that objection was taken.

Mr. Blaine then refers to Sir W. Gore Ouseley's missions, the object of which was to settle the points at issue in a manner practically satisfactory to the United States, by independent negotiations with the Central American States, after first communicating with the government at Washington. Mr. Blaine quotes a passage from a letter of General Cass to Lord Napier, of the 20th October, 1857, as follows:

> I have thus endeavored to meet the frank suggestions of your lordship by restating, with corresponding frankness, the general policy of the United States with respect to the governments and the interoceanic transits of Central America; but since your lordship has referred to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, as contemplating a "harmonious course of action and counsel between the contracting parties in the settlement of the Central American interests," you will pardon me for reminding your lordship that the differences which this treaty was intended to adjust between the United States and Great Britain still remain unsettled, while the treaty itself has become the subject of new and embarrassing complications.

It will be useful to refer to the previous portion of this note to show what was the statement of the "general policy of the United States" thus referred to, and how far that policy corresponds with Mr. Blaine's present proposals. The note begins thus:

> I have the honor to receive your lordship's communication of the 9th instant, in reference to the existing relations between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and have submitted it to the consideration of the President.
> These relations have attracted the earnest attention of the President, not only from the importance of the San Juan transit to the commerce of the world, but from the interest which is naturally felt by the United States in the neighboring republics of this continent. The President has witnessed, therefore, the restoration of peace to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, with the highest gratification; and he sincerely hopes that it may not again be interrupted, either by the calamity of civil war or the invasion of their territory from other countries. Their security and welfare would undoubtedly be promoted by a just and friendly settlement between them of their mutual boundaries and jurisdiction; and I need hardly add, that such an adjustment would be viewed with satisfaction by the United States. This government, however, has never admitted the pretensions of Costa Rica to an equal control with Nicaragua, of the San Juan River, but has regarded the sovereignty of the river, and consequently of the interoceanic transit by that route, as rightfully belonging to the republic of Nicaragua.
> A similar view of the question appears to have been recognized by Great Britain; and, whatever may be the rights of Costa Rica with respect to the free passage of her own products by the river to the ocean, it is better, probably, that what has been thus acquiesced in, and has led, moreover, to important contracts and responsibilities, should not now be disturbed. But under any circumstances the commercial nations of the world can never permit the interoceanic passages of the isthmus to be rendered useless for all the great purposes which belong to them, in consequence of the neglect or incapacity of the States through whose territories they happen to run. The United States, as I have before had occasion to assure your lordship, demand no exclusive privileges in these passages, but will always exert their influence to secure their free and unrestricted benefits, both in peace and war, to the commerce of the world.

And in a later note to Lord Napier, of the 8th November, 1858, General Cass states with still greater clearness the object with which the treaty was concluded, and the grounds on which the difference between the two governments had arisen. He says:

> Since the announcement by your lordship, in October, 1857, of Sir William Ouseley's special mission, the President has awaited, not so much any new proposition for the adjustment of the Central American questions as the statement in detail, which he had been led to expect, of the method by which Sir William Ouseley was to carry into effect the previous proposition of the British Government. To make this plain, your Lordship will pardon me for making a brief reference to what has occurred between the two governments in respect to Central America since the ratification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850.
> While the declared object of that convention had reference to the construction of a ship-canal by the way of San Juan and the Lakes of Nicaragua and Managua, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, yet it avowed none the less plainly a general principle in reference to all practicable communications across the isthmus, and laid down a distinct policy by which the practical operation of this principle was likely to be kept free from all embarrassment. The principle was, that the interoceanic routes should remain under the sovereignty of the States through which they ran, and should be neutral and free to all nations alike. The policy was that, in order to prevent any government outside of those States from obtaining undue control or influence over those interoceanic transits, no such nation should erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same, or in the vicinity thereof, or should "occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume, or exercise, any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America." So far as the United States and Great Britain were concerned, those stipulations were expressed in unmistakable terms; and, in reference to other nations, it was declared that the "contracting parties in this convention engage to invite every State with which both or either have friendly intercourse, to enter into stipulations with them similar to those which they have entered into with each other."

At that time the United States had no possessions whatever in Central America, and exercised no dominion there. In respect to this government, therefore, the provisions of Article I of the treaty could operate only as a restriction for the future; but Great Britain was in the actual exercise of dominion over nearly the whole eastern coast of that country, and, in relation to her, this article had a present as well as a prospective operation. She was to abandon the occupancy which she already had in Central America, and was neither to make acquisitions, or erect fortifications, or exercise dominion there in the future. In other words, she was to place herself in the same position with respect to possessions and dominion in Central America which was to be occupied by the United States, and which both of the contracting parties to the treaty engaged that they would endeavor to induce other nations to occupy.

This was the treaty as it was understood and consented to by the United States, and this is the treaty as it is still understood by this government.

He then recapitulates the discussions and abortive negotiations which had ensued in consequence of the different interpretations put upon the treaty by the two governments; and, after criticising and expressing disappointment at the last communication made to him by Lord Napier, he concludes:

It is of no small consequence either to the United States or Great Britain that these Central American controversies between the two countries should be forever closed. On some points of them, and, I have been led to hope, on the general policy which ought to apply to the whole Isthmian region, they have reached a common ground of agreement. The neutrality of the interoceanic routes, and their freedom from the superior and controlling influence of any one government; the principles upon which the Mosquito protectorate may be arranged, with justice alike to the sovereignty of Nicaragua and the Indian tribes; the surrender of the Bay Islands, under certain stipulations for the benefit of trade and the protection of their British occupants; and the definition of the boundaries of British Belize; about all these points there is no apparent disagreement, except as to the conditions which shall be annexed to the Bay Islands' surrender, and as to the limits which shall be fixed to the settlements of Belize. Is it possible that, if approached in a spirit of conciliation and good feeling, these two points of difference are not susceptible of a friendly adjustment? To believe this would be to underestimate the importance of the adjustment, and the intelligent appreciation of this importance which must be entertained by both nations. What the United States want in Central America, next to the happiness of its people, is the security and neutrality of the interoceanic routes which lead through it. This is equally the desire of Great Britain, of France, and of the whole commercial world. If the principles and policy of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty are carried into effect, this object is accomplished. When, therefore, Lord Malmesbury invites new overtures from this government upon the idea that it has rejected the proposal embraced in Sir William Ouseley's mission for an adjustment of the Central American questions by separate treaties with Honduras, Nicaragua, and Guatemala, upon terms substantially according with the general tenor of the American interpretation of the treaty, I have to reply to his lordship that this very adjustment is all that the President has ever desired, and that instead of having rejected that proposal, he had expressed his cordial acceptance of it, so far as he understood it, and had anticipated from it the most gratifying consequences.

Further, in a dispatch to Mr. Lamar of July 25, 1858, subsequently communicated to Lord Malmesbury by Mr. Dallas, on the 29th April, 1859, General Cass says:

These great avenues of intercommunication are vastly interesting to all commercial powers, and all may well join in securing their freedom and use against those dangers to which they are exposed from aggressions or outrages, originating within or without the territories through which they pass.

It is difficult to conceive a more distinct statement of adherence to the general principles of the Clayton-Bulwer arrangement, or a more positive disclaimer of the policy involved in Mr. Blaine's present proposals, than is contained in the passages I have just quoted.

I return, however, to the extracts given in Mr. Blaine's dispatch. Mr. Blaine alludes to an important interview which Lord Napier had with President Buchanan on the 19th October, 1857, in which Lord Napier asked that pending the negotiation intrusted to Sir W. Gore Ouseley, no proposal to annul the Clayton-Bulwer treaty should be sanctioned or encouraged by the President or members of the United States Government. Lord Napier's account of the President's language is as follows:

> The President commenced his observations by referring to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as a fruitful source of misunderstanding between the contracting parties. Without that treaty the United States and Great Britain might long since have cooperated for the welfare of Central America. That treaty had never been acceptable to the people of the United States, and would not have obtained a vote in the Senate had the least suspicion existed of the sense in which it was to be construed by Great Britain; yet, if it were now the intention of Her Majesty's Government to execute it according to the American interpretation, that was as much as we could insist upon.

> I then went on to animadvert upon the danger of some movement in the approaching Congress which would interfere with the contemporary negotiation of Sir William Ouseley, remarking that should the President, in his message, allude to the position of the two countries in reference to Central America, and if, in consequence of his excellency's reflections, a resolution should be proposed for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, such a step would not only frustrate the purposes of Sir William Ouseley's mission, but would have a calamitous influence on the future relations of England and America. It would, therefore, be highly gratifying to me to be enabled to assure your lordship that, pending the negotiation intrusted to Sir William Ouseley, no proposal to annul the treaty would be sanctioned or encouraged by his excellency or by the members of his government.
> The President stated, in reply, that it was certainly his intention to give an account in his message of all that had passed between the two governments respecting the Dallas-Clarendon treaty. He appeared to intimate that the effect of such a narrative would be to place the conduct of Great Britain in an unfavorable light, and he added that the passage in which he commented upon these transactions was already prepared; but his excellency went on to affirm, with emphasis, that if the resolutions of Her Majesty's Government were such as I had related, if they really meant to execute the Clayton-Bulwer treaty according to the American interpretation, and would, before the meeting of Congress, make some communication to him in that sense, such as he could use, he would cancel what he had written and insert another passage referring to the mission of Sir William Ouseley, and that "nothing would give him greater pleasure than to add the expression of his sincere and ardent wish for the maintenance of friendly relations between the two countries."
> His excellencyalso distinctly declared that, under the circumstances here described, no attempt against the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in Congress would have any countenance from him whatever. To him it was indifferent whether the concession contemplated by Her Majesty's Government were consigned to a direct engagement between England and the United States, or to treaties between the former and the Central American Republics; the latter method might, in some respects, be even more agreeable to him, and he thought it would be more convenient to Her Majesty's Government, who might, with greater facility, accede to the claims of the weaker party.

I pass over some passages given in Mr. Blaine's dispatch which seem to call for no remark, and I would only observe that the proposal for arbitration alluded to in Lord Napier's note to General Cass of February 17, 1858, applied only to the controverted points in the treaty, and not to the whole instrument.

Mr. Blaine refers to a conversation with General Cass, reported by Lord Napier in a dispatch of the 22d March, 1858, in which reference was made to the idea of an abrogation of the treaty. It may be well to give a larger extract of this dispatch, because, although Lord Napier's remarks were stated to be personal and unofficial, they show his view of the form which such an abrogation should take. He says:

> I have, accordingly, on two occasions, informed General Cass that, if the Government of the United States be still of the same mind, and continue to desire the abrot gation of the treaty of 1850, it would be agreeable to Her Majesty's Government that they should insert a proposal to that effect in their reply to my note respecting arbitration, and to that in which I explained the character and motives of the mission intrusted to Her Majesty's commissioner in Central America.

Some conversation ensued regarding the manner in which the dissolution of the treaty should be effected, and the condition by which it might be accompanied, and on these topics I have held the following language, premising that the views expressed were altogether spontaneous and personal, for I had no information of the intentions of Her Majesty's Government beyond the bare fact that they would entertain a proposal to cancel the engagements of 1850 emanating from the United States.

I stated that, in my opinion, the treaty in question could only be repealed by a new treaty in the usual forms, and that it might be desirable that such a treaty should not be restricted to a single article annulling its predecessor. Both for considerations of decency and policy I advocated the insertion of stipulations involving an expression of a common policy in Central America, and the disavowal of any exclusive or monopolizing projects on either side. I said that I thought a treaty might be framed of three articles.

The first should declare the desire of the contracting parties to encourage and protect the organization of transit routes in the interoceanic region, and bind those parties never to negotiate for any rights or privileges of transit with the Central American States of a preferential or exclusive character, to which other nations might not, by negotiation, be equally admitted, establishing thus the principle of an equal enjoyment of those avenues of trade for all the countries of the world.

The second article might recognize the jurisdiction of the transit route by the San Juan River as being vested in the government of Nicaragua. This had been already avowed by the United States in a treaty negotiated with that Republic. It had not been definitely affirmed by Great Britain, and might seem to clash with the claims of the King of Mosquitia to territorial possession or authority in those parts. I thought, however, that in regard to the views lately expressed by Her Majesty's Government in the course of recent negotiations, in consideration of the necessity of obtaining a suitable treaty with Nicaragua, and for the purpose of placing themselves in harmony with the course pursued by the United States, Her Majesty's Government might, on this head, accede to an article which would practically restrict their protectorate in Mosquitia, and prevent the importation of any interference on their part with the territory traversed by the river, and, therefore, by the transit route.

Finally, I suggested that Article III of the treaty should simply declare the provisions of the treaty of 1850 to be void and of no effect. I added that the question of future territorial acquisition in Central America would thus be thrown open to the United States; that Her Majesty's Government, on the other hand, would retain the colony of Honduras in the proportions which might be given to it by treaty arrangements with Guatemala, and that the Bay Islands would remain attached to the British Crown. Indeed, I affirmed, still as a personal opinion, but of the most positive character, that in case of the dissolution of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, the Bay Islands would not be relinquished by Her Majesty's Government. I felt bound to make this statement, having observed in some quarters an impression that Her Majesty's Government might be disposed not only to annul the treaty, thus opening a path for the eventual annexation of the isthmus to the Federal Union, but to give up the Bay Islands as well; a notion altogether unfounded in any intimation which has hitherto reached me from the Foreign Office, and which could not be reconciled, in my opinion, to the interests of England.

Lord Napier adds that he was most careful to remark throughout that the opinions he enunciated with reference to the treaty were exclusively his own.

Mr. Blaine gives only a very short extract from Lord Malmesbury's dispatch in reply of the 8th April, 1858. It will be desirable to quote it more at length. Lord Malmesbury says:

Her Majesty's Government, if the initiative is still left to them by the unwillingness of the United States themselves to propose abrogation, desire to retain full liberty as to the manner and form in which any such proposal shall be laid on their behalf before the Cabinet at Washington; but without pronouncing any decided opinion at the present moment, I think it right to point out to your lordship that the effect of such an article as that suggested in your dispatch, as the second, might be to perpetuate an entanglement with the government of the United States, and to place that government in a position to question or control the free action of Her Majesty's Government in everything that relates to Central America. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty has been a source of unceasing embarrassment to this country, and Her Majestey's Government, if they should be so fortunate as to extricate themselves from the difficulties which have resulted from it, will not involve themselves, directly or indirectly in any similar difficulties for the future.

Her Majesty's Government would have no objection to enter with the United States into a self-denying engagement such as that suggested in your first article, by which both parties should renounce all exclusive advantage in the use of any of the interoceanic routes, and should bind themselves, each to the other, not to interfere with free transit. Such an article would be a suitable substitute for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, for it would secure, as regards the contracting parties, the avowed object of that treaty—the freedom of interoceanic communication.

But beyond this Her Majesty's Government, as at present advised, are not prepared to contract any engagement as a substitute for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and from the abrogation of that compact, if it should take place, they will hold themselves as free to act in regard to Central America in the manner most conducive to the advancement of British interests and the fulfillment of British obligations as if the treaty had never been concluded.

Your lordship was, therefore, perfectly right in using decided language such as that reported in your dispatch respecting the Bay Islands; and whenever the subject of the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is mooted in your presence, you will make it perfectly clear to the Government of the United States that to abrogate the treaty is to return to the status quo ante its conclusion in 1850; that Her Majesty's Government have no kind of jealousy respecting American colonization in Central America, which, indeed, it would help to civilize; and that we neither ask nor wish for any exclusive privileges whatever in those regions.

These, then, were the terms upon which Her Majesty's Government were alone prepared, if at all, to consider the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. And such an alternative was deprecated by General Cass in a note to Lord Napier of the 6th April, 1858, in which, while declining the proposal of arbitration on the disputed points of the treaty, he alluded to a personal expression of opinion he had given in favor of an unconditional renunciation of the treaty, and called attention to the serious consequences which might result from its dissolution, if no provision were made at the same time for adjusting the questions which led to it. He then concluded with the passage quoted by Mr. Blaine, to the effect that "if the President does not hasten to consider now the alternative of repealing the treaty of 1850 it is because he does not wish prematurely to anticipate the failure of Sir William Ouseley's mission, and is disposed to give a new proof to Her Majesty's Government of his sincere desire to preserve the amicable relations which now happily subsist between the two countries."

But subsequent events make it unnecessary to dwell further upon this part of the discussion, for the question was settled by the practical accomplishment of that which the United States Government regarded as the most satisfactory conclusion.

It is here that the extracts and account of the negotiation given by Mr. Blaine come to an end at a point when the most important episode commences. The continuation of the correspondence shows that on the 30th April, 1859, a treaty was concluded between Great Britain and Guatemala for the settlement of the question of the boundary of Belize; that on the 28th November, 1859, another treaty was concluded between this country and Honduras for the transfer of the Bay Islands to that republic, as well as for the settlement of other questions relating to the Mosquito Indians and the claims of British subjects, including the withdrawal of the British protectorate, and that on the 28th January, 1860, a third treaty was concluded between this country and Nicaragua, also with reference to the Mosquito Indians and the claims of British subjects.

Copies of these three treaties were officially communicated to the United States Government, with the expression of a hope on the part of Her Majesty's Government that they would "finally set at rest the questions respecting the interpretation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which had been the subject of so much controversy between this country and the United States."

And in his message to Congress of the 3d December, 1860, President Buchanan says the dangerous questions arising from the Bulwer-Clayton treaty "have been amicably and honorably adjusted. The discordant constructions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between the two governments, which at different periods of the discussion bore a threatening aspect, have resulted in a final settlement entirely satisfactory to this government."

I have been forced to give the above extracts at considerable length, and I refrain from adding other passages which would tend to illustrate and confirm them. A persual of them, however, will, I think, suffice to show—

1. That the differences which arose between the two governments in regard to the treaty, and which occasioned at one time considerable irritation, but which have long since been happily disposed of, did not relate to the general principles to be observed in regard to the means of interoceanic communication across the isthmus, but had their origin in a stipulation which Mr. Blaine still proposes in a great part to maintain. He wishes every part of the treaty in which Great Britain and the United States agree to make no acquisition of the territory in Central America to remain in full force, while he desires to cancel those portions of the treaty which forbid the United States fortifying the canal, and holding the political control of it in conjunction with the country in which it is located.

2. That the declarations of the United States Government during the controversy were distinctly at variance with any such proposal as that just stated. They disclaimed any desire to obtain an exclusive or perferential control over the canal. Their sole contention was, that Great Britain was bound by the treaty to abandon those positions on the mainland or adjacent islands, which, in their opinion, were calculated to give her the means of such a control. Nor did they in any way seek to limit the application of the principles laid down in the treaty so as to exclude Colombia nor Mexican territory, as Mr. Blaine now suggests, nor urge that such application would be inconsistent with the convention between the United States and New Granada of 1846. On the contrary, they were ready to give those principles their full extension.

3. That at a time when the British Government had been induced by the long continuance of the controversy to contemplate the abrogation of the treaty, they were only willing to do so on the condition of reverting to the status quo ante its conclusion in 1850; a solution which was at that time possible—though, as the United States Government justly pointed out, it would have been fraught with great danger to the good relations between the two countries—but which is now rendered impossible by the subsequent events.

4. That a better and more conciliatory conclusion, which for twenty years has remained undisputed, was effected by the independent and voluntary action of Great Britain. The points in dispute were practically conceded by this country, and the controversy terminated in a manner which was declared by President Buchanan to be amicable and honorable, resulting in a final settlement entirely satisfactory to the Government of the United States.

You are authorized to read this dispatch to the United States Secretary of State, and to offer him a copy of it if he should desire, in the same manner in which a copy of Mr. Blaine's dispatch was offered to me.

MESSAGE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

In further answer to Senate resolution of the 12th of December, 1881, a report of the Secretary of State, and its accompanying papers, in regard to the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

JUNE 6, 1882.—Read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

In further answer to the Senate's resolution of the 12th December last, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, and its accompanying paper, in regard to the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, June 5, 1882.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 5, 1882.

The Secretary of State, in further compliance with the request contained in the resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1881, submits herewith a copy of an instruction of the 8th ultimo to our minister in London respecting the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Respectfully submitted.

FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

To the PRESIDENT.

Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Lowell.

No. 368.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., May 8, 1882.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, Esq., &c., &c., &c., London:

SIR: Mr. Sackville West has handed me copies of two dispatches from Lord Granville to him respecting the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; the first, dated 7th January last, comments upon Mr. Blaine's 270 of the 19th of November; the second, of the 14th January, comments upon Mr. Blaine's 281 of the 29th November.

They have been read with interest and with attention. After careful consideration the President is not without hope that the views of the two governments may be harmonized in this matter. He therefore directs me to communicate to you, somewhat at length, the opinions entertained here respecting the traditional continental policy of the United States and the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

A canal across the isthmus for vessels of all dimensions and every character, under possible conditions hereinafter referred to, would affect this republic in its trade and commerce; would expose our Western coast to attack; destroy our isolation; oblige us to improve our defenses and to increase our Navy, and possibly compel us, contrary to our traditions, to take an active interest in the affairs of European nations. The United States with their large and increasing population and wealth cannot be uninterested in a change in the physical conformation of this hemisphere which may injuriously affect either the material or political interests of the republic, and naturally seek that the severance of the isthmus connecting the continents shall be effected in harmony with those interests. This government, while believing that the isthmus should not be severed so as to do unnecessary injury to the United States, at the same time appreciates the desire of Great Britain that she should be able by a short and easy passage from ocean to ocean to reach her eastern and American possessions on the Pacific, and that other nations of the world have a similar interest in such a passage. There is, however, no necessary conflict between the political claims of the United States in this matter and the material interests of other nations.

A canal across the isthmus can be created, and under the protectorate of the United States and the republic whose territory it may cross, can be freely used by all nations; thus in some degree would be continued to the United States the benefit of that conformation of the earth which is now an element of security and defense.

For thirty years the Panama Railroad has been maintained without other protection than that of the United States and the local sovereign, in accordance with the treaty of 1846 with New Grenada.

During that period Great Britain has carried to a successful result the wars of the Crimea and the Indian mutiny; France has three times convulsed Europe with strife; a conflict between Russia and Turkey has changed the face of the Ottoman Empire; thrones have crumbled; empires have been constructed; republics have arisen, while on this continent the most remarkable civil war in history has occurred, and at the same time the Emperor of the French was lending his active support to an aspirant for imperial honors in the neighboring republic of Mexico. Within that period almost every form of war and strife has taken place that would seem to make especially necessary the neutralization of the isthmus, and yet the trains of the Panama Railroad have run from ocean to ocean peacefully and with no other interruption than what has come from the rare turbulence of the local population.

During the same time another isthmus has been pierced, and while wars have raged within sight of the Mediterranean port the peaceful commerce of the world has moved through the Suez Canal quietly and safely under no international protectorate.

If no guarantee or protectorate has been found necessary during such troubled times, it can scarcely be required in the more peaceful period which both the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain hope and strive for.

The President, therefore, considers it unnecessary and unwise, through an invitation to the nations of the earth, to guarantee the neutrality of the transit of the isthmus, or to give their navies a pretext for assembling in waters contiguous to our shores, and to possibly involve this republic in conflicts from which its natural position entitles it to be relieved.

It will doubtless occur to Lord Granville, as it does to us, that international agreements of this kind calling for interference by force, and conferring joint rights upon several independent powers, are calculated to breed dissension and trouble. In times of peace, when there is no call for their exercise, they are harmless though useless. But when wars and trouble come, it too frequently happens that differences arise, and so at the very moment when the agreement should be enforced it is impossible to enforce it; and such agreements would lead to that political intervention in American affairs which the traditional policy of the United States make it impossible that the President should either consent to or look upon with indifference.

The President believes that the formation of a protectorate by European nations over the isthmus transit would be in conflict with a doctrine which has been for many years asserted by the United States. This sentiment is properly termed a doctrine, as it has no prescribed sanction and its assertion is left to the exigency which may invoke it. It has been repeatedly announced by the Executive Department of this Goverment and through the utterances of distinguished citizens; it is cherished by the American people, and has been approved by the Government of Great Britain.

It is not the inhospital principle which it is sometimes charged with being and which asserts that European nations shall not retain dominion on this hemisphere and that none but republican governments shall here be tolerated; for we well know that a large part of the North American continent is under the dominion of Her Majesty's Government, and that the United States were in the past the first to recognize the imperial authority of Dom Pedro in Brazil and of Iturbide in Mexico. It is not necessary now to define that doctrine, but its history clearly shows that it at least opposes any intervention by European nations in the political affairs of American republics.

In 1823, Mr. Canning, with the concurrence of the cabinet of London, informed Mr. Rush that Great Britain could not see with indifference the intervention of foreign powers in Spanish America, or the transfer to those powers of any of the colonies, and suggested a joint declaration to that effect by the United States and Great Britain. This suggestion grew out of the relations then existing between France and Spain, their attitude towards the South American republics then struggling for independence, and the injuries to the colonies and commerce of Great Britain which would result from a successful prosecution of the policy of those two governments. President Monroe did not adopt the proposal for a joint declaration, but in his message of December 2, 1823, after stating that it was our policy not to interfere with the internal concerns of European powers, speaking of the war which the revolted colonies were carrying on against Spain, and of contemplated interference by the "Holy Alliance" in behalf of the latter, said, in language which has gone into history under his name, thus:

> But in regard to these continents circumstances are eminently and conspicuously different. It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness, nor can any one believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form with indifference.

This sentiment was received in England with enthusiasm. Mr. Brougham said:

The question in regard to Spanish America is now, I believe, disposed of or nearly so; for an event has recently happened than which none has ever dispersed greater joy, exultation, and gratitude over all the freedmen of Europe; that event which is decisive on the subject is the language held with respect to Spanish America in the message of the President of the United States.

Sir James Mackintosh said:

This evidence of the two great English commonwealths (for so I delight to call them, and I heartily pray that they may be forever united in the cause of justice and liberty) cannot be contemplated without the greatest pleasure by every enlightened citizen of the earth.

Mr. John Quincy Adams, who well knew what had led to these statements by Mr. Monroe, explained in a message to the House of Representatives on the 17th day of March, 1826, that there was no purpose of interfering with the existing European colonies in America; that the language was only a frank declaration that the United States could not look with indifference either upon an attempt by colonization to close any port of the continent against the commerce of the United States or upon concerted political interference from Europe in American affairs.

Thus the doctrine of non-intervention by European powers in American affairs arose from complications in South America, and was announced by Mr. Monroe on the suggestion of the official representative of Great Britain.

The doctrine so formulated by Monroe and expounded by Adams has since remained a cardinal principle of our continental policy. In several notable instances, especially in the case of the French attempt to set up imperial authority in Mexico, it guided our political action, and it is to day firmly imbedded in the American heart.

It is true that this doctrine refers to the political, and not to the material interest of America; but no one can deny that to place the isthmus under the protection and guarantee of the powers of Europe,-rather than under the protection of the leading power of this hemisphere, would seriously threaten and affect the political interest of that power.

It is not to be anticipated that Great Britain will controvert an international doctrine, which she suggested to the United States, when looking to her own interest, and which, when adopted by this republic, she highly approved; and it is but frank to say that the people of this country would be as unwilling that the pathway of commerce between the Pacific coast and our eastern market should be under the dominion of the allied European powers as would be the people of Great Britain that the transit from one to another part of her possessions should be under such control.

Prior to the war of the Revolution, Great Britain had acquired strong positions from Halifax to Antigua, dominating the coast of the United States. She retained these positions after the peace of 1783, and continues to use them for offensive and defensive purposes. She has strengthened old strongholds and made new ones, while the United States has ever refused to avail itself of proffered commanding external military stations.

No well-informed statesman doubts the ability of this nation to raise a powerful navy. To raise such a navy might bring commercial advantages to the United States, but it is doubtful whether it would promote the peace of the world; and the United States desire that their citizens may, without any armed assertion of right, be conveyed by water transit from their western to their eastern shores without passing under the guns of European powers.

These are our own views, and it is but frank to state them, while Her Majesty's Government is not called upon either to admit or deny them.

To considerations such as these Lord Granville, in his dispatch of November 10, 1881, answers that the position of Great Britain and the United States, in reference to the canal, is determined by the—

> Engagements entered into by them respectively in the convention, which was signed at Washington on the 19th of April, 1850, commonly known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and that Her Majesty's Government rely with confidence upon the observance of all the engagements of that treaty.

We are thus fairly brought to the consideration of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

The treaty relates to communication between the oceans, and divides itself into two parts.

First, and principally, that which the treaty terms a "particular object," to wit, a then projected interoceanic canal in Central America by the Nicaragua route; and this is the only object stated in the preamble of the treaty; which says that the two governments, "being desirous of consolidating the relations of amity which so happily subsist between them, by setting forth and fixing in a convention their views and intentions with reference to any means of communication by ship-canal which may be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the way of the river San Juan de Nicaragua and either or both of the lakes of Nicaragua or Managua to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean," to that end confer full powers on Mr. Clayton and Sir Henry Bulwer.

This first and principal object of the treaty is considered in the first seven articles.

Second. The subordinate object of the treaty is that treated of in the remaining or eighth article, which states that the two governments "having not only desired, in entering into this convention, to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle (and this is the principle), hereby agree to extend their protection by treaty stipulation to any other practicable communication" across the isthmus, "and especially to the interoceanic communications, should the same prove practicable, whether by canal or railroad, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panama." This "general principle" or joint protection is to be effected as stated, "by treaty stipulations."

Although this discussion relates to a canal by the Panama route outside of Central America, to which the eighth article refers, yet your attention is invited as well to the first and principal as to the second and subordinate purpose of the treaty.

First. While the primary object of the treaty, as will be seen, was to aid the immediate construction of a canal by what is known as the Nicaragua route, it is equally plain that another and important object, which the United States had in view, was to dispossess Great Britain of settlements in Central America, whether under cover of Indian sovereignty or otherwise. The United States were tenacious that Great Britain should not extend further her occupation of threatening military or naval strategic points along their maritime frontier. To assure this, the parties to the treaty jointly agreed not to exercise dominion over, or fortify or colonize Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito Coast, or any part of Central America. Great Britain, however, exercises dominion over Belize or British Honduras, the area of which is equal to that of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, and the impression prevails that since the conclusion of the treaty of 1850, the English inhabitants of that district have spread into the territory of the neighboring republics and now occupy a large area of land which, under the convention, belongs to one or the other of the two republics, but over which the government of Her Majesty assumes to exercise control.

Such dominion seems to be inconsistent with that provision of the treaty which prohibits the exercise of dominion by Great Britain over any part of Central America. This makes it proper for me to say that the English privileges, at the time of the conclusion of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, in what has been known as the Belize, were confined to a right to cut wood and establish saw-mills in a territory defined by metes and bounds. These privileges were conferred by treaties, in which Spanish sovereignty was recognized. On the successful revolution, the rights of Spain vested in the new republics, and had not been materially changed when the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was concluded. That treaty was concluded April 19, and its ratification advised by the Senate May 22, 1850. On the exchange of the ratifications, Sir Henry Bulwer filed in this Department, under date of June 29, 1850, a declaration that the exchange was made with the understanding on the part of Her Majesty's Government that the treaty did not apply to Her Majesty's settlement at Honduras, and its dependencies. Mr. Clayton answered, under date of July 4, 1850, that he so understood, but that he must not be understood to either affirm or deny British title therein. It is to be observed that each of these declarations was made after the conclusion of the treaty by the joint action of the President and the Senate, and that the declaration was not made to or accepted by them. In 1859 Great Britain entered into a treaty with Guatemala, in which what had been called the settlement in the declaration made on the exchange of the ratification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was styled "Her Britannic Majesty's settlement and possessions."

In the treaty with Guatemala the boundaries were defined, and it was agreed that all on one side of the defined boundaries "belongs to Her Britannic Majesty." It is further understood that when the commissioners met to mark the boundary in accordance with the agreement, it was found that the subjects of Great Britain had occupied so much more of Guatemala than was supposed that the commissioner on the part of Her Majesty's Government refused to proceed, and this large area of land has since remained practically in the possession of Great Britain.

The United States have never given their assent to this conversion of the British "settlement" in Central America under Spanish-American sovereignty into a British "possession" with British sovereignty. There is a vast difference between a settlement subject to the sovereignty of the Central-American republic and a colony controlled by Great Britain.

Under the treaty of 1850, while it is binding, the United States have not the right to exercise dominion over or to colonize one foot of territory in Central America. Great Britain is under the same rigid restriction. And if Great Britain has violated and continues to violate that provision, the treaty is, of course, voidable at the pleasure of the United States.

Again, it is well known that the parties to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty anticipated that a canal by the Nicaragua route was to be at once commenced. Under the assumption of a protectorate of Mosquito, British authority was at that time in actual and visible occupation of one end of the Nicaragua route, whether with or without title is not now material, and it was intended by this treaty to dispossess Great Britain of this occupation. This object was accomplished in 1859 and 1860 by treaties between Great Britain, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua, referred to in Lord Granville's dispatch of January 14, 1882. It was to this adjustment, which was one of the prime objects of the treaty, and not to the colonization of British Honduras that Mr. Buchanan in his message of December 3, 1860, alludes as "an amicable and honoroble adjustment of dangerous questions arising from the Clayton-Bulwer treaty."

When the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was concluded it was contemplated that the Nicaragua Canal, to which the treaty principally had relation, would be at once commenced and finished with all possible speed by American and British capital under the impulse of the joint protectorate. This appears not only from the context of the treaty, but also from the history of the negotiations which led to the treaty and the relations which then existed between this government and the Central American States.

On December 12, 1846, New Grenada, by a treaty of commerce, in consideration of certain guarantees, made the United States valuable grants relating to the Panama route, to which your attention will be directed when we consider the rights of this republic in relation to the Panama route.

The discovery of gold in California soon made it important to find some rapid way of reaching it. Notwithstanding the progress of the Panama Railroad scheme, public feeling was running strongly in favor of a ship-canal large enough to accommodate ocean steamships. Influenced by this strong feeling the minister of the United States in Nicaragua, without instructions, negotiated a treaty with that republic, which conferred upon certain citizens of the United States the valuable right to construct a ship-canal from San Juan on the Atlantic coast to the Pacific. Nicaragua claimed sovereignty over the whole of the line of the proposed canal, while Great Britain, as I have shown, claimed sovereignty over a portion of it occupied by the Mosquito Indians.

At the time of the concession by Nicaragua it would have been impossible to procure in the United States the capital necessary for the construction of a ship canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Hence it was that, when Mr. Clayton learned of the concession, he at once informed Mr. Crampton, the British minister, saying that the United States did not propose to avail themselves exclusively of these privileges, but wished a canal constructed, and that the claim of Great Britain on behalf of the Mosquito Indians, which the United States could not admit, stood in the way. The Government of the United States, Mr. Clayton said, was persuaded that—

> These considerations, if fairly laid before Her Majesty's Government, would induce Her Majesty's Government to make such an arrangement with regard to the Mosquito Indians as would prevent its being an obstacle to the design in question.

President Taylor was present at the interview, and "cordially concurred." Mr. Crampton reported the conversation to Lord Palmerston the 1st October, and on the 15th of the same month transmitted to him a copy of the concession by Nicaragua to the American company. The 22d November Mr. Abbott Lawrence officially informed Lord Palmerston that an American company, aided by the subscription of a large amount of British capital, had begun to construct the Panama Railroad, and had completed the contracts for iron for it. He transmitted to Lord Palmerston a copy of the guaranty in the treaty of 1846 with New Grenada, and invited Great Britain to join in the guaranty. In the same note he acquainted Her Majesty's Government with the concession from Nicaragua to the American canal company, and said that the conflicting claims as to Mosquito threw an obstacle in the way of the work, and invited a conversation on the subject. It seems that several conversations were had, since on the 14th of the following December Mr. Lawrence addressed a formal note to Lord Palmerston, in which, after referring to them and again setting forth the concessions for the Panama Railroad and the Nicaragua Canal, and stating that the United States had "disclaimed all intention to settle, annex, colonize, or fortify the territory of Central America, which declaration had been met by a similar disclaimer on the part of Great Britain," and also that Her Majesty's Government "had intimated their willingness to join with the "United States in their guaranty of neutrality," he asked in substance, 1st. Whether Great Britain would enter into a treaty with Nicaragua similar to that negotiated by the United States? 2d. Whether Great Britain would enter into treaty with New Grenada guaranteeing the neutrality of the railway then under construction. 3d. Whether the obstruction of the Mosquito protectorate would be removed? This note was never answered formally in London, but negotiations were transferred to Washington.

Meantime, and in the autumn of 1849, Sir Henry Bulwer had succeeded Mr. Crampton in Washington and, soon after his arrival, commenced negotiations with Mr. Clayton for a treaty for the protection of a canal.

On the 6th January, 1850, Sir Henry Bulwer wrote to Lord Palmerston, saying:

> Your lordship is aware that the main interest of the United States in this matter has arisen from its newly acquired possession in the Pacific, and the project of an American company to form a water communication between the two oceans, passing through the lake of Nicaragua and the river San Juan; this company having obtained from the state of Nicaragua the use of its lakes and territory for this purpose, and the use also of the river San Juan, to which Nicaragua lays claim. * * * But it so happens that while it is very difficult, not to say impossible, for Her Majesty's Government to listen to those claims of Nicaragua, our decision with respect to which has been already openly taken, there is no difficulty, I believe, whatsoever in Her Majesty's Government assisting the United States in its general views with respect to that water communication across Central America, which Great Britain must be almost as desirous as the United States to see established. * * * I am disposed to think that the best way of doing this is by a convention between Great Britain and the United States.

Negotiations conducted on this basis progressed so rapidly that on the 3d February, 1850, Sir Henry Bulwer was able to transmit for Lord Palmerston's criticism the full project of a treaty. Extracts from the covering dispatch fully explain what the treaty was intended to accomplish:

> The State of Nicaragua made to an American company, formed for the construction of such a canal, the grant, accompanied by various favors and privileges, of all such portion of the territory claimed by it, as the said company require. * * * It was, however, impossible for the contemplated scheme to be executed under any grant from the state of Nicaragua as long as the mouth of the San Juan River was in the hands of another people protected by Great Britain. * * * Both the American company, to which I have alluded, and the American Government, have latterly manifested an earnest desire to have it clearly understood that they will modify all that portion of their original engagement with Nicaragua which secures any advantages to one state which another may not equally enjoy; and if such be the spirit which is to preside over the vast project under consideration, Great Britain has not only no interest in preventing its success, but every interest in forwarding its completion and providing for its security. * * * It is with such views that the inclosed convention has been drawn up, its object being to exclude all question of the disputes between Nicaragua and the Mosquitos, but to settle in fact all that it was essential to settle with regard to these disputes as far as the ship communication between the Atlantic and Pacific and the navigation of the river San Juan were concerned.

The project, which was inclosed in this dispatch, was in the substance of its provisions and in most of its language, identical with the treaty subsequently concluded, with one marked exception. In the project, Article VII stopped with the general provision to give encouragement and support to the first parties offering to commence the work with the necessary capital. In the subsequent negotiations the following words were added to that article, and form part of Article VII of the executed treaty:

And if any persons or company should already have, with any state through which the proposed ship-canal may pass, a contract for the construction of such a canal as that specified in this convention, to the stipulations of which contract neither of the contracting parties in this convention have any just cause to object, and the said persons or company shall, moreover, have made preparations and expended time, money, and trouble on the faith of such contract, it is hereby agreed that such persons or company shall have a priority of claim over every other person, persons, or company to the protection of the governments of the United States and Great Britain, and be allowed a year from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention for concluding their arrangements and presenting evidence of sufficient capital subscribed to accomplish the contemplated undertaking; it being understood that if at the expiration of the aforesaid period such persons or company be not able to commence and carry out the proposed enterprise, then the governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be free to afford their protection to any other persons or company that shall be prepared to commence and proceed with the construction of the canal in question.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty was concluded on the 19th of the following April, and I think it will not be denied that the object which President Taylor, Mr. Clayton, Sir Henry Bulwer, and Lord Palmerston had in view in making it was primarily and mainly this: To insure at the earliest possible moment the completion of the particular ship-canal for which a concession had been made by Nicaragua to citizens of the United States on the 29th August, 1849. All the interviews of which accounts remain, and all the correspondence relate to this particular canal and to no other. As if to make assurance doubly sure, the project of a treaty which Sir Henry Bulwer sent to Lord Palmerston the 3d of February being found doubtful or insufficient in this respect, was so amended between that time and the 19th April as to make it practically certain that that grant would be accepted by both governments as the one covered by the treaty.

It was to this particular canal that were to be applied all the provisions of the first article in the treaty relating to the fortification of the canal, the control over it, and exclusive advantage in it; of the second article, relating to blockade, detention or capture; of the third and fourth articles, relating to protection during construction and to free ports; of the fifth article, in regard to a guaranty of neutrality; of the sixth article, with regard to treaties with other states, and the use of the good offices of the high contracting parties; and of the seventh article, as already noticed; but if under the provisions of the seventh article the claims of the holders of this particular concession should be set aside, then each government reserved to itself the right to determine whether its interests required it to afford protection to the holders of any other concession.

The two governments did, however, subsequently come to a harmonious agreement with regard to the grant by Nicaragua, the one contemplated by the treaty.

The company was organized, and Colonel Childs, who had been chief engineer of the canals of the State of New York, was sent to Nicaragua to make a survey. He arrived there in August, 1850, and in 1852 his report was received, printed, and laid before the Secretary of War by direction of the President, who detailed Colonel Abert and Lieutenant-Colonel Turnbull, of the United States Army, to examine it and give their opinions upon it. They approved the report on the 20th March, 1852.

On the 16th June, in the same year, Mr. Lawrence informed Lord Malmesbury of these facts, and requested Her Majesty's Government to appoint engineers of skill and experience to examine it on the part of that government.

Mr. Lawrence was on the 30th July informed that an officer of the royal engineers and an eminent civil engineer had been appointed for that purpose, and on the 13th August their report was transmitted to Mr. Lawrence by Lord Malmesbury. The report was favorable, and a combination of British capitalists was made in contemplation of united action with American shareholders in the construction of the canal. For reasons which need not now be repeated, but principally because of the discussion which immediately began as to the clauses of the treaty relating to settlements in British Honduras, the project failed, and no canal was ever constructed under that grant.

A line of steamers was put on and run for many years, carrying passengers between New York and San Francisco. The expedition of Walker into Nicaragua terminated this line. The grant was revoked, the steamers were seized; the stockholders received no benefit from their property, and although the company nominally exists, it has been practically superseded by subsequent grants from Nicaragua to other companies.

It was also agreed in the treaty that the parties should invite other states to enter into similar stipulation, to the end that they might share in the "honor and advantage of having contributed to a work of such general interest and importance as the canal herein contemplated," to wit, that by the Nicaragua route.

It is to be observed that if other nations were to become parties to the enterprise it was only on the joint invitation of both the United States and Great Britain; but the President regards the provision as lapsed by the failure to construct the canal to which it referred, and by the fact before stated that experience has shown that no joint protectorate for any canal across the isthmus is requisite. The canal, however, now in question is on the Panama and not on the Nicaragua route.

The remaining subject of the treaty is contained in the eighth article, which relates to a canal or railway across the isthmus other than by the Nicaragua route, as by way of Tehuantepec or Panama, and it is this provision of the treaty which has occasioned this correspondence. The article provides as follows:

> The Governments of the United States and Great Britain having not only desired in entering into this convention to accomplish a particular object [to wit, the Nicaragua Canal, which, at the date of the treaty, it was thought was about to be constructed], but also to establish a general principle, they hereby agree to extend their protection, by treaty stipulations, to any other communications, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and especially to the inter-oceanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panama.

It is to be here observed that the Government of the United States has a treaty with New Grenada, now a part of the United States of Colombia, entered into in 1846, by which free transit is guarantied to the citizens of the United States across the Isthmus of Panama upon any mode of communication that may be constructed, subject to no duties or burdens but such as may be imposed upon citizens of New Grenada; and by which, in order to secure the tranquil and constant enjoyment of these advantages, the United States guarantied, positively and efficaciously, the perfect neutrality of the isthmus, with the view that free transit from sea to sea might not be interrupted or embarrassed, and also guarantied the rights of sovereignty and property which New Grenada (now the United States of Colombia) had and possesses over said territory.

By this treaty with New Grenada the United States claim to occupy a peculiar relation to the means of transit by railroad or canal across the isthmus, within the territories of the United States of Colombia, a relation which cannot justly be superseded by the intervention of other States without the consent of the United States, duly and properly obtained. A protectorate of this kind is, like government, necessarily exclusive in its character, and implies a right and duty to make it effective. There may be a joint protectorate engaged in by mutual convention of different States, but the protectorate itself must be a unit. The treaty with New Grenada of 1846 still remains in full force. If Great Britain should desire to be united with the Government of the United States in that guaranty, of course it would require the consent of the United States of Colombia and of this government, and a convention to that end, the terms of which should be made agreeable to the parties.

Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty relates only to those projects now [1850] proposed to be established; and expressly contemplates some further "treaty stipulation" on the part of Great Britain with the United States of America and New Grenada, now the United States of Colombia, before Great Britain can join the United States in the protectorate of the canal or railway by the Panama route. No such treaty stipulation has been made or has been proposed by Great Britain. Since the ratification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, for thirty years the United States, under the treaty of 1846 with New Grenada, has extended protection to the transit from sea to sea by the Panama Railway.

Should Her Majesty's Government, after obtaining the consent thereto of the United States of Colombia, claim, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, the right to join the United States in the protection of the existing Panama Railway, or any future Panama Canal, the United States would submit that experience has shown that no such joint protectorate is requisite; that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is subject to the provisions of the treaty of 1846 with New Grenada, while it exists, which treaty obliges the United States to afford, and secures to it the sole protectorate of any transit by the Panama route; and if Great Britain still claimed the right to join in the protectorate the United States would then determine whether the "treaty stipulations" proposed by Great Britain regulating that joint protectorate were just; and, if so, whether the length of time during which Great Britain has concurred in the protection of the Panama route under the treaty with New Grenada has or has not relieved the United States from any obligation to accept a proposal from the government to join in the guaranty.

I may then state the President's views on the whole subject, which I do with an assurance that they will meet with a candid consideration from Lord Granville, and with the hope that they may be substantially concurred in by Her Majesty's Government.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty was concluded to secure a thing which did not exist, and which now never can exist. It was to secure the construction of a canal under the grant of 1849 from Nicaragua that the United States consented to waive the exclusive and valuable rights which had been given to them; that they consented to agree with Great Britain that they would not occupy, fortify, colonize, or assume dominion over any part of Central America; and that they consented to admit Her Majesty's Government at some future day to a share in the protection which they have exercised over the Isthmus of Panama.

The Government and people of the United States, though rich in land and industry, were poor in money and floating capital in 1850. The scheme for a canal, even without the complications of the Mosquito protectorate, was too vast for the means of the Americans of that day, who numbered then considerably less than one-half of their numbers to-day. They went to England, which had what they had not, surrendered their exclusive privileges, offered an equal share of all they had in those regions in order, as expressed in the seventh article of the treaty, "that no time should be unnecessarily lost in commencing and constructing the said canal." Through no fault of theirs time was unnecessarily lost, the work was never begun, and the concession failed.

The President does not think that the United States are called upon by any principle of equity to revive those provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which were specially applicable to the concession of August, 1849, and apply them to any other concession which has been since or may hereafter be made. The conditions of 1882 are not those of 1852. The people of the United States have now abundance of surplus capital for such enterprises, and have no need to call upon foreign capitalists. The legislative branch of the Government of the United States may also desire to be free to place the credit of the United States at the service of one or more of these enterprises. The President does not feel himself warranted in making any engagement or any admission respecting the extinct provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which would prevent or interfere with such a purpose. On the contrary, frankness requires him to say that as the persons who held the grant which the United States understood to be accepted by the two governments under the provisions of the treaty have not "carried out the proposed enterprise," the United States esteem themselves competent to refuse to afford their protection jointly with Great Britain to any other persons or company, and hold themselves free hereafter to protect any interoceanic communication in which they or their citizens may become interested in such way as treaties with the local sovereign powers may warrant and their interests may require.

There are some provisions of the treaty which the President thought might be advantageously retained. With this purpose the present correspondence was opened by the note to you of the 19th November last, in which these points were indicated. The President is still ready on the part of the United States to agree that the reciprocal engagements respecting the acquisition of territory in Central America, and respecting the establishment of a free port at each end of whatever canal may be constructed, shall continue in force, and to define by agreement the distance from either end of the canal where captures may be made by a belligerent in time of war, and with this definition thus made to keep alive the second article of the treaty. He hopes that Lord Granville on future consideration may not be averse to revising his opinion that such agreements would not be beneficial.

To the suggestion made by Lord Granville, at the close of this note of January 7, that the United States should take the initiative in an invitation to other powers to participate in an agreement based upon the convention of 1850, the President is constrained, by the considerations already presented, to say that the United States cannot take part in extending such an invitation, and to state with entire frankness, that the United States would look with disfavor upon an attempt at a concert of political action by other powers in that direction.

It is not necessary to observe that there is no provision of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which authorizes Great Britain to invite, or obliges the United States to accept, the aid of other nations to protect or to guarantee the neutrality of the Panama route.

Fortunately the want of harmony in the views of the two governments can have at present no injurious influence. No canal yet exists across the Isthmus, and in the natural course of events some time must elapse before one can be constructed; meanwhile the points of divergence between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States may disappear. The President hopes that long before the subject becomes one of practical importance Her Majesty's Government may be brought to see that the interests of Great Britain and of the United States in this matter are identical, and are best promoted by the peaceful policy which he has marked out for this country.

In the mean time the diversity of opinion which now exists will not in any wise impair the good understanding happily existing between the people and Governments of the United States and Great Britain.

You will read this dispatch to Lord Granville, and if he desires to have a copy of it you may leave one with him.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING,

In response to Senate resolution of December 13, 1881, a report of the Secretary of State, and accompanying papers, touching affairs in or between Peru and Chili.

JANUARY 26, 1882.—Read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, and accompanying papers, furnished in response to the resolution of the Senate of the 13th ultimo, calling for correspondence touching affairs in or between Peru and Chili.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 26, 1882.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 24, 1882.

To the PRESIDENT:

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 13th ultimo, requesting the President, "if, in his opinion, it be not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate all the correspondence between the Government of the United States and its diplomatic agents in Peru and Chili, respectively, occurring since the 1st day of April, 1879, touching public affairs in or between those States, and also such other correspondence and information on the subject as may be in the possession of the Executive Department," has the honor to lay before the President the full correspondence in response to that resolution.

The resolution calls for all the correspondence, and the Secretary of State is not aware of any correspondence, whether diplomatic or of a miscellaneous character, touching the subject, on the files of the Department during the period indicated in the resolution, which is not submitted herewith. Where asterisks indicate a hiatus in the copy, they represent, so far as he is aware, only parts of papers which are omitted because referring to subjects in no way pertinent to the resolution. In many cases asterisks stand in the place of names. In some instances this has been done because, in the judgment of the President, it would have been incompatible with the public interests to disclose the names of representatives or members of foreign governments. In other cases this has been done because the names of persons have been given in papers written by persons holding no official position and without, so far as appears from the files of the Department of State, any sufficient authority on the part of the writers to use such names; such unofficial papers themselves are, nevertheless, sent, because they seem to come within the call of the Senate, having been received by persons holding official positions under this Department.

With these exceptions and explanations, the papers herewith submitted are a full compliance with the terms of the resolution of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

FRED'K T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

98	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Osborn (telegram).	Sept. 28	Peace question: "Proceed as proposed if belligerents accede; instructions to our vessels when you telegraph for them."	129
99	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts (No. 169).	Sept. 30	Mediation: Government of Chili is committed to a more vigorous prosecution of the war, but our mediation may bring about peace, though it is unlikely, in consequence of the indisposition of Peru to make adequate concessions; Chili will probably not assent to an armistice pending peace negotiation; destruction of Chimbote by the Chilians; vindicatory explanations thereof; neutral property to be respected by Chilians; does not agree with Mr. Christiancy that refusal of Chili to assent to an armistice would be disrespectful to the United States.	129
100	Same to same (No. 171)	Oct. 6	Mr. Christiancy's visit to Santiago; embarrassing position in which Chili was placed by that visit; refers to his No. 167; Mr. Osborn is astonished that Chili has not withdrawn her acceptance of our mediation.	130
101	Same to same (No. 172)	Oct. 8	Mediation accepted through note from foreign office, inclosed; Chili declines to suspend hostilities pending peace negotiations.	131
102	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Osborn (No. 109).	Oct. 14	Mediation: proceedings of legation for, by the United States seem to prosper thus far; full advices awaited; no. 163, and telegram of the 9th instant, received.	132
102½	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts (telegram).	Oct. 28	Conference closed without result.	133
103	Same to same (No. 173).....	Oct. 28	Peace conference: termination of; failure of peace negotiations; surprise at Peru's refusal to cede Tarapaca; Chilian expedition against Lima; armed intervention of European powers not apprehended at present.	133
104	Mr. Valderrama to Mr. Asta-Buruaga.	Nov. 11	Peace conference: Expressing regret at failure thereof, but sincere thanks for mediation and good disposition of the United States, and commending conduct of Mr. Osborn.	134
105	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Osborn (telegram).	Nov. 19	Neutrals: instructed as to taking action for protection of lives and property of, when Lima is attacked by Chilians.	135
106	Mr. Valderrama to Mr. Asta-Buruaga.	Nov. 22	Peace conference: Chili not to blame for failure of; she would not have accepted mediation of the United States and gone into the conference had she not been assured by Mr. Christiancy that Peru would cede Tarapaca.	135
107	Same to same	Nov. 22	Peace conference: embarrassing misrepresentations of Chili's attitude regarding acceptance of mediation of the United States; commendation of Mr. Osborn's course.	136
108	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts (No. 181).	Nov. 23	War policy of Chili; she proposes to take Tarapaca from Peru not by right of conquest, but as indemnity for war damages; vindication of Chili's refusal to submit to arbitration; foreign office circular explaining Chili's war policy inclosed.	141
109	Same to same (No. 182).....	Nov. 30	Neutrals: protection of lives and property in the event of the capture of Lima by the Chilians; confirms his telegram of the 26th instant; incloses foreign office note that Chili has taken due precaution for the safety of neutrals and their property.	146
110	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Osborn (No. 115).	Dec. 27	Arbitration: instructed to correct erroneous impression that the United States would not cheerfully act as arbitrator, which a certain remark made by him during peace conference may have caused.	147

113	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Osborn (No. 119).	Feb. 10	Peace question: urge upon Chili the desire of the United States to bring about peace; now that the Chilians have captured Lima and Callas, it is believed that Peru will accept mediation of the United States upon any reasonable terms; advises him of instruction of this date to Mr. Christiancy.	151
114	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts (No. 195).	Feb. 24	Peace conference: vindication of remarks made by him during it, in regard to arbitration; they did not make any erroneous impression on Chili as to disposition of the United States; reply to No. 115.	151
115	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Blaine (No. 198).	Mar. 23	Peace question: no prospects of early solution of; the situation in Peru; attitude of Chili; Mr. Osborn will do all in his power to effect an early peace. Chilian general's account of capture of Lima and its immediate antecedents, inclosed.	153
116	Same to same (No. 201).....	Apr. 5	Peace question: prospects for solution of, very remote; Chili's hopes in the Calderon government of Peru have been greatly weakened; demoralization in Peru prevents establishment of a stable government; course which Chili may adopt.	155
117	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Blaine (No. 202).	Apr. 6	Mediation: Great Britain, France, and Italy tender their mediation to Chili; it is rejected by Chili; the Europeans neither dissatisfied nor disappointed.	155
118	Mr. Martinez to Mr. Hitt....	May 6	Protectorate over Peru: vehemently denies rumor that Chili intends to establish the same.	156
119	Mr. Osborn to Mr. Blaine (No. 205).	May 7	Peace question: determination of Chili to strengthon the Calderon government in Peru and to treat with it for peace; Mr. Godoy, former minister to the United States, goes to Lima in charge of negotiations; recommends Chili's course; advice given her by Mr. Osborn; she will certainly insist upon cession of Tarapaca and possibly Mosquegua.	156
120	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Kilpatrick (No. 2).	June 15	Intervention: instructed to encourage disposition of Chili to restore self-government in Peru; to urge Chili to enter into negotiations for peace before deciding to take portion of Peru as war indemnity, and to endeavor to have European intervention excluded from adjustment of the peace question.	157
121	Mr. Kilpatrick to Mr. Blaine (No. 3).	Aug. 15	Peace question: reports his efforts to induce Chili to adopt views of the United States; counteracting and bad effect produced in Chili by published statements of United States minister at Lima, that United States will not allow acquisition of territory by Chili from Peru.	160
122	Same to same (No. 8)	Oct. 14	Policy of the United States: erroneous and disquieting statement by Minister Hurlbut at Lima concerning; denial of its truths and counteraction of its effects by Mr. Kilpatrick reported; note to Minister Balmaceda inclosed.	162
123	Mr. Martinez to Mr. Blaine.	Oct. 24	Complains of the conduct of Mr. Hurlbut the United States minister at Lima; extracts from newspapers inclosed, which give the cause of complaint.	164
124	Same to same	Oct. 27	Unfriendly attitude of Mr. Hurlbut, towards Chili: Mr. Martinez incloses a note from his government instructing him to ascertain if views of the United States are in accord with those of Mr. Hurlbut.	166
125	Same to same	Oct. 28	Suppression of the Calderon government of Peru by Chili: propriety with which the Chilian commander proceeded in the matter set forth.	167
126	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Kilpatrick. (No. 13).	Nov. 22	Peace question: his note to the foreign office to allay apprehension and correct false impression produced by the United States minister at Lima strongly disapproved; Chili had no grounds for apprehension and should not have applied to legation; her course in suppressing Calderon government unintelligible in view of her previous assurances, reported in legation's No. 3; arrest of Calderon regretted; hopes it is not intended as a rebuke to the United States on account of differences between him and his colleague at Lima; a special envoy will be sent to endeavor to arrange a peace; reply to No. 8.	168

127	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Kilpatrick (telegram).	Nov. 25	Calderon government; its suppression and arrest of President Calderon are not understood by United States; special envoy leaves Washington for Chili immediately, and it is hoped that further action will await his arrival.	169
128	Mr. Martinez to Mr. Blaine.	Nov. 26	Peace question: sets forth illusory hopes and impertinent attitude of the Peruvians and the obnoxious officiousness of United States minister at Lima which, if persisted in, will render peace impossible; denies rumors that Chili's demands upon Peru are inequitable and her rule cruel.	169
129	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Kilpatrick (No. 16).	Nov. 30	Relieves him of negotiations for solution of peace question; informs him as to appointment and powers of Mr. Trescot as special envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to conduct such negotiations; appointment of Third Assistant Secretary of State as assistant to Mr. Trescot; Mr. Kilpatrick expected to aid Mr. Trescot.	171
130	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Trescot (No. 1).	Nov. 30	Personal instructions as special envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Chili, Peru, and Bolivia to negotiate for solution of peace question.	172
131	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Walker Blaine.	Nov. 30	Personal instruction as attaché to special mission for settlement of the peace question.	173
132	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Trescot (No. 2).	Dec. 1	Reviews previous instructions and steps which led to recognition of Calderon government; the act an adoption of policy friendly to Chili; it was followed by Chilian military order forbidding Calderon government to exercise its functions; President will not assume this as done in consequence of the recognition by the United States; if such a motive should be avowed, Mr. Trescot instructed to say that it is regarded as an intentional offense, and to suspend diplomatic intercourse, but he may receive any explanation which does not involve a disavowal of Mr. Hurlbut. The United States wishes first to stop bloodshed and misery; second, to take care that the Government of the United States is treated with the consideration to which it is entitled, and would be satisfied with manifestation of purpose in Chili either to restore Calderon government or establish one which will be allowed freedom of action in negotiations. Should Chili refuse to allow formation of government not pledged to consent to cession of territory, he is to express dissatisfaction of the United States. The United States recognizes Chili's right to adequate indemnity and guarantee, but that the exercise of the right of absolute conquest is dangerous; and the United States think that Peru has the right to demand an opportunity to find indemnity and guarantee without cession of territory. The prohibition of the formation of a government is practical extinction of the State. If good offices are refused on this basis, the United States holds itself free to appeal to the other republics of the continent to join with it. Instructions given in accordance, and a temporary convention counseled.	174
133	Mr. Kilpatrick to Mr. Blaine (No. 9).	Dec. 2	Peace question: Chili promised Mr. Kilpatrick that she would not demand cession of territory as absolute condition, and that she would build up and strengthen Calderon's government; these promises would have been fulfilled but for the representations made by Mr. Hurlbut of the attitude of the United States. Reasons for suppression of Calderon; bad faith. Coming of special mission creates excitement, and alleged support by United States of the Peruvian Company scheme greatly intensifies it. Extreme illness of Mr. Kilpatrick.	179
134	Mr. Blaine to Mr. Trescot (No. 3).	Dec. 2	Congress of American governments: authorized to return home by way of Argentine Republic and Brazil and to urge the governments of those countries to accept our invitation to such Congress.	181

140	Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Trescot (telegram).	Jan. 3	Pacific influence; informs him that same should be exerted, and all issues which might lead to his withdrawal from Chili avoided.	186
141	Same to same (telegram).....	Jan. 4	Impartial extension of friendly offices to both republics; exertion of pacific influence, and avoidance of possibly offensive issues, are desired by the President. Directs him not to return via Buenos Ayres. Calderon difficulty can be settled here.	186
142	Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Martinez.	Jan. 7	Arrest of President Calderon; requested to repeat in writing the assurance given orally by him that it was not instigated by an unfriendly feeling towards the United States.	186
143	Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Trescot (No. 6).	Jan. 9	Refers to cablegrams. Modifies previous written instructions. President desires no dictation to either power as to merits of controversy, as to indemnity, as to change of boundaries, or as to personnel of government; he has no right or inclination to dictate to independent republics; an attitude of dictation would necessitate the taxation of our people to support an army and navy for the exclusive benefit of foreign nations; his policy that of Washington; is ready to extend kindly offices of United States impartially to both parties; revokes former instruction as to suspension of diplomatic intercourse; reserves to himself the right to determine such question; does not wish Mr. Trescot to visit Atlantic republics as envoy after leaving Chili; will determine hereafter whether he wishes to enter into further negotiations for continuance of peace with selected nations without also inviting other powers. The principles controlling the relations of American republics with each other are well established, and little to be gained by reopening the subject. President prefers time for deliberation.	186
144	Mr. Martinez to Mr. Frelinghuysen.	Jan. 10	Montero's pretended administration a farce; presence of Chilian army necessary in Lima to prevent anarchy. Expedition sent by Chili against Peruvian Chief Cáceres. Peruvians responsible for consequences of their foolhardy obstinacy. Assumption of administration of finances of Peru by General Lynch. Threat of Bolivia to invade Tarapaca will not be carried out. Mr. Hurlbut's letter to the notables of Lima inclosed, with comments as to its extraordinary character.	188
145	Same to same	Jan. 10	Suppression of Calderon government; states Chili's reasons for; it was intended as an affront to the United States.	190

208	Mr. Hay to Mr. Christiancy (No. 47).	Nov. 26	Communication between legation and Department: if same should be cut off by Chili, he should not adopt any special means of communication, except in case of absolute necessity.	288
209	Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts (No. 87).	Nov. 26	Blockade of Iquique by Chilian war vessel, reported.	289
210	Same to same (No 88)	Nov. 26	Progress of war: a signal victory for Chili; mutiny of Bolivian troops; rumored desertion of Peru by Bolivia and alliance with Chili; revolution expected in Peru; instructions invited with respect to recognition of a new government in Peru.	289
211	Same to same (No. 90)	Dec. 3	Capture of Iquique and blockade of Arica by Chilians; resumption of Presidency by General Prado; new ministry; Peruvian victory at Arica; Pierola does not desire to become dictator at present.	291
212	Same to same (No. 91)	Dec. 7	Political: change of ministry; manifesto of Pierola, setting forth his position, and condemning the constitution of Peru as the source of all Peru's calamities; Mr. Christiancy shows, however, that the constitution is a very flexible one and need not embarrass the government; Peru requires just such a constitution; decree whereby the government monopolizes purchase of silver produced in Peru, and increases export-tax on sugar, inclosed.	292
213	Same to same (No. 93)	Dec. 16	Very little progress in war: port of Ilo blockaded by Chilian navy; allied troops massing at Arica; enlistments for Peruvian army active; disaffection in Bolivia turns out to have been in favor of vigorous support instead of desertion of Peru; depreciation of Peruvian paper currency.	295
214	Same to same (No. 94)	Dec. 23	Revolution in Peru: departure of President Prado for United States, on 18th instant, leaving vice-president as President; motives for this action on part of Prado; want of confidence in the government, and a general wish for assumption of the government by Pierola manifested immediately upon Prado's departure; fight between Pierolists and government troops near the United States legation in Lima; army declares for Pierola; noble conduct of Prado's minister of war; government abdicates, and Pierola assumes control of affairs without opposition; character of Pierola; instructions as to recognition of his government requested; explanatory documents inclosed.	296
215	Same to same (No. 97)	Dec. 24	Legation's instructions to consul at Iquique, as to his duties while that port remains in possession of the Chilians, inclosed.	301
216	Same to same (No. 98)	Dec. 31	Refers to legation's No. 94, and incloses the decree of Pierola, and letter written by President Prado, at Guayquil, while en route to the United States; these papers show the character and status of present Government of Peru.	302
217	Same to same (No. 99)	Dec. 31	Question of recognition of Pierola's government: conference of diplomatic corps; all of the corps but Mr. Christiancy decide to recognize Pierola; Mr. Christiancy informs foreign office that recognition of the new government is not within his discretion, and he must await Department instructions, but he will attend at public ceremonies upon the understanding that such course shall not be construed as recognition.	306
218	Same to same (No. 102).....	Jan. 6	Progress of war: Chilian successes and probable projects; massing of troops by Peru at Lima and Callao; deposition of General Daza from command of Bolivian army; rumor of revolution in Bolivia; financial condition of Peru more likely to grow worse than to improve; speculation as to use to be made of Peruvian forces now at Callao and Lima.	307
219	Same to same (No. 103).....	Jan. 7	Refers to legation's No. 94, and incloses protest of General de la Cotera who was Prado's minister of war; character of General de la Cotera; objectionableness of Pierola's government owing to its dictatorial character; said government is conciliating the Roman Catholic influences, to which it owes its existence; it is more active, vigorous, and consistent of purpose than its predecessor, and merits recognition.	308

237	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Calderon	Mar. 1	Blockades established by Chili at Peruvian ports: inefficiency of; if Chili seizes any American vessel for entering a port which is insufficiently blockaded she will be required to make reparation; reply to note of 14th January.	330
238	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Christiancy (No. 64).	Mar. 1	Blockade of Mollendo by Chilian squadron; legation's instruction to consular agent at Arica relative to, approved; instructed to take no notice of any manifesto on subject unless it is addressed to him in his official capacity.	330
239	Same to same (No. 65)	Mar. 2	Belligerent rights of Peru: question as to authority of consul at Iquique, which is now in possession of the Chilians, to grant clearances to vessels loaded with nitrates taken from beds belonging to Peru, but now in military possession of Chili; No. 112 received; consuls have no right to grant clearances under any circumstances; local authorities alone have such rights; when these authorities grant vessels clearances consuls should deliver to such vessels their papers; consul cannot gainsay opinion of the existing authority at his port as to what may be lawfully exported; Peru's resentment at exportation of these nitrates is natural, but her assertion of right to seize neutral vessels loaded with them is contrary to public law and will not be admitted by foreign governments.	331
240	Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts (No. 123).	Mar. 3	Decrees of Dictator of Peru inclosed; calls special attention to one of them restraining newspaper attacks upon individuals and private character; the principle of this decree might be adopted advantageously by other countries.	333
241	Mr. Tracy to Mr. Evarts	Mar. 9	Refutation of recent newspaper statement that Bolivia had deserted Peru.	335
242	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Christiancy (No. 69).	Mar. 10	Recognition of government of Pierola; action of legation, as reported in 115, approved.	336
243	Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts (No. 133).	Mar. 17	Progress of war: bombardments by Chilian naval forces.	336
244	Mr. Calderon to Mr. Tracy..	Mar. 17	Protest of Peru against Chili's barbarous mode of warfare, and her course in regard to Peruvian nitrate deposits; insufficiency of blockades established by Chili; neutral vessels disposing, for benefit of Chili, of nitrates which Peru considers hers, regarded by Peru as enemy's vessels; Chili wages war against neutrals; friendly feeling of United States towards both belligerents; her readiness to mediate; circulars and decrees inclosed.	337
245	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Tracy	Mar. 22	His note of 9th instant, denying rumor of desertion of Peru by Bolivia, acknowledged.	344
246	Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts (No. 137).	Mar. 23	Progress of war: barbarous warfare waged by Chili; commendation of the present Government of Peru.	344
247	Same to same (No. 138)	Mar. 24	Rights of humanity are paramount to belligerent rights; diplomatic corps is to have a conference in which Mr. Christiancy will advocate a protest against Chili's inhuman mode of warfare; circular of Peruvian Government respecting the inhumanity of Chili's war, and declaring neutral vessels loading guano from the Peruvian beds which are in possession of Chili to be enemy's vessels, inclosed.	346
248	Same to same (No. 139).....	Mar. 24	Trade between United States and Peru: how it could be increased; Peru will subsidize an American line of steamers; Peru's hostile feeling towards England, and kind feeling towards the United States.	347
249	Same to same (No. 140).....	Mar. 24	Dispatch from consul at Lambayeque, protesting against wanton destruction of life and property which Chili proposes to engage in, inclosed; Mr. Christiancy has sent a copy of it to the United States legation at Santiago.	349

278	Same to same (No. 191).....	Sept. 13	Mediation of the United States: acceptance by Chili; Peru will accept formally to-day; unsuccessful steps towards mediation taken by other powers; Bolivia's views requested; form of proposed mediation.	389
79	Same to same (No. 194).....	Sept. 17	Peru accepts mediation of United States, but protests against levying by Chilian forces upon private property on northern unfortified coast of Peru; note inclosed; efforts of Mr. Christiancy for protection of neutral property and for cessation of hostilities during peace negotiations; refusal of Chili to assent to armistice would be disrespectful to the United States, and would prevent mediation; reports his explanation to diplomatic corps at Lima of his proceedings; chagrin of Italy, France, and England at non-acceptance of their mediation; notes to Chilian commanders and to our minister at Santiago inclosed.	392
280	Same to same (No. 195).....	Sept. 18	Charges preferred against consul at Iquique, of assisting Peru in the war; consul denies the same; charges not substantiated; reply to No. 90.	397
281	Same to same (No. 197).....	Sept. 30	Arbitration of the United States is now preferred by Peru to mediation, owing to belief that Chili's demands will be too exorbitant, but she has yielded to Mr. Christiancy's persuasion to proceed to negotiation under our mediation; Chilian outrages so exasperated Peru that the conference project would have failed had it not been for Mr. Christiancy's strenuous efforts to save it.	399
282	Same to same (No. 198).....	Oct. 21	Conference: energetic and finally successful efforts of Mr. Christiancy to bring negotiators together; first meeting; Chilian proposition submitted; demands very excessive and seemingly not to be insisted upon; another meeting to-morrow, at which reply of the allies will be submitted.	400
283	Mr. Garcia to Mr. Evarts....	Oct. 25	Mediation of United States for peace between Peru and Chili; states that Peru has accepted same and deserves great credit for doing so; has little or no hope of successful termination of peace negotiations, owing to the probable insistence by Chili upon terms that Peru cannot accept.	402

287	Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts (No. 204).	Nov. 5	Peace negotiations at Arica: reports that Bolivia made a proposition which would have furnished a fair basis of agreement, and Peru would have furthered it, but was prevented from doing so by Chili's refusal to make any concession.	419
288	Mr. Calderon to Mr. Evarts.	Nov. 5	Responsibility of the war and its attendant horrors: circular exonerating Peru from, and charging Chili with, and condemning Chili's methods and motives; protocols of proceedings of peace conference inclosed.	420
289	Mr. Hay to Mr. Christiancy (No. 108).	Nov. 9	Charges preferred against consul at Iquique of assisting Peruvians in the war: approves investigation of legation; instructed to give proper attention to any further evidence in the matter which may be adduced.	423
290	Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts (No. 209).	Nov. 11	Intervention of England and France: grounds for apprehending same stated; British and French ministers opposed our mediation and urged cession of Tarapaca; their motive was protection of interests of bondholders; admitting such cession to be wise, it is not proper for a foreign power to dictate it and thus intrench on the sovereign prerogatives of the allies; intervention would be tantamount to giving active aid to victorious Chili to crush Peru; will protest against it if attempted.	424
291	Mr. Evarts to Mr. Garcia...	Nov. 13	Mediation of United States between Peru and Chili: advises him of failure of; regret and chagrin of Department; United States will welcome any further opportunity it may have presented to it to promote restoration of peace; reply to note of 25th ultimo.	426

No. 12.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 23, 1879.

SIR: The British Government has lately received information that the Government of Bolivia has decreed the issue of letters of marque, with authority to privateers to seize Chilian property in neutral vessels, and that agents have departed for the United States.

You are directed to call the attention of the Bolivian Government to the treaty of 1858, and more especially to the XVIth article thereof, which stipulates for the freedom from capture or confiscation of effects or goods belonging to subjects or citizens of a power or state at war when found on board of neutral vessels, with the exception of articles contraband of war.

The neutrality act of 1818 (section 5281 et seq. of the Revised Statutes) specially prohibits the fitting out, arming, or equipping in this country of any vessel for the purpose of committing hostilities against the people of a country with whom the United States are at peace. Should it prove true that the Bolivian Government has dispatched agents to this country for the purpose, as is understood, of engaging in this enterprise, you will remind them of the existence of this act and of the necessity which will compel this government to adopt measures for preventing a violation of it.

I am, &c.,

WM. M. EVARTS.

SIR: Referring to my instruction No. 12, of the 23d instant, in regard to the intimation received that the Government of Bolivia has decreed the issue of letters of marque, with authority to privateers to seize Chilian property in neutral vessels, and that Bolivian agents are understood to have already departed for the United States, I now transmit for your information two copies of a circular issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of the 21st instant, instructing collectors of customs and others whom it may concern with respect to the observance of the neutrality laws of the United States in case of any possible attempt being made to infringe the same in behalf of either of the belligerents.

I am, &c.,

WM. M. EVARTS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June, 18, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the British Government has received information that the Government of Bolivia has decreed the issue of letters of marque, with authority to privateers to seize Chilian property in neutral vessels, and that agents of Bolivia have departed for the United States.

With a view to causing due observance of the neutrality laws of this country, I will thank you to direct the attention of such of the collectors of customs of the United States to the matter as you in your judgment shall deem proper.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 24, 1879.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 18th instant relative to the proposed issue of letters of marque by the Government of Bolivia, with authority to privateers to seize Chilian property in neutral vessels, I have the honor to inclose herewith six copies of the circular on the subject issued by this department on the 21st instant and sent to the collectors of customs at ports from which illegal expeditions might be arranged, warning them to be vigilant to guard against any breach of the neutrality laws of the United States.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary.

OBSERVANCE OF THE NEUTRALITY LAWS.

[1879. Department No. 101. Secretary's office.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1879.

To collectors of customs and whom it may concern:

This department has received information that the Government of Bolivia has decreed the issue of letters of marque, with authority to privateers to seize Chilian property in neutral vessels, and that agents of Bolivia have departed for the United States.

Collectors of customs, in whose ports attempts may be made to fit out warlike expeditions in aid of either of the belligerent powers, will take care to see that section 5290 of the Revised Statutes be vigilantly enforced against all vessels that appear to be destined to violate the neutrality laws of the United States. The section is here reproduced:

"SEC. 5290. The several collectors of the customs shall detain any vessel manifestly built for warlike purposes, and about to depart the United States, the cargo of which principally consists of arms and munitions of war, when the number of men shipped on board, or other circumstances, render it probable that such vessel is intended to be employed by the owners to cruise or commit hostilities upon the subjects, citizens, or property of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people with whom the United States are at peace, until the decision of the President is had thereon, or until the owner gives such bond and security as is required of the owners of armed vessels by the preceding section."

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary.

No. 15.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, Bolivia, June 28, 1879. (Received Aug. 16, 1879.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that in pursuance of the appointment made yesterday, and of which you were advised by my dispatch of that date, No. 14, Sr. Manuel Vicente Ballivino, a gentleman connected with the executive branch of the government here, called at this legation and accompanied me to the department of foreign relations of this Republic, where I was most cordially received by his excellency Pedro J. de Guerra, minister of foreign relations and acting President of Bolivia, and his excellency Eulogio D. Medina, minister of finance and of war.

After an observance of the courtesies of the occasion, his excellency the minister of foreign relations remarked that, enjoying the proud satisfaction that the Government of the United States of America cherished for the Republic of Bolivia and her sister republics in South America a sincere friendship; he had sought the interview for the purpose of conferring with the representative of the government I had the honor to represent touching the complication of affairs between Chili, Bolivia, and Peru, and to learn if possible the views of the Government of the United States in that connection, entertaining, as he did, a profound respect for its opinion and wishes.

After expressing to his excellency the gratification which such a mark of respect to my government implied, I stated to him that while I was without any instruction from the government at Washington upon the subject, I felt confident that so desirous was the President of the United States of a peaceful solution of these pending difficulties, that he and his cabinet would expect all the offices of this legation, official and personal, exerted in the direction of peace, and which it would be my highest ambition and greatest pleasure to exert in the absence of special instructions in the premises, and would therefore give an attentive ear to all that his excellency might have to say.

His excellency replied that Bolivia desired peace, but could not see how it was to be obtained amicably at present, with the armies of the different powers in the field, and their forces upon the sea. I expressed the opinion that it might be obtained by some amicable arrangement, and I thought the acceptance of arbitration the humane and dignified way out, believing as I did that each of the contending powers owed some respect to human society, adding that while, as his excellency suggested, arbitration is usually resorted to prior to the actual commencement of hostilities, precedents were to be found in the conciliatory path of negotiation in the past, by which this objection or difficulty might be overcome, and the terms of equality restored between the powers interested, so as to make arbitration proper, acceptable, honorable, and profitable.

Such was substantially the character of the interview, which lasted nearly or quite two hours, and at its termination his excellency the minister of foreign relations stated that it would afford him pleasure to renew and resume the consideration of the subject at this legation at 5 o'clock, which was agreed to.

At such second meeting his excellency placed in my hands a paper, together with its translation, which (the translation) I have copied and herewith inclose, marked Inclosure 1.

I should state in this connection that I was informed by his excellency that the mediation of Brazil had been declined by Peru and Bolivia, also one of the Eastern powers, and that one of a number of reasons assigned for preferring the United States as umpire was that it was purely an American controversy.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

S. NEWTON PETTIS.

[Inclosure in No. 15.]

All under the special condition not to take any decision or compromise without the knowledge and approval of the Peruvian Government.

The authorities of Chili, civil and military, to withdraw from and disoccupy all territory that they have taken possession of upon and since the 14th day of February, 1879, leaving all things in the condition and state they were its previous to the 14th day of said month.

Then, if arbitration is agreed upon, the arbitrators to hear, determine, and decide all matters in dispute between Bolivia and Chili and Peru, and establish the divisionary line between Bolivia and Chili, Bolivia claiming the boundary line affixed by the Chilian constitution, taking with consideration the damages caused by the act of 14th February, and the subsequent aggressions claimed by Bolivia, as well as the expenses of the war.

That reference may be made to the President of the United States of America as sole arbitrator, or to the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, or to the ministers of the United States of America in Peru, Bolivia, and Chili, a decision by a majority of the arbitrators sitting, to be valid and binding upon the parties, to be approved in its execution and perpetuity by the President of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I to-day received a call from his excellency the Peruvian minister resident at La Paz.

He said that he called to tender to me as the representative of the United States the acknowledgement of his government, as well as his own, for the very humane and conciliatory views he had been informed by his excellency the minister of foreign relations of Bolivia, I had lately expressed touching the pending difficulties between Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, and assuring me that he should take especial pleasure in co-operating in every way in his power to obtain a peaceful and bloodless adjustment of the same, and knew that he reflected the sense of the Peruvian Government in that respect.

No. 17.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 8, 1879.

SIR: I transmit herewith for your information copy of a dispatch from Mr. Ernest Dichman, United States minister resident at Bogota, reciting the causes which have moved Colombia to proffer mediation for the settlement of the war between Bolivia and Peru and Chili, and announcing the appointment of Dr. Arosemena, the former secretary of foreign relations of Colombia, to visit La Paz, Lima, and Santiago, on a special mission for the purpose of tendering such mediation.

Although abstaining from any direct indorsement of, or co-operation in, this apparently laudable effort of Colombia in the interest of peace and reconciliation, this government, which feels lively solicitude for the prosperity and tranquillity of the South American states, cannot but watch Dr. Arosemena's mission with especial attention. In personal intercourse with the doctor, when he visits La Paz, you will probably find a fitting occasion to express to him the warm interest taken by the United States in this tentative step, and the friendly solicitude of this government as to the result.

I am, &c.,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Mr. Dichman to Mr. Evarts.

[Extract.]

No. 100.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Bogotá, June 20, 1879. (Received July 29.)

SIR: The war between the three South American Republics of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia is being observed with much interest at this capital, not only on account of the affinity of race and language, and the interest which would naturally arise from a similarity in name at least of political institutions, but also because it is feared that the war, if not checked, may involve other South American nations and interests to which this government could not remain indifferent.

* * * * * * * *

A resolution was adopted by Congress requesting the President to send a special minister to the three Republics of Peru, Chili, and Bolivia for the purpose of offering the mediation of the Colombian Government in the present difficulty. The Hon. Dr. Pablo Arosemena, formerly secretary of the interior and foreign relations, has been selected for the position, and it is expected that he will leave for Peru immediately, as soon as his instructions can reach him at his home at Panama.

No. 19.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 11, 1879.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 13 of the 25th of June last, reporting your interview with the minister of foreign relations on that day, has been received.

In reply I have to inform you that your course on that occasion in assuring the minister that the settled policy of strict neutrality of the United States would not be departed from in the conflict between Chili, on the one part, and Bolivia and Peru on the other, is approved.

I am, &c.,

F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary.

No. 7.

Mr. Seward to Mr. Pettis.

No. 21.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 18, 1879.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 15, of the 28th June last, reporting your conference with his excellency, the minister of foreign relations and Acting President of Bolivia, and the overtures then made to you looking to the eventual mediation of the United States with a view to arbitrating the unhappy differences between that state and Chili which have given rise to the present deplorable war, to which Peru is also a party, has been read with careful attention. Your proceedings, as stated in your dispatch, seem to have been discreet and judicious, and are approved.

The Department awaits with hopeful expectancy the further developments of the interesting question presented.

It is deemed proper to inform you that in June last simultaneous but independent overtures were made to this government by the cabinets of London and Berlin, looking to a future formal proposal from Germany and Great Britain, to act with them in a mediation between the belligerents in the present war in South America in the interest of the protection of commerce. The reply of this government was to the effect that, while as keenly alive as Germany and Great Britain can be to the dangers arising to commerce from the existence of so deplorable a war between kindred peoples, as well as to the prospective danger that other states might yet be involved in the fratricidal quarrel, and while it has been from the commencement of the struggle, and is now, ready to assist in the restoration of peace whenever its good offices may be usefully proffered, yet this government does not look with favor upon any premature effort, nor any effort in combination with other neutral powers which would carry the impression of dictation or coercion in disparagement of belligerent rights.

The views then expressed are unchanged now, except that it is thought that the time is drawing near when an honorable settlement of the questions of the war may, without disparagement to any of the parties thereto, be frankly asked and obtained through the mediation of a friendly power.

I am, &c.,

F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary.

No. 8.

Mr. Pettis to Mr. Evarts.

Unofficial.] LA PAZ, BOLIVIA, S. A.,
August 23, 1879. (Received Oct. 16.)

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have deemed it proper to accompany my dispatch of this date (No. 22) by this private note, as necessary for your full understanding of the present condition of these three troubled republics; and allow me to say that I have no doubt but what the Chilian ministry, with the approbation of President Pinto, had resolved upon taking the suggestions made by me in the presence and with the concurrence of Mr. Osborn (without the rider included in brackets in inclosure 2), and submitting the whole controversy to the United States authorities, preferring the ministers, for the reason that they were upon the ground and a decision would be promptly obtained, should you permit them to act. In fact Mr. Huneens said so; and looking to such result, he informed us that the president had summoned Mr. Santamaria, the war minister, established at Antofagasta, to the capital, desiring a united front in the movement, and assured me that he had promptly responded to the telegram; was on his way, and would reach the capital the next day by special train. His arrival seemed to cause a hitch in the consummation of that which I am confident had been resolved upon, and I was satisfied that Mr. Santamaria (who is a candidate for the presidency) was the cause of it. When he was first approached by Mr. Huneens, he remarked that he had met me at Antofagasta, on my way to Valparaiso; but he was mistaken in that, for he had never seen me; he had seen Mr. Fisher, who was a fellow-passenger upon my voyage to V.

Justice to the Chilian ministry, as well as to myself, makes it proper to state some things in this connection for your own eye, that I would gladly omit.

As I was leaving Lima, Judge Christiancy said to me, "You will meet a Colonel Fisher on the steamer, bearer of dispatches from our government, who arrived this morning from Panama, and who brought a dispatch to me, but it has nothing to do with the question we are considering"; when Mr. Fisher came up and was introduced to me. When on board the steamer he desired an introduction to the captain, and asked to be presented as "bearer of dispatches from the United States." He talked much about these peoples' troubles, was outspoken against Bolivia and Peru, and was quite partially in favor of Chili. I was reticent, as I did not wish to talk to any one, save the ministry, as I had here in La Paz and Lima, and might possibly with Mr. Osborn in Chili. When the steamer arrived at Antofagasta a number of passengers went on shore, and as I was about stepping into the small boat to return to the ship, Mr. Greene, an American, the superintendent of the nitrate works there, invited and insisted upon my going to breakfast with him, saying that Mr. Santamaria, the war manager, was stopping in his house, would be at breakfast, and that he was a power in Chili. I thanked him, but declined and would not be moved by importunity, but Mr. Fisher accepted and went up, and I feared from that moment that mischief would result from his freedom and manner of talk. The steamer was then ready to sail, and the captain was very angry at the two hours' delay caused by Mr. Fisher's conference with those on shore, as the powers had the dispatches withheld from the captain of the steamer and he could not leave until the captain of the port saw fit to take them out to him.

As we were nearing Valparaiso I asked Colonel Fisher to be a little guarded in expression in Chili, and not talk there as he had in my presence, declaiming against Bolivia and Peru, and championing Chili's cause, saying that instead of hissing her on, it was time for cooling, for casting oil upon the troubled waters, rather than further inflaming the passions; but I then feared he had done my cause damage at Antofagasta, and the only hope I had of not being made to feel the effects of it was found in the fact that possibly it would not reach Santiago in time to injure or embarrass me; but although it did not travel as fast as the storms upon the sea, it came as surely as do earth's dances along the coast of these countries, in phrases familiarly known as earthquakes. I told Mr. Osborn of my fears when Santamaria was sent for, and gave him my opinion after he arrived, both of which were confirmed by demonstration upon my return to Antofagasta, in a frank conversation with the same Mr. Greene, whose hospitalities I did then accept for a day and a half, and explained why in my personal quiet movement to Valparaiso I did not wish any recognition, much less any importance or prominence given to me or my trip, which I all along stated was simply for my health, making a convenience of the occasion to visit my old and early friend Osborn.

Mr. Greene informed me that in the conversation at the breakfast table he "interpreted between Mr. Santamaria and Mr. Fisher, and that the latter was outspoken against Peru and Bolivia, stating that he was direct from the United States, and that the feeling there was, that Chili was further advanced in civilization, her government more republican in form, and that he would not advise Chili to relinquish any of the territory occupied by her to give place for arbritration, and that he thought that was the sentiment in the United States, and that he believed that the United States would offer mediation if Chili asked it;" and he did say to a Senator in my presence that Mr. Seward authorized him to say that the United States would make such offer if either one of the republics requested it.

That conversation, in my opinion, established a pre-judgment in the mind of Mr. Santamaria against the object Judge Christiancy, Mr. Osborn, Mr. Huneens, and myself had in view, and prevented the consummation of our informal negotiations with Mr. Huneens.

I inclose a slip from the South Pacific Times (published at Callao, Peru) of the 22d ultimo, and another from its columns of the 24th ultimo, which will speak for themselves.

If it be of any importance, I might say that my health has been materially improved by my voyage, chiefly no doubt from the change of air and climate, and I cannot help feeling that had my son of twenty years accompanied me, he would not to-day need the attention from me, nor the services of his physician that his sick-bed demands and receives from both.

Did I, in my previous informal note, give to you Mr. Huneen's parting words? If not, here they are:

Good-bye, Mr. Minister; I hope and trust that we shall soon meet again, when and where I trust you will be judge and I attorney, and be kind enough to say for me to President Prado, who was long a client of mine, that I am at heart for peace, and am personally and officially laboring and longing for it.

Faithfully yours,

S. NEWTON PETTIS.

[Inclosure No. 1.—From the South Pacific Times of July 22, 1879.]

Colonel Fisher was among the passengers who arrived here by the Lima on Saturday. This gentleman is a special messenger from Washington to this country and to Chile, and bearer of dispatches to both these governments, offering the mediation of the United States government in the present unnatural quarrel in which they are engaged. We sincerely hope the mission of Colonel Fisher will not be unattended with success, for there can be no denying the sincerity of purpose which prompts the great republic to action; not that the same might not be said of European governments, whose intervention would not be less earnest nor less sincere, but the interference of the United States will perhaps be more acceptable, and the presumption may be more generally and perhaps more justly entertained that it is better interested nations, or those nations whose subjects have millions invested in these countries, should not be arbitrators. For instance, let us for a moment look at the proposition just made in France. It is to the effect that the bondholders unite to defray the expense of the war for Chile on the condition that they are protected by Chile in getting paid on their Peruvian bonds from the proceeds of the guano and nitrate, and that they be reimbursed from the same source the war expenses so to be advanced. This proposition would be acted upon had the English bondholders agreed to it. We allude to this point simply in illustration of the fact that there is less likely to be confidence where there is interest, or where disinterestedness cannot reasonably be expected to prevail. Under the circumstances, therefore, we think the United States is unquestionably the best nation to intervene, and has already acted for Peru, if not for Chile likewise, in reference to the political relations existing with Spain. Colonel Fisher presented his dispatches here on Saturday, and the same evening left for Chile with the same object. We have heard the opinion of one worthy of the respect that an armistice is very likely to follow the presentation of the dispatches, so as to allow time for agreement as to the conditions of peace. We hope this may be so, for blood enough has been shed, and the wounds to national honor had better be healed now than later; the sooner the better.

Beyond what we record, there is little to communicate and nothing that encourages the immediate prospects of the re-establishment of peace, if we except, perhaps, the visit to this country of Colonel Fisher, from the United States Government, as the special bearer of despatches to the belligerents, offering the good services of the North American Repnblic to intervene in the present contest, with the view to put a stop to it. He arrived here from Panama on the morning 19th instant, and having performed his mission as far as this country is concerned, proceeded the same evening to Chile. We allude to this gentleman's arrival in another part of our paper, and can but repeat that we should be delighted to find the efforts of the United States crowned with success. The war is an expensive one, which neither party can afford, and it must terminate or wear itself out. There is no reason why it should not be terminated now, through the medium of friendly interference, without the sacrifice of honor on either side. We comprehend fully the difficulties that are to be overcome, but greater difficulties in international disputes have arisen and have been surmounted, and there is no cause to despair in the case of Chile and Peru.

No. 22.] LA PAZ, BOLIVIA, August 23, 1879.
(Received October 16, 1879.)

SIR: At the date of my last dispatch, the impaired state of my health caused by the high altitude of this cold, cheerless, because fireless, region. I was compelled to resolve upon at least a temporary change for a milder clime, if I would seek to regain the uniform good health of my whole life, and decided upon going to the coast, which is more than 12,000 feet lower than this point.

This being known to the Bolivian ministry as well as the Peruvian representative here, and both professing an anxiety for peace, in the interests of their governments, and being very desirous of knowing the inner feelings of the Government of the United States, and to be governed much by its desires and wishes when ascertained, inasmuch as they have voluntarily put at my disposal the steamer upon the lake, the railroad and telegraph from La Paz to the coast passing through portions of both republics, in view of what Bolivia had submitted to me upon paper, with the acknowledgment and approval of the Peruvian minister here, I telegraphed Mr. Christiancy from Puno, asking him to meet me at Mollendo in the interest of peace.

Upon reaching Arequipa I received an answer saying that he could not then leave, but that he would write me at Mollendo, and requested me to write him fully from there, and arriving at Mollendo I received his letter, and after reading it and resting a day or two, and feeling a little improved in health, and reflecting upon the situation, I concluded to take the steamer for Lima, and confer with Mr. Christiancy, which I did, showing him the proposition submitted to me by the Bolivian minister of foreign relations two weeks before, a copy of which I forwarded to you in my dispatch of June 28, No. 15.

After reading the same, Judge Christiancy thought that it looked like business, and furnished what he had not before seen or heard of, a starting point looking to a civilized solution of the troubles of the three republics—Chili, Bolivia, and Peru, adding that he would call upon the acting President and minister for foreign affairs there (at Lima) with Mr. Roman, a Peruvian, who had traveled with me from La Paz, as the bearer of dispatches addressed to the executive department at Lima, one being from the Peruvian minister resident here, and the other from the acting President of Bolivia, and bearing upon the subject of peace.

Shortly afterwards Judge Christiancy called upon me at my hotel and informed me that Mr. Irogoyen, the Peruvian minister of foreign relations, desired to see us at his department at 2 o'clock. We called at the time designated, and had a somewhat protracted interview. The minister seemed anxious to do anything that would prove acceptable and satisfactory to Bolivia. He had been informed of Bolivia's willingness and desire to submit all matters involved by the war to the United States for arbitration, and expressed a hearty concurrence in such suggestion by Bolivia, and added that the Peruvian minister at La Paz was in full accord with the Bolivian authorities at La Paz upon the subject, but stated that the trouble in the premises came from the fact that as Bolivian soil had been invaded by Chili, she (Bolivia) could not make the first advance by proposing arbitration, and as Chili had declared the war it was not for Peru to take the iniative.

I remarked that as in the declaration of war by Chili and in the invasion of Bolivia's territory the latter did not hold Peru responsible for either, it seemed to me that she (Peru) could, without compromising her honor in the least, propose an arbitration that she and Bolivia both professed to desire. Mr. Irogoyen replied that Peru had tendered her kind offices at the outset in the interests of peace, but they were rejected by Chili. I rejoined by asking if there was not some justification for Chili's rejection to be found in the fact of the existence of the treaty between Peru and Bolivia of 1873, and known as the "secret treaty" between those two governments; when the conversation took a different direction. The interview was very pleasant, lasting about two hours, resulting in a request that we return at 9 o'clock p. m., which we did, when we were informed that the matter had been considered by the cabinet.

The second interview developed the fact that should Chili say that such terms of reference were acceptable to her, there was, there could be, no impediment in the way of a bloodless adjustment of the difficulties of these people, which are being attended with quite as much, if not more, damage to neutrals and foreigners than to themselves. In fact, Mr. Irogoyen stated:

First. That if Chili proposed arbitration upon the terms indicated by the authorities of Bolivia (see inclosure to this dispatch, 1), Peru would accept.

Second. That if Chili proposed reference to the parties or authorities indicated by Bolivia and upon the basis implied in Bolivia's suggestion, excepting only that the time of evacuation should be referred to the United States ministers for Peru, Bolivia, and Chili, Peru would accept.

Thus ended the second interview, which seemed to promise results in the interests of civilization. I became satisfied that Peru, like Bolivia, desired our government to settle this matter in the way indicated, and preferred arbitration by the United States high over any and every other power, as both had assured me that the kind offices of other powers had been offered and rejected, giving me as a reason therefor that they were endeavoring to pattern after our form of government.

I may have been mistaken in my impressions formed, but confiding in their correctness, feeling that the three powers were separated by so great distance, the intercommunication being so limited, in fact in one sense entirely suspended, and not being able to satisfy myself that the controversy was such a one as demanded or even justified the continuance of a bloody warfare, and especially if means were within reach by which the bitterness of the conflict could be toned down without the sacrifice of principle or the compromise of honor, it occurred to me that if something could be done to afford a breathing spell, a cooling of the passions, a little healthy reflection would naturally follow, that would result in a restoration of reason, when, if a proper and timely suggestion could be made, by which the fancied honor of these people could be preserved inviolate, a peace could be obtained, and to that end I thought if the conditions and the inclinations of the two northern powers (Peru and Bolivia) could be presented to the Chilian authorities by Mr. Minister Osborn, matters might possibly be made to culminate in peace; and Judge Christiancy agreeing with me in that respect, I concluded to write Mr. Osborn (unofficially) the result of all my consultations, and leave the matter with him to present to Chili or not, as he chose. Before leaving Lima I was importuned by Mr. J. G. Meiggs, a North American Peruvian, (and a brother of the late Henry Meiggs, famous in South American railroad history), who sustains close and confidential relations with (at least) one of the Peruvian cabinet, to by all means go and see Mr. Osborn, knowing as he did that it would not be prudent for me to return to La Paz for some time if the value of my health was of any consideration with me.

Without settling the question in my own mind as to what I would do, I set out upon my return, and while on my way to Mollendo, upon mature reflection, I concluded that if you were cognizant of the situation, you would desire me to do what I resolved upon, which was to continue down the coast to Valparaiso, and confer with Mr. Osborn fully, firmly believing, after looking the ground all over, that the authorities of these three peoples have hastily perched themselves upon a pinnacle of honor and know of no way to get down, and that at heart they would thank anybody to tell them how, or even point them to the way. Upon arriving at Coquimbo I telegraphed Mr. Osborn at Santiago, with whom I have been upon the most intimate terms since young manhood, that I expected to be in Valparaiso the next noon, and would be glad to see him before returning north.

Upon reaching Valparaiso I was met by Mr. Osborn, when a full and confidential (unofficial) consultation took place, after which he informed me that he had shown my dispatch to Mr. Huneens, the Chilian minister for foreign relations at Santiago, who had sent an invitation to me to visit Santiago, and him as well.

Finding Mr. Osborn in full accord with my views already set forth in this dispatch, and following his advice, I accompanied him to Santiago the next day, when an interview was arranged between the minister and Mr. Osborn for a meeting of all three on Saturday afternoon, at his department, which lasted several hours and was more than cordial, Mr. Huneens being informed at the outset that upon my part the visit was a purely personal one and entirely unofficial.

Mr. Huneens expressed a desire to consult with the President that evening touching the subject-matter of our conference, lasting two hours, and at the same time volunteered a call upon me the next day at my hotel at 12 m., which appointment he kept punctually, remaining over two hours, devoting the whole of the time to the subject of this dispatch. Mr. Huneens speaks the English language as well as he does his own, the Spanish, and writes both readily.

Suffice it to say that at his instance several interviews followed, both at his department and at the hotel where Mr. Osborn and I were living, all of which manifesting upon his part a desire for the settlement of the existing troubles, and that, too, by arbitration at the hands of the United States above all or any other power, the status quo question seemingly being the only one of embarrassment, Peru and Bolivia insisting upon the statu quo ante bellum, Chili declining; whereupon I suggested that possibly some middle ground might be found if the parties should seek for it in a spirit of forbearance and conciliation; and as a compromise upon that branch of the controversy I numbered the twenty-third parallel of south latitude, to which, and below that, Chili should withdraw her troops by land and sea, disoccupying all north of such parallel in order that submission might be made and arbitration proceeded with. Mr. Huneens seemed to be pleased with the idea, and asked me if I would be kind enough to make a proposition in writing to this effect, when I promptly informed him that I had no authority to make any proposition, although I had found great pleasure in discovering to him, and his government through him, the position occupied by Peru and Bolivia upon the question under consideration, and the one that they would probably incline to and assume, if met in a humane spirit.

Mr. Huneens then asked me if I had any objections to giving my views upon paper, without signature, that he might submit them to the President; when I replied that within an hour I would do so in pencil to Mr. Osborn, and if upon consultation with Mr. O. he felt disposed to hand him such unofficial expression, I had no objection to his being gratified in that respect.

Upon retiring and consultation with Mr. Osborn, I penciled my views, which, being concurred in by Mr. Osborn, were by him inclosed to Mr. Huneens, with the request that it be returned to me, which was done, and a copy of which is herewith inclosed and marked Inclosure 2, indicating that I thought, if Chili was satisfied with that, Peru and Bolivia would concur.

Upon reading the paper thus submitted, Mr. Huneens requested me to add that which I have included between brackets, which he thought would make sure the acceptance upon the part of Chili, and which I consented to, although I thought it might possibly prove too much for Peru and Bolivia to carry, and, having done that, terminated the interview by stating to Mr. Huneens that:

More than a month before, I had had a long interview with the acting president and minister for foreign relations of Bolivia, at La Paz, upon the subject of the difficulties of that republic and Peru with Chili, and that the same was at the Bolivian minister's request, who informed me that he had sought the interview to learn the opinion of the Government of the United States of America, and inquired if I had any instruction upon the subject, and that I told him I had not, but that I knew that my government regretted deeply the conflict the three governments were engaged in. He then asked me for an expression of my own views upon the situation, which I gave him freely, making no reference to the relative merits of the controversy, but confining myself to a solution of the troubles, in stating emphatically that under all the circumstances I thought that the safe, honorable, and profitable deliverance was only to be found in arbitration by some friendly power, and that I knew that my government would feel that I was poorly discharging my official duty if I failed to use all of my kind and personal offices in the direction of peace, adding that I thought that precedent was to be found in the conciliatory path of the past for the resort to arbitration even after hostilities had begun, and that I thought that persistence by the three countries in a desolating and devastating war, if an honorable peace could be attained, implied a blindness to interest entirely inexcusable; and at the close of such interview the minister of Bolivia requested a renewal of the same at my legation the evening of the same day, at which time the minister of Bolivia informed me, that, Peru consenting, Bolivia would be willing to submit all matters of difference, of every description, for final and complete adjustment and settlement with Chili, to the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to the United States ministers of the three republics, resident therein, if the statu quo ante bellum was restored, and that being mindful of a similar proposition made by the Chilian Government, less than fifteen years ago, to Spain, which was rejected by that power, who went further and fared worse, and having about that time, by the advice of a physician, resolved upon a trip to the coast for my health that had became seriously impaired in the high altitude of La Paz, I concluded to invite the United States minister at Lima to meet me at Mollendo in the interest of peace, but upon reaching that place received a letter from him stating that he could not then leave, and requested me to write him upon the subject, but preferring a personal interview, I took the steamer for Lima, and an early meeting with Judge Christiancy resulted in one, two, and a third interview. It transpired that Peru was willing to submit to arbitration at the hands of the powers named by Bolivia's minister of foreign relations, who was Acting President. While I learned, as I had at La Paz, that the main difficulty in reaching arbitration was found in the hesitancy of all to advance in that direction, which induced me to remark to Mr. Irogoyen that true, it might seem difficult for Bolivia, who claims that her soil had been invaded, to propose to Chili arbitration, but as Peru had not been despoiled that she might, while in the last interview the minister said that, in the event of a reference to the United States ministers, his government (Peru) would be willing to allow them to fix the time of the disoccupancy of the disputed territory of Chili; and that being both gratified and encouraged at the manner, frankness, and spirit of Mr. Irogoyen, after consultation with Judge Christiancy, I concluded that I would undertake the tedious journey to Valparaiso that I might visit and consult my early friend, Mr. Minister Osborn, touching the troubles of the three countries, believing that from the known and acknowledged intelligence and fairness of the Chilian character, all that was necessary to put matters in the way of a pacific adjustment was for Mr. Osborn to submit, as a peaceful offering, the result of these frank, friendly, and unofficial conferences with the authorities of the other two contending powers, coupled with the sentiments already expressed by Mr. Osborn and myself for Chili's consideration, which neither compromise, embarrass, nor humiliate any or either, but presented a basis upon which all desirous of peace could consistently and honorably stand, and that I had only to add that I was satisfied, if Chili acceded to such suggestions, the peaceful and amicable arrangement would be speedily concluded with Presidents Prado and Daza upon my return to Arica, as I had conversed with each of them upon my way to Valparaiso, at the same time expressing a consciousness of having discharged all my duty to the Government of the United States (and more), as well as that, I owed to mankind, including that, not owed to these struggling republics, except as implied by considerations imposed by a common humanity, I only awaited the action of his (the Chilian) Government, before reporting to my government the easy steps I had taken in the premises since the date of my last dispatch to Mr. Secretary Evarts, informing him of all interviews with the Bolivian authorities before leaving La Paz, including a copy of the minister's expressed willingness to submit all matters to the United States for arbitration, hoping that I might have the high privilege of conveying to my government the intelligence, gratifying to me as I knew it would be to them, that Chili had acted magnanimously and wisely, leaving with Bolivia and Peru the responsibility of a continuance of a war, if it was to be prolonged, which I was satisfied they would shrink from, but would at once take such action as would promptly terminate the war, end strife, and restore peace.

Upon the following morning, Mr. Huneens called at my room at the hotel, with Mr. Osborn, and informed us that, so far as Bolivia was concerned, there was no difficulty in submitting all matters to arbitration as we had talked, but that as to Peru the Cabinet was not prepared to say, and desired a little time to feel their way in Congress, which was in session, and that he desired the matter left open for consultation with Mr. Osborn, to whom he would give a written expression of views during the day, and which, when received, Mr. Osborn will furnish you a copy of.

Returning, upon reaching Arica, Bolivia's business port, I was called upon by the aids of Presidents Daza and Prado, and requested to name an hour for an interview, which took place in the afternoon.

I informed them of the result of my labors and assured them that no earthly consideration save a desire for peace and the welfare of their people could have induced me to have taken upon myself the labor I had performed in their behalf, and especially without any knowledge of my government, and which I had undertaken without any direction from it, since I believed that it would justify me in so doing, inasmuch as both Bolivia and Peru had expressed a desire that they not only would be satisfied by the arbitration of the United States, but that they preferred a settlement at the hands of that power in preference to any other power of the world, and that I had been informed that such was the desire of Chili, and that such being my information, and knowing that it would take over two months to consult and receive instructions from my government, I deemed it my personal and representative duty to do as I had, and trust to the judgment of my government for a justification of my conduct.

While they repeatedly expressed their gratification for the interest I had taken in the welfare of all three of the republics, and showered upon me their sincere thanks for my labors for the peace and prosperity of Bolivia and Peru, it was too evident and perhaps needless to add that they were disappointed at the failure of the movement in favor of arbitration, as already referred to, and greatly regretted it. President Prado stated to me explicitly that they, Peru, were in the war out of consideration for Bolivia, and if Bolivia said peace, let it come; if war, so be it; and if she desired arbitration, Peru accepted that.

I said, in answer to an inquiry upon the subject, that I thought the United States Government would offer mediation if Peru and Bolivia desired and requested it, but further than that I could not speak, as I had never assumed or ventured an opinion as to the position of my government, aside from an earnest desire that I had no doubt it cherished for peace.

I have been thus minute in disclosing to you every movement made and every word uttered upon this subject, in order that you may readily discover not only what I have done, but the reason for so doing, and shall be more than compensated for my unofficial labor if I have not incurred your displeasure in endeavoring to merit and deserve your approbation.

Indications along the coast for some time have occasioned ground for fears, and with many the expressed opinion, that at no distant day there would be foreign intervention, and my action was influenced in a great measure from a desire that an early adjustment might take place that would relieve our government from the enunciation of any opinion in the premises upon the principle contained in the Monroe doctrine, and that might involve embarrassing complications; and hoping that I have not mistaken the desires of my government or overestimated their desire for an early and amicable adjustment of these unfortunate South American troubles, I have the honor to submit all my action in this behalf to you for your superior consideration, at the same time subscribing myself, &c.,

[Inclosure 1 in No. 22.]

BOLIVIA'S POSITION.

All under the especial condition not to take any decision or compromise without the knowledge and approval of the Peruvian Government.

The authorities of Chili, civil and military, to withdraw from and disoccupy all territory that they have taken possession of upon and since the 14th day of February, 1879, leaving all things in the state and condition they were in, previous to the 14th day of said month.

Then, if arbitration is agreed upon, the arbitrators to hear, determine, and decide all matters in dispute between Bolivia and Chili and Peru, and establish the divisory line between the two countries; Bolivia claiming the boundary line affixed by the Chilian constitution, taking into consideration the damages caused by the act of the 14th of February, and the subsequent aggression claimed by Chili, the expenses of the war.

The reference may be made to the President of the United States of America as sole arbitrator, or to the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, or to the ministers of the United States of America in Peru, Bolivia, and Chili; a decision by a majority of the arbitrators sitting, to be valid and binding upon the parties, to be approved in its execution and perpetuity by the President of the United States.

SUGGESTIONS.

Whereas it has been suggested through a friendly medium that even now the path way to an early, honorable, and profitable peace leads in the direction of arbitration at the hands of some known and acknowledged power, alike friendly to Peru, Bolivia, and Chili;

And desiring, in the spirit of conciliation and compromise, and in the interests of peace and humanity, to transfer and elevate the contest of principle from the theater of force to that of reason and conscience:

It is agreed that all differences and all matters in dispute between Peru and Bolivia upon one side, and Chili upon the other side, of whatever character, class, kind, description, or extent, be submitted to * * * who shall be requested to meet upon the * * * of September, 1879, for the purpose of receiving and considering the statements of the proper representatives of each of the three republics in support of their respective views and claims, and, after such presentation, hearing, and consideration, to determine and decide upon all matters concerning which Peru, Bolivia, and Chili are now at variance; and the same being reduced to writing and signed by a majority of the arbitrators, to be final, binding, and conclusive upon the said republics and the governments thereof.

And in the event that the arbitrators should be of opinion that Bolivia is justly and equitably entitled to any territory south of the twenty-third parallel south latitude, it is understood that the arbitrators, or a majority of them shall ascertain and fix the amount that Chili shall pay to Bolivia, and the manner of payment for said territory, provided the respective legally constituted representatives before the arbitrators cannot agree upon such amount as compensation therefor, and the divisory line between Chili and Bolivia shall thereupon by such arbitration established upon the said parallel twenty-third south latitude; therefore, it is stipulated:

That from this —— day of August, 1879, hostilities of every character shall cease, and neither party augment its force on land or sea; that Chili at once disoccupy all territory north of the 23d degree of south latitude, withdrawing all her forces, both by land and sea, south of said 23d degree, leaving clear to Bolivia as well the coast south of said degree ten minutes below said twenty-third parallel, but in all other respects the status quo to remain as at present. This instrument to have no force or validity until signed by the proper authorities of the three republics.

SIR: I am informed by an official dispatch from Washington that the United States Government has received information that the British Government has lately been informed that the Government of Bolivia has decreed the issue of letters of marque, with authority to privateers to seize Chilian property in neutral vessels, and that agents have departed for the United States, and assuming that my government has been correctly informed, I am directed by it to call the attention of the Bolivian Government to the treaty of 1858, and especially to the sixteenth article thereof, which stipulates for the freedom from capture or confiscation of effects or goods belonging to subjects or citizens of a power or state at war when found on board of neutral vessels, with the exception of articles contraband of war.

May I ask your excellency to be kind enough to advise me whether the information received by my government touching the decree of the Bolivian Government hereinbefore referred to is correct or not?

Allow me to renew to your excellency the assurances of the high consideration with which I have the honor to remain, &c.,

SIR: I have the honor to be in receipt of your dispatch of the 8th ultimo, No. 17, with inclosure, consisting of a copy of a dispatch from

Mr. Minister Dichman, United States minister resident at Bogota, under date of June 20 (last), No. 100, and have considered both carefully, and shall bear in mind your suggestions if the occasion which your dispatch contemplates presents itself.

I have been informed by Mr. * * * that the Bolivian authorities here have been informed of the action of the Colombian Congress to which Mr. Minister Dichman refers, and have information that Doctor Arosemena visited Presidents Daza and Prado at Arica, in pursuance of his appointment and in furtherance of the object of his special mission, but that his mediatory offer upon the part of Colombia was rejected by both. Whether he visited Chili or not I have no information.

The failure of the special mission of Doctor Arosemena strengthens me in the opinion I have for some time entertained, which is that neither of the three belligerent powers desire the mediation or interference of any power but the United States, and I believe would accept gladly the mediation of our government at once, if tendered.

No. 36.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, Bolivia, September 30, 1879. (Received Nov. 15.)

SIR: With reference to your dispatch of the 18th ultimo, No. 21, this day received, acknowledging the receipt of mine dated June 28 (last), No. 15, I may be permitted to say that I am gratified to learn that the action to which my dispatch referred met with Department approbation.

If not already, you will soon be in possession of the "further developments" of the question presented in such dispatch, and which I am glad to be informed is interesting the Department, as you will find all set forth in my dispatch No. 22, the length of which I regretted, but could not prevent.

From the contents of your dispatch I find further ground for the opinion some time entertained by me that these three contending powers all desire the settlement of their troubles by the United States, and I doubt whether all can agree upon any other power either by way of mediation or arbitration.

I think I intimated in a former dispatch that the late minister for foreign relations and Acting President of Bolivia, Pedro J. Guerra, had stated to me that Great Britain, Germany, and Brazil had tendered their friendly offices, and that M. Irogoyen, the Peruvian minister of foreign relations, had intimated to me the same thing, while Mr. Huneens, of the Chilian cabinet, added thereto the information that Ecuador, through a special envoy, Ex-President Urbina, had also offered the mediation of Ecuador, which had been declined; and now added to such refusals the rejection of Colombia, taken in connection with the several verbal avowals to me upon the subject, establishes me in the belief that they all desire the mediation of the United States, and that each and all are too proud to ask our government to interpose its friendly offices, as each of the ministers referred to declared to me that they would be satisfied with any action the United States might take in the direction and interest of peace.

I account for such preference, first, from the fact that Great Britain, Germany, and France are more largely interested financially upon the western coast of South America, and I may say in the three republics, than the United States, for it is doubtless true that the industries that have been paralyzed, and the commerce that has been destroyed by bombardment, which seems to be the favorite and principal system of warfare practiced thus far, was produced by their capital and fostered by their energies and intelligence, and it would not have occasioned any surprise to me had the countries whose citizens had invested their capital for the welfare of some, if not all, of these republics forbidden the destruction of their property by conduct that fell but little, if anything, short of a wanton indulgence of madness, malice, and folly.

Secondly, they pride themselves upon the avowal that they are as fast as possible fashioning their form of government after our own, and are vain enough to believe that they are succeeding, and that the United States are gratified, not to say flattered, by their exertions in this direction, and therefore feel an interest in the success of their experiment, and would deplore a failure upon their part, whether it came from internal dissensions or foreign intervention.

So far as the mediation of Ecuador and Colombia is concerned, I think the belligerents looked upon the offers as but little, if any, short of presumption upon their part, while Brazil's tender was not considered entirely disinterested under the circumstances.

In this connection I may say that Mr. Bollivino but yesterday informed me that the Brazilian minister resident here has been very importunate in his efforts and endeavors to have Bolivia accept Brazil's mediation, appealing to his excellency the late minister of foreign relations upon personal grounds, and giving as a reason that such an acceptance upon the part of Bolivia would result in his (the Brazilian minister's) promotion and advancement by his government.

I shall be glad to learn at any time that our government has moved in the direction of peace and a higher civilization for these people by way of mediation, feeling confident that such a step upon the part of the United States would be hailed with delight and satisfaction by all concerned, firmly believing that the hope of all, turns to the United States, and that such mediation, and such alone, will promote and secure the material interests of these three republics and those of South America generally, realizing as I do that the manner of conducting the war in the past and present is a piece of stupendous folly, and if persisted in can only result in utter ruin, bankruptcy, and national death, as the maintaining of their respective armies (so far from each other) will soon impoverish all.

Neither party has a fleet strong enough to engage in a conflict that would entitle itself to the dignity of a naval engagement, but each go skulking around seeking a safe opportunity (in the absence of the other) to destroy some thriving little town upon the coast, the product of foreign industry, capital, and enterprise, and sinking their launches; and it is palpable to the most casual observer of men and things that such campaigning can never end the conflict.

I know of no diversity of opinion in any of the three republics upon the question of a pacific adjustment of the differences and difficulties of these people, all feel that it should take place and promptly, but wherever you find the English entrenched with capital and strong in numbers, as in Valparaiso, or a small sprinkling of individuals as at Mollendo, you will hear mutterings about Yankee intervention, but it finds no countenance with or among the citizens or possessors of the soil, and such blustering is understood by all to be the product of an anxiety to have England interfere and pacify these people.

As you may correctly infer from what I have hereinbefore stated, aside from this small English bluster, all not only desire our government's prompt action, but really expect it, and in fact, I think, are generally surprised at the delay upon the part of the United States.

My position here is understood perfectly (and has been from the outset) to be in favor of arbitration by a friendly power, that all could consider impartial, and have only entertained the consideration of the action of our own government in that connection, except as the indicated preference expressed by the cabinets of all three of the countries made it not only proper but absolutely necessary that I should.

Mr. Allen Carr, the Brazilian minister resident here (and who you may remember in Washington during the rebellion), volunteered to me a few days since the expression that after one engagement of the parties' forces he "would be with me in my efforts," meaning, I suppose, my efforts at pacification.

I have, &c.,

No. 26.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington October 1, 1879.

SIR: A dispatch, without number or date, has been received from you, detailing the incidents of your recent visit to Lima and Santiago, in the interest of peace between the parties to the existing war.

As your expedition was professedly undertaken without the knowledge or direction of your government, and as favorable results therefrom were not apparent at the time your dispatch was written, it seems premature to express either approval or distrust of your course. Your aim seems to have been limited to endeavoring to make each of the three governments concerned privately acquainted with the desire of the others for the termination of the contest, and the extent to which each might be disposed to make concessions in order to reach an accord as to the basis on which their differences might be eventually submitted to the arbitration of a friendly power, should a direct settlement be unattainable. Unauthorized, and even rash, as your experiment might appear, it may at least have led the contestants to the healthy consideration of the terms on which the strife might be ended. Should the knowledge of the views of each other thus gained conduce to an eventual settlement, this government could not but rejoice at the result. It is not, however, disposed to dictate a peace, or to take any steps looking to arbitration or intervention in disparagement of belligerent rights, or even to urge the conditions under which it may be reached. Its good offices have not been tendered, but if sought on a practicable basis of arbitration submitted by the several parties to the struggle, the President would not hesitate to use them in the interest of peace.

In this respect of the question, and having your own assurances that the governments with which you have conferred have been frankly acquainted with the unauthorized character of your expedition, the Department dismisses, as unbased rumor of a hostile press, the statement in some of the Chilian journals, that you have indicated a purpose on the part of this government to end the war by intervention or by arbitration on terms proposed by itself.

Your further and frank reports on this matter are awaited with interest.

I am, &c.,

W. HUNTER,
Acting Secretary.

Unofficial.] LA PAZ, October 4, 1879.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I was to-day invited to a conference at the office of foreign relations for next Monday afternoon, of which I have advised Secretary Evarts.

I inclose a slip from the last issue (second) of the Panama Star and Herald, and the previous number as well. I send them that you may see how gently they write. I am assured, and am satisfied, that the people of the three republics have none other than the kindest feelings toward me, for the quiet course I have pursued in endeavoring to have them gratified in the interest of peace and civilization, and am myself gratified to be able to indulge in the belief that my labors will bear fruits, and that all will redound to the interest of North as well as South America, and their honor also.

With best wishes for your health and prosperity, and kindest regards to Mr. Secretary Evarts, I remain as ever, &c.,

S. NEWTON PETTIS.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD,
Washington, D. C.

[Inclosure 1 in Mr. Pettis' letter of October 4, 1879.]

[From the Panama Star and Herald, Lima correspondence of August 13, 1879.]

The American minister in Bolivia, Judge Newton Pettis, recently visited Arica and Iquique and had long private interviews with Generals Prado and Daza. He then proceeded to Chili. It is rumored that some attempt at mediation is being made by the United States, but if such is the fact the secret has been admirably kept. General Urbina, the special envoy of Ecuador to Chili, approached the Santiago Government with the same purpose, but met with immediate and decisive rebut.

[Inclosure No 2—From the same, Lima correspondence of August 27, 1879.]

By the last steamer from the south we are informed that the honorable Mr. Pettis, United States minister to Bolivia, had returned to Arica from his visit to Chili, and held a long private interview with Generals Prado and Daza. As was mentioned in a previous dispatch it is surmised that an effort is being made by the Government of the United States towards mediating in the present question between the three republics, and that this is the direct object held in view by Mr. Pettis. It is even named here that the probabilities are in favor of peace, and that Chili has consented to a suspension of hostilities, and that the respective Presidents of Peru and Bolivia are not averse to an arrangement of difficulties on an equitable basis. Peru would be the gainer probably in some new dispositions regarding the goods for Bolivian consumption dispatched through her custom houses and transported over her territory; Bolivia would be placed again in possession of the ports seized by Chili, whilst the pretentions of Chili and Bolivia to the territory would be left to the arbitration of some third power. These are the rumors prevalent here, but such reticence is observed in official circles as to render it impossible to guarantee their accuracy. The belligerents, and Chili more particularly, evidently perceive that the struggle must be prolonged for an indefinite period, as the limited resources at their disposition naturally hamper all extensive military or naval movements, and Peru, with her diminished navy, cannot venture a decisive combat on the sea.

Mr. Pettis to Mr. Evarts.

No. 41.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, Bolivia, October 7, 1879.
(Received November 24, 1879.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I yesterday attended the conference to which I was last Saturday invited by his excellency, Mr. Serapio Reyes Ortiz, minister for foreign relations, and of which I advised you of that date, in my dispatch No. 40.

Mr. Bollivino, the government interpreter and translator, called for me at the hour previously designated; and none were present at the conference but Mr. Ortiz, Mr. Bollivino, and myself.

His excellency at first took occasion to allude to the matter embraced in a communication which, in obedience to instructions from the Department, I some time since addressed to Mr. Guerra, the then acting minister of foreign relations, afterwards deceased, respecting the decree of the president of this republic in reference to letters of marque, assuring me that I should receive an answer at an early day.

Mr. Ortiz was in possession of the portfolio for foreign relations at the time of the declaration of war by Chili, but passed it over to Mr. Guerra to accept an important special mission to Peru, remaining at Lima until President Prado left the capital, about the middle of May last, to assume command of the Peruvian army at Arica and Tacna, when Mr. Ortiz accompanied him, remaining with the two presidents, Generals Daza and Prado, acting as secretary-general of state under General Daza until called here, to resume the portfolio he had laid down, in consequence of the death of Mr. Guerra, and is now the acting president of Bolivia.

I met Mr. Ortiz in Lima, on my way here, he calling upon me, in company with Mr. Minister Flores, the envoy extraordinary of Bolivia to Peru. I met him, with President Daza, at Pisaqua, when passing down the coast late in July, and at Arica, with both presidents, Generals Daza and Prado, upon my return. He was their adviser and counsel then, and I may say he is so still.

The conversation and conference soon turned upon the war, which, doubtless, was the purpose of calling it. Mr. Ortiz desired to know the feeling in the United States, and of our government.

I stated that I had learned nothing from that direction since my interview with the two presidents at Arica, in his presence, to change the opinion by me then expressed; that my government deplored the unhappy differences existing between Chili, Bolivia, and Peru; and that I felt satisfied that the United States would gladly assist in any proper way in its power in the settlement of their troubles; in truth, stood ready to render any assistance it might in honor be able to, toward the restoration of peace, but was, of course, averse to doing anything, or saying anything, that would be considered by the parties interested either officious or presumptuous upon her part.

Mr. Ortiz then remarked that Bolivia had been all the time, and still was, in favor of mediation, and that he believed Peru was also; but that it had not been offered by any power that they felt inclined to accept; but that an offer of mediation from the United States would be considered respectful and respectable, coming from a responsible, powerful, and friendly nation.

I expressed the opinion that if my government was satisfied that the contending parties desired to avail themselves of its good offices, and that amicable relations could be restored through its efforts, I could not believe that the President of the United States, influenced by his desires to restore peace to the people of the three republics with whom his government is on such terms of entire cordiality and friendship, and to advance their prosperity would hesitate to tender the good offices of the United States for that purpose, but I thought before any such mediatory step upon the part of my government was taken, it would have to be satisfied that the offer would be acceptable to the contending powers, and in the spirit that it would be made; whereupon Mr. Ortiz stated that President Daza and President Prado, as well as himself desired the mediation of the United States and would gladly accept the same if offered, but that inasmuch as Chili had declared the war, Bolivia and Peru did not feel that they could honorably solicit formally the mediation of any other power.

I then added that such being the wish and desire of the two governments, it was possible that my government in consideration of such position of Bolivia and Peru, might, in the interest of peace and in its well known character and office of peacemaker, make the desired offer and tender, when the knowledge of such a desire upon the part of Bolivia and Peru became known to the President, and which I should lose no time in communicating to him, feeling that I should incur his displeasure, if not forfeit his good opinion by withholding it; and thus ended a very cordial and pleasant interview that lasted from 2 o'clock until nearly 4.

This morning I addressed a "private unofficial" note to his excellency, Mr. Ortiz, a copy of which I herewith send forward marked "Inclosure 1," and a few moments since received a reply, which translated by Mr. Bullivian and copied by me is herewith inclosed, marked "Inclosure 2."

By a comparison of that portion of my note (Inclosure 1) that is included within quotation marks, with his excellency's reply, you will discover that the minister flinches a little as he speaks of a condition of the disoccupying of the territory taken possession of by Chili, and which is claimed by Bolivia. Mr. Bullivian, who delivered to me the letter and the translation, informed me that it was only inserted (the condition) as expressive of the feelings of the people of Bolivia upon that question.

This dispatch will in all probability reach the department some time from the 15th to the 20th proximo, when I hope to be at Panama, and shall be pleased to receive, by cable, any advices that the department may desire to send me at that place.

Should I have occasion to cable the department from Panama, I will use for the word—

Mediation, Japan.
Arbitration, Panama.
Ecuador, Colon.
Columbia, Florida.
Brazil, Alabama.
Territory, Holland.
Christiancy, Letter "C."
Osborne, Letter "O."

In view of the fullness of this dispatch, it is not probable that any cablegram will be found necessary from me unless made so by advices that the department may address to me there.

I am of the opinion, from what occurred between the Chilian authorities and Mr. Osborn and myself at Santiago, that Chili desired, and will accept, the mediation of the United States, if it is offered, and I think Mr. Osborn was of the same opinion.

My impression is that all of these people are in fear of early armed foreign intervention, and perhaps not without reasonable ground for such apprehension.

I should, perhaps, state that Mr. Bullivian informs me that since the reply of Mr. Ortiz to me, Mr. Ortiz conferred fully with the envoy extraordinary of Peru, at La Paz, and that he concurred fully in Mr. Ortiz's expression to me.

I have the honor, &c.,

S. NEWTON PETTIS.

Private and unofficial.] LA PAZ, October 7, 1879.

SIR: The more I reflect upon the character and conclusions of our interview yesterday, the more am I gratified at both, realizing that from the known, close, confidential, and intimate relations, personal and official, that have existed between both President Daza and President Prado and yourself since the declaration of war by Chili, you were authorized and prepared to speak for them and their governments as well, so far as an expression of their views and wishes concerned the question of the war, and peace as well.

You were pleased to say to me upon the occasion referred to, that "President Daza and President Prado, as well as yourself, desired the mediation of the United States, and would gladly accept the same, if offered, but that inasmuch as Chili had declared the war, Bolivia and Peru did not feel that they could honorably solicit formally the mediation of any other power."

I address to your excellency this private and unofficial note, for the purpose of asking if you will be pleased to put such statement upon paper, with translation by Mr. Bullivian, in order that I may establish it to the President of the United States, and to the Honorable William M. Evarts, Secretary of State of the United States, believing as I do that a compliance with such suggestion will result in such desired offer upon the part of the United States Government at an early day.

Mr. Ortiz to Mr. Pettis.

LA PAZ, October 7, 1879.

SIR: I answer with pleasure your welcome note of this date, with the same private character as the sentiments that we have interchanged in our unofficial confidence.

I have assured to your excellency that I believed that I knew of the feelings of their excellencies, the supreme directors of the war, and those of their respective governments of Bolivia and Peru, and the special reasons of the intercourse that I have maintained with them, and that I can formulate these feelings in following terms:

The allied nations will not refuse any mediation, but they cannot solicit it. They will see with pleasure that the supreme government of the United States will interpose effective or practical mediation in preference to that of any European states. As Peru and Bolivia have been offended, it would not be dignified and honorable for them to make any insinuations at all about a mediation; but they would accept it under the particular condition that the invaded territory of Bolivia shall be disoccupied by the Chilian forces.

The allied nations do not make war, only because they have been impelled to it; and they do not pretend to usurp the Chilian territory, nor diminish the rights of Chili as an independent state, but it is only to recover the usurped territory, conserving our own rights of sovereign states and the dignity of the pavilions of Peru and Bolivia.

They do not refuse the arbitration, and they will agree with the designation of any arbitrators whatsoever that may be honorable.

These ideas constitute the feelings of the directors of the two allied nations and are those of which I have the honor to manifest to your excellency, so that you can make use of this private letter with the noble purpose your excellency has undertaken for your government and the belligerent nations.

No. 42.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, October 8, 1879.
(Received November 24.)

SIR: Had time permitted before the mail of yesterday closed I should have inclosed a map, herewith sent forward, and added a few words explanatory thereof, which with it, is now submitted.

As I have been able to gather the facts involved in this controversy from the most reliable data at hand, I conclude:

First. That in the colonial times of these countries now at war Chili exercised her jurisdiction unchallenged as far north as the 23d degree (south latitude), which included the Bay of Majellones and a southern portion of the desert of Atacama.

Second. That after the Spanish yoke was thrown off no change was made in the boundaries between Bolivia and Chili for years.

Third. That it seems to me that there can be little, if any, doubt about the fact that the rich and valuable guano discoveries on the coast of the Atacama through the enterprise and industries of Chili, about 1840, resulted in a claim by Bolivia that has since been the subject of much controversy and several treaties, at least two.

Fourth. That discussion continued between the two countries, Bolivia and Chili, until 1864 or 1865, when an attempted invasion by Spain seemed to necessitate relations of cordiality between Bolivia and Chili, if they would observe the first law of nature, and, doubtless influenced by interested and selfish considerations, they were induced to forget, or at least smother, their own dissensions, in order to strengthen each other and make common cause against a common foe, concluded a treaty establishing the boundary line at 24th degree, which conceded to each a sort of tenancy in common between the 23d and the 25th degrees, upon certain conditions and under certain restrictions.

Fifth. Thus the two governments finally found themselves at variance upon the question of treaty stipulation observance, when discussion upon the subject resulted in the treaty of 1874 between Chili and Bolivia, which, by modification and change, actually abrogated the treaty of 1866, when in 1878 the two powers find themselves further apart than ever, and it would seem with respect to the observance or disregard of the treaty stipulations contained in the instrument and covenant of 1874, concerning which they went to war, and that, too, notwithstanding the treaty provided for arbitration between the parties in the event of any further or future misunderstanding.

Peru finds herself involved, either willingly or unwillingly, in consequence of a secret treaty with Bolivia, made in 1873, providing for the mutual protection of each other.

If I am correct in the premises, would it not be enough to ask of Chili to withdraw her forces south of the twenty-three and a half (23½) degree, preceding arbitration, if proposed and agreed upon? That would leave to Chili Antofagasta while arbitration was progressing, and to Bolivia Mejillones and Caracoles, although the map sent, locates Caracoles (in error) north of the 23d degree.

I suggest this in the belief that Chili would consent.to this, and in that connection ask if Bolivia should not be satisfied with that as preliminary to pacific proceedings.

You will see that I have pencilled a line midway between the 23d and 24th parallel, which I think a fair subject of compromise upon the "disoccupancy" question, which Bolivia is always remembering and never forgetting.

LA PAZ, October 9, 1879.

Mr. MINISTER: The executive council of this republic has had the honor to receive and take note of the dispatch your excellency has favored us with on the 25th of last August, with the object of advising us that your excellency has been informed by official note from Washington that the Government of the United States has learned that the British Government has been informed of a decree issued by this government, authorizing the use of privateers and the capture of Chilian property in neutral ships, and that to this effect Bolivia has sent agents to the United States.

In consequence of this, your excellency calls the attention of my government to the treaty celebrated between the United States and Bolivia in 1838, and very particularly to the 16th article of said treaty, which expresses that the effects or goods belonging to the citizens of a belligerent nation are protected on board neutral ships, with the exception of contraband articles.

Answering the question which thereby arises, and which your excellency has the honor to put to me, whether the information received by the United States as to the decree given out by Bolivia is or is not true, I am gratified to inform your excellency that, in fact, my government, in the exceptional circumstances in which Bolivia finds itself as to the other states, for it absolutely does not count upon a single ship at sea, and in order to counteract the aggression of Chili, which possesses a powerful navy, has thought convenient to authorize in its defense the use of privateers, by the supreme decree published on the 26th of March, of the present year.

Your excellency will understand the perfect right that pertains to Bolivia, as she has not adhered to the treaty of Paris, which prohibits the fitting out of privateers; having besides respected the exceptional case which, by the treaty of 1858, exists with the United States, as, allow me to inform your excellency, in the decree issued by my government authorizing the privateers to seize all cargo of Chilian property found on board a neutral vessel, whether a contraband or not, are excluded those cargoes sailing under the United States flag.

No. 3.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 19, 1880.

SIR: I transmit herewith copy of a dispatch received from Mr. Thomas A. Osborn, United States minister to Chili, relative to the proposed exchange of prisoners of war between Chili and Bolivia. You will perceive that Mr. Osborn reports having written to the legation at La Paz on the subject. I have replied to Mr. Osborn that a change has been made in the incumbency of the mission, and that the person who had taken charge of the archives of the legation and consulate-general had not been invested by this government with any official functions, and could not, consequently, act in a diplomatic capacity toward the furtherance of the desired end.

The suggestion made in reference to the exchange of prisoners of war, like all others of a broadly humane character, has the sympathies of this government, and if the exercise of your good offices within their proper sphere will promote such a result without disparagement to the belligerent rights of any of the combatants, and especially of Peru, as the ally of Bolivia and presumably equally interested with her in such an arrangement, you are authorized to do what you can to promote the interests of humanity in the conduct of this unhappy war.

No. 3.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES TO BOLIVIA,
Lima, Peru, June 14, 1880. (Received July 29.)

SIR: I have the honor to report my arrival at this place yesterday, the 13th instant. I was enabled to land at the blockaded port of Callao and reach this city without detention, through the assistance of Captain Brown, U. S. N., commanding the United States ship Alaska, whom by good fortune I met in the harbor of Chimbote, and who kindly placed his vessel at my disposal on its return trip from Chimbote to Callao. On entering the latter port I called with Captain Brown upon Admiral Rivera, commanding the blockading squadron of Chili on the coast, in order to inform him that in a few days I should land at Mollendo, a blockaded port further south, and request that the railway train which I would take there to proceed to La Paz be not fired upon from his ships, which request was granted readily and most willingly.

Captain Brown has informed me that in about a week he will be ready to take me to Mollendo, and I consider it really fortunate to have met him, as it would have been out of the question for me to visit Lima at all and place myself in communication with Minister Christiancy, which you considered advisable and of importance in your last verbal instructions, and which would have necessitated a land journey of several hundred miles through a desert, for which I was not prepared.

I will not endeavor to report upon events that have lately taken place here, as without doubt you will be advised by those who, being on the ground, have had better facilities to know. I will only state that after the defeat of the allies at Tacna on the 26th ultimo, General Campero, Provisional President of Bolivia, having lost half his army killed in the battle, separated from the Peruvian forces and with the remnant of his own soldiers took the road to Bolivia, promising, however, that he would return with a larger force. On the evening before the battle, General Campero had resigned the chief command of the allied forces, which had fallen to him by virtue of the treaty with Peru, stipulating that if the President of either republic should be with the troops he should be commander-in-chief of the troops of both republics, and had said when surrendering his command that on that day he ceased to be Provisional President of Bolivia, as the Congress of that country, called together to elect a constitutional President that day, had no doubt fulfilled its mission. The latest news from Bolivia, however, up to the 28th ultimo, is that, while said Congress had met on the 25th for the purpose of electing a President, it had failed to take a vote, adjourning from day to day and occupying the time with making patriotic speeches; evidently waiting for some news from the army. What may have happened in La Paz since that date it is impossible to say, and will be unknown probably for some time, but that perhaps another revolution with or without bloodshed has taken place may be imagined, when the hurried departure of General Campero from Tacna is considered, his own candidature before the Congres for election as constitutional President, and the hesitation of this Congress to proceed to a vote.

I am anxious to reach my post, and shall wait no longer than the Alaska is obliged to remain off Callao before proceeding to La Paz, although perhaps no time would be lost by remaining here until such time as some result of the action taken by the diplomatic corps should be apparent.

Should the action taken have any result, and possible proposals of peace from Chili be not entirely rejected by the Government of Peru, the latter could not act without also considering the status of Bolivia, and in that case it may be advantageous for me to know the wishes, ideas, and actions of the neutral representatives here, in order to co-operate with them in Bolivia after my arrival. I should be guided, however, in some measure by the opinion of Minister Christiancy, at whose request I attended a meeting of the diplomatic corps to-day, and who, I find, not only understands the situation thoroughly, but also has considerable influence in the deliberations of that body.

No. 4.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES TO BOLIVIA,
Lima, Peru, June 22, 1880. (Received July 29.)

SIR: Since my last dispatch of the 14th instant, in which I had the honor to advise you of the existing uncertainty as to political affairs in Bolivia, advices have reached this city from La Paz to the effect that on the 1st instant General Narciso Campero was elected constitutional

President by the Congress, which had met on the 25th ultimo, after his report of the defeat at Tacna had been received, and after it had become known that the remains of his army were scattered and dissolved and that he himself was returning to La Paz with but a few followers.

Taking into consideration the reverses sustained by President Campero in the field, this action of Congress foreshadows a strong government for Bolivia, one that is well supported and therefore likely to endure.

I have the honor also to report that the proceedings of the Bolivian Congress, in its different acts and decrees passed, seem to indicate a further prosecution of the war with Chili, as new levies of men are projected; war material is to be gathered; the revenues of the republic pledged for war purposes, and any correspondence looking towards peace is to be considered treason and to be punished with death.

At the same time that the above news reaches us from La Paz, and without previous intimation whatever, a message of the Dictator of Peru addressed to the counsel of state is published, submitting a proctocol entered into by the representatives of both Peru and Bolivia on the 11th instant, looking towards the unification of the two republics into one, with a full constitution for the new republic, subject, however, to a plébiscite; all of which Mr. Piérola highly indorses, and advises its ratification.

Minister Christiancy will forward copies of the documents relating thereto, and will no doubt also report upon its merits and the probability of its adoption as far as Peru is concerned. Inasmuch as Bolivian advices are entirely silent upon the subject, it is impossible to say whether the people of that country, or even its present government, will agree to this confederation, and I cannot intelligently report thereon until I shall have reached La Paz and examined into the matter thoroughly.

I am notified that the steamer Alaska has finished coaling and will leave for Mollendo to-morrow, so I shall be enabled to reach La Paz by the 1st proximo, where I expect President Campero to be at the same time, and so be able to deliver my credentials to him in person, instead of to the president of the council of ministers, the secretary-general of state, or lately the first vice-president, under which different titles different persons have been in power in Bolivia since the flight of President Daza, and the absence from the seat of government of the Provisional President, General Campero.

No. 13.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, July 14, 1880. (Received August 25.)

SIR: Although in the political situation of Bolivia nothing startling has occurred since my arrival here, I deem it proper to advise you from time to time, and do so now, as the extreme quietness prevailing seems to me to be only the forerunner of a violent storm, which may engulf this Republic in utter ruin and end its existence.

Mr. Campero has been elected Constitutional President a month and a half ago with the distinct understanding—he being the head of the War party—to carry on the war to the very extremes, if necessary; but instead, absolutely nothing has been done to organize a new army; so much so, that even the best battalion of Bolivian troops, which suffered most at Tacna, fought heroically, and was the only body which kept its organization after the defeat, on its arrival at La Paz was disarmed and furloughed against their will, simply because the government seems to be afraid of a new revolution. There are about 400 soldiers here in La Paz, and I see no indication of recruiting, drafting, or even of gathering the stragglers of the Tacna troops. Everything is at a standstill; no commerce; even production of the soil neglected. The Congress is still in session, but beyond proclaiming martial law in the republic, they have done nothing, but are considering in secret session, from day to day, the protocol of the Peru-Bolivia confederation, which, should it be accepted by the Congress, will surely lead to the disintegration of the republic, inasmuch as the southern departments are likely to join the Argentine Confederation, and one or two of the eastern departments Brazil.

In fact, the proposed confederation with Peru created no enthusiasm in Bolivia; the people, with the exception of where Peruvian interests predominate, are against it, and I should not be surprised that in the near future, either the peace party or the extremists will obtain control of the government, the present executive having failed to satisfy either party. That the government and the Congress understand this feeling is shown by the fact that the resignations of all the officials, especially in the south, of contrary opinions have been accepted, but at the same time I am informed confidentially that negotiations are now pending at least between Bolivia and the Government of the Argentine Confederation, not only to include the latter in the alliance against Chili, but in fact form a grand confederation consisting of Peru, Bolivia, and the Argentine Republic.

If this information is correct, it is of great importance, and if it should be accomplished it would change the status of the war materially, and at any rate would unite the different elements of Bolivia, as the south would really be enthusiastic for such a confederation.

The present political troubles in Buenos Ayres are, here at least, ascribed to intrigues of Chili, to prevent any possible alliance with its enemies, and should this be also understood at Buenos Ayres, the consummation of a triple alliance and confederation may be a thing of the near future, especially as Peru in its present financial difficulties would be very glad indeed, and it is indeed the only way out of its difficulties and to retain to coast districts now occupied by Chili, which contain the immense deposits of salitre and guano.

There are also rumors here that a certain party in Bolivia has made arrangements with Chili to make a separate peace, whereby the coast as far north as the River Loa shall fall to Chili, and Bolivia acquire the department of Moquequa, with the ports of Ilo and Arica, and the prosperous city of Tacna; but although no doubt such a course would be approved by many of the people here who are tired of the war, the international question of bad faith towards its allies, it is to be hoped, will preclude any such arrangement.

There are still some hopes expressed, especially since my arrival, that our government may see fit to intervene, and all sorts of rumors, such as the coast districts have been ceded to the United States in consideration of its help, or that the district of the Amazonas is to be purchased by us, gain credence amongst the people, which may be considered a natural consequence of the course pursued by my predecessor, who seems of his own account to have acted very absurdly and has in many regards made my own stay very uncomfortable.

In conclusion, I have the honor to advise you that Mr. Cabrera, lately the Acting President of the republic, while the President was in command of the armies at Tacna, and himself a candidate before Congress, but defeated by General Campero, has been appointed minister plenipotentiary to the United States, and that his departure may take place at any time.

I am informed that Senor Cabrera is a thorough gentleman and able statesman, and although his appointment by many here is considered more an honorable banishment, it cannot fail to promote the good feeling existing between the two republics, and will undoubtedly be welcomed by yourself and the President.

I have, &c.,

No. 10.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 2, 1880.

SIR: With his dispatch No. 148, of the 20th of May last, Mr. Osborn, the United States minister at Santiago, Chili, transmitted to the Department a copy of his letter of the 13th of that month, addressed to Mr. Christiancy, the United States minister to Peru, in reference to the prospects of peace between the contending powers on the Pacific coast, and suggesting a method by which the Government of the United States might make its good offices available in the way of mediation.

Upon the receipt of this dispatch an identical telegraphic instruction was addressed to both Mr. Osborn and Mr. Christiancy for their immediate guidance in the matter referred to in Mr. Osborn's letter. The telegrams were dated the 29th ultimo, and read as follows:

> Press upon Chilian Government our desire to aid in restoring peace on honorable terms between nations, to which we are sincerely and equally friendly. A like instruction is sent to-day to Lima.

On the 30th ultimo an instruction, embodying the telegrams adverted to, was addressed to those gentlemen. Mr. Osborn was advised that the tenor of his letter to Mr. Christiancy was approved by the Department, and the minister to Peru was likewise informed of its action in respect of Mr. Osborn's letter to him.

A copy of Mr. Osborn's dispatch above referred to is forwarded herewith,* and that you may be further informed of the course pursued by the Department in regard to the letter which accompanied it, the above recapitulation of its action has been embodied in the present instruction for your complete and full understanding in the premises.

I am, &c.,

No. 22.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, August 5, 1880. (Received October 5.)

SIR: Since my last dispatch (No. 13) concerning the political situation of Bolivia nothing of importance has occurred. Congress is still in session, doing nothing apparently, but said to be engaged in secret sessions to deliberate upon the question of peace or further prosecution of the war.

Two weeks ago the question of peace was not even discussed openly; now two of our journals here propose the necessary preliminaries looking towards an armistice, and within a few days the two most prominent members of the cabinet, Mr. Carillo, of state and foreign affairs, and Mr. Salinas, of war, have been mentioned as favoring such a policy.

Arica, the Peruvian port lately captured by the Chilians, has been opened to Bolivian commerce, but such commerce has been interdicted by the government at the demand of Peru, and in consequence it is now rumored that Chilian troops will shortly move towards this city or Puno, Peru; the latter the only place by which communication is kept open between the allies.

Should this prove true, and it is likely, as the sentiment of Chili demands some action, either place could be occupied by a small force, and then indeed all intercourse between Peru and Bolivia would necessarily cease.

It is already said that the government here will abandon La Paz and retire to Oruro, and private advices have been received from Tacna that such movement may take place very shortly.

The war party here consoles itself with late news from Lima, stating that several ironclads, with war material of all kinds, purchased in the United States, have arrived, or will shortly arrive, and will change the aspect of the war materially, and this slim hope keeps off utter despondency.

I rather look forward to an early invasion of Bolivia, and as La Paz will naturally be the object of the enemy's attack, I shall probably have my hands full in protecting property and persons in that event.

Everything, however, is uncertain, and a day may change the whole aspect of affairs.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, August 10, 1880.

SIR: On the 5th instant I received from Secretary Evarts a telegraphic message, which reads as follows:

"Press upon Chilian Government our desire to aid in restoring peace on honorable terms between nations to which we are sincerely and equally friendly."

The Secretary informs me that a like instruction was sent to Lima.

Upon the receipt of this, I visited President Pinto and urged upon him the importance to all the belligerents of a peace, and endeavored to convince him of the propriety of their availing themselves for that purpose of the friendly offers of the United States.

I am just in receipt of a response, in which I am informed that mediation by the United States in the form suggested by me in May last in communication to Secretary Evarts and Minister Christiancy will be accepted by Chili.

The form suggested, in brief, was this: To have the belligerents appoint ambassadors with full power to meet at some point on their coast on board an American man-of-war, there to enter upon negotiations, in the presence of, and with the advice and assistance of, such ambassadors as the United States Government might designate.

I am not yet in receipt of a reply from the Department, but I cannot doubt that my suggestions have been favorably considered.

It seems to me that there ought to be no objection on the part of the belligerents to mediation in the form suggested, and if you shall find the Government of Bolivia ready to agree thereto, I trust you will not fail to promptly advise me.

The Government at Washington is evidently anxious that some extra effort should be put forth with a view of facilitating the restoration of peace to these unfortunate countries.

I have arranged so that your correspondence for this legation can be sent under cover to the commanding general at Arica. He will forward here communications for me. You will, I suppose, have little difficulty in sending letters through the lines to him.

I shall write to Mr. Christiancy of this matter by the first mail.

Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience.

Very respectfully, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, August 27, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you that I have received a dispatch from the minister of the United States near the Government of Chili, wherein I am informed that, my government having urgently "pressed its desire upon the Chilian Government to aid in restoring peace on honorable terms between nations to which it is sincerely and equally friendly," mediation by the United States had been accepted by President Pinto in a form which I shall take great pleasure to communicate to your excellency, if efforts of that kind are at all considered with favor by the Government of Bolivia, and an invitation to a conference can be accepted.

I am also informed that the same invitation and for the same purpose has been communicated to our minister at Lima.

I improve the opportunity to renew to your excellency sentiments of my highest esteem, and have, &c.

CHARLES ADAMS.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 26—Translation.]

Mr. Carrillo to Mr. Adams.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
La Paz, August 31, 1880.

Mr. MINISTER: I had the honor to receive your esteemed letter of the 27th of this month, by which you are pleased to inform me that "the Government of the United States having urgently pressed its desires upon the Government of Chili to aid in restoring peace on honorable terms between nations to which it is sincerely and equally friendly," mediation of the United States had been accepted by the President of Chili in a form which your excellency offers to communicate me with pleasure, if efforts of that nature are considered with favor by the Government of Bolivia, and if it accepts the invitation to a conference, which you had the kindness so generously to propose.

You are also pleased to advise me that the same invitation and for the same purpose has been communicated to the minister of the United States residing at Lima.

It gives my government great satisfaction to recognize the high intentions with which the most excellent Government of the United States has offered its respected mediation in order that the ravages of war, in which three nations of the Pacific are involved, may cease. This friendly action, which manifests the noble object with which the great Republic of the North interests itself for peace among the republics of the South, in which the domination of force is contrary to its destinies, will always be considered by my government with sincere acknowledgments of its obligation, and which I may be permitted to express to your excellency as the representative of such elevated sentiments of Americanism.

My government, convinced that the mediation offered by a nation of such high merit for its policy, which, while so eminently just, strives to keep intact in America the honorable independence of the states on the new continent, cannot be disregarded without grave reasons, has authorized me to receive from your excellency the propositions of the suggested mediation in the form in which it has been accepted by the President of Chili.

Without prejudice as to what the Government of the allied Republic of Peru may have to say, I have the honor, in response to your generous invitation, to state that I am willing to agree to the proposed conference at a time, which you might indicate, and naming as place the office of this ministry, if convenient to your excellency.

With sentiments of the most distinguished consideration, I have, &c.

JUAN C. CARRILLO.

[Inclosure 4 in No. 26.]

Memorandum of an interview between Mr. Carrillo, minister of foreign affairs of Bolivia, and the minister of the United States, Mr. Adams, at La Paz, September 1, 1880.

Mr. ADAMS, referring to his note of the 27th ultimo, states that he is informed by Mr. Osborn, the minister of the United States at Santiago, that the Government of Chili has accepted the mediation of the United States in the following form: "Each of the belligerents to appoint an ambassador to meet at some point on the coast, for which purpose the Government of the United States will place at the disposal of the powers an American man-of-war, there to deliberate upon the conditions of peace in the presence of, and with the advice and assistance of, such American or Americans as the Government of the United States shall designate."

Mr. CARRILLO asks whether any distinct basis is stipulated on which Chili has agreed to these proceedings, to which Mr. ADAMS replies that it has not, but that the object of the conference appears to him to be to come, if possible, to an understanding as to the basis whereupon an honorable peace can be accepted by the three countries.

Mr. CARRILLO thereupon asks what the result of the conference would be, if, as might be expected, the ambassadors cannot come to an understanding; whether he, in that case, is to understand that nothing further is to be done, or whether in that case, it is proposed to leave the decision of all questions and the conditions of peace to the United States.

Mr. ADAMS in reply regrets that Mr. Osborn's dispatch is not explicit enough to give a decided answer to this question, but inasmuch as it speaks of full powers being given to the respective ambassadors, and as, if the duties and powers of the Americans were limited to those of simple spectators or even advisers, the conference would likely be without result, and as he felt sure that the government of the United States had not offered its good offices for mediation simply as a matter of compliment, but actually desired a termination of the war, it seemed to him, and he felt authorized to say, that the idea is or should be, that in case the respective ambassadors of the three powers cannot agree amongst themselves, they should have instructions and full powers from their governments to leave the settlement of all questions and the conditions of peace for arbitration, so to speak, to the Government of the United States, to be decided either at home or by commissioners appointed at Washington, deliberating in the presence of the said ambassadors on board an American man-of-war, but that in any case the decision should be final and end the war. Furthermore, Mr. Adams thought proper to say, in order to express fully the sentiments of his government, that so far from being desirous of exerting a decisive influence in the settlement of these troubles, it would be content if the three ambassadors on board the American man-of-war could agree upon some other power, neutral in all respects, whose services as arbitrator, either alone or in conjunction with the United States, might promise a speedy, just, and complete settlement and peace.

Mr. CARRILLO, after expressing his thanks, referring in eloquent terms to the Great Republic, its influence, its leadership in American affairs, its laws and institutions, its government and the character of its people, declares that he fully understands now the object of the mediation, but that it would appear just to Mr. Adams if his government withheld its official acceptance until it had heard from its ally, the Government of Peru; the more so as in the near future he ought to certainly hear from the Bolivian minister at Lima in regard to this matter, as he understood that the Government of Peru had also been informed and invited to this conference.

Mr. ADAMS, while protesting that his government under no circumstances would lend its aid or good offices to any arrangement to which not all the belligerents were parties, still in order to gain time and to put an end as soon as possible to the heavy war expenses under which the three countries were groaning, would suggest that Bolivia appoint its ambassador at once, who might proceed to Mollendo, and so being in direct communication with Lima, at the same time would be on the spot and negotiations might commence, if, as he had no doubt, Peru agreed to the proceedings.

Mr. CARRILLO, while acknowledging the propriety of such a step, thought it proper to inform Mr. Adams that if Bolivia should do so, the Government of Peru might consider it an act of presumption, and as already several actions of Chili as towards Bolivia had aroused a certain jealousy and feeling of mistrust in Peru, he believed it to be better to do nothing until that government could be heard from; he would, however, not fail to immediately lay the matter before the President and the cabinet, and would as soon as possible inform the minister of the United States of its views.

Mr. ADAMS thereupon, and to conclude the interview, offered to undertake to forward through the Chilian authorities at Arica and before Callao any communications relating to this subject which the Government of Bolivia might wish to transmit to or receive from its minister at Lima, so that in that manner at least some time might be saved; which offer was accepted with thanks.

[Inclosure 5 in No. 26.]

Mr. Adams to Mr. Osborn.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, September 2, 1880.

SIR: In answer to your communication of the 10th ultimo, I have the honor to state that the Government of Bolivia will accept the mediation and if necessary the arbitration of the United States, provided its ally, Peru, decides to do so, but as so far it has not heard from Lima in regard to the matter, it feels bound for the present to withhold its formal acceptation.

The form as suggested by you in your dispatch and as accepted by Chili does not seem to provide for the eventuality which is likely to occur, in case the ambassadors of the belligerents, even with the advice and assistance of American commissioners, should fail to come to an understanding, so I took the responsibility to explain to the government here, that the idea is, in case the ambassadors cannot agree, they should at least have full powers to leave all questions in dispute and conditions of peace to the Government of the United States for arbitration, so to speak, either to be decided at home or by commissioners here; but the decision in either case to be final.

I may be wrong in the premises, and the form as suggested by you may not intend arbitration on our part, but I chose to interpret your dispatch as above, considering it more in accordance with the dignity of the United States, if it interferes at all and takes part in the negotiations, to have the power to make the same binding and settle the matter for good.

In order to facilitate matters, I have offered to arrange the transmittal of dispatches between this government and Lima on this business through the Chilian authorities at Arica and before Callao. If, however, you should receive information that Peru accepts, I would ask you to send me word at once, and immediately thereafter the Alaska, or whatever vessel is designated, might go to Mollendo to receive the Bolivian ambassador, whom I should probably accompany to that point.

Taking it for granted that in case these negotiations come to a head you will accompany the Chilian ambassador, I promise myself the pleasure of meeting you personally under pleasant circumstances. Meanwhile I am, &c.,

CHARLES ADAMS.

No. 29.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Evarts.

No. 27.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, September 2, 1880. (Received October 22.)

SIR: Since my last report of the political situation of Bolivia, dated August 5, absolutely nothing has occurred to change the aspect of affairs. The Congress is still in session, but has done nothing to help the country in its present weakness except to legalize what is called a forced loan of $500,000, which will be exacted mostly from the foreign merchants. Some attempts have been made to organize a national guard for home protection should the Chilians take it into their heads to visit La Paz, and every Sunday we have the spectacle of seeing a great number of men of all classes assemble in the plaza and march around the same two or three times with martial music, but as the country has not a single rifle to arm those men, and as there is no possibility whatever of the government being able to make or purchase any, the whole proceeding is calculated to expose the very weakness of Bolivia, although still some of the papers shout for war, getting bolder in their utterances, because Chili seems to rest on its laurels at Tacna and Arica. That any soldiers have been or are being raised to oppose the Chilian army in its next onward march, I have not heard of; and, unless Peru sends the arms, the latter will have to fight the next battles alone.

The cherished plan of Dictator Pierola to organize and become supreme ruler of the United States of Peru, Bolivia seems to have been entirely lost sight of, as the Congress here seems to be afraid to touch the subject, it having voted to postpone the consideration of the same until a great many other matters are disposed of, and the late action of the chargé d'affaires of Peru in forbidding or protesting against granting a concession to Mr. Brabo and company, organized to open communications towards the Atlantic, basing his protest on one of the articles of the proposed confederation, has opened the eyes of a good many people as to the evident intention of Peru not to allow Bolivia to extend its commerce or make use of the immense natural advantages it possesses, except by paying tribute to Peru at its ports on the Pacific, and the bitter feeling expressed seems to show that even should this confederation as a war measure be accomplished it will be but of short duration on account of the evident desire of Peru to make the natural resources of Bolivia contribute to its own wealth.

If in addition to this the ambition of the ruler of Peru should frustrate the attempts now made for the establishment of peace, which the people here and also the government, I believe, are very anxious indeed to have brought about, then indeed the grand idea of confederation will but remain a still-born infant, and instead a decided rupture may be the result.

Peace indeed is the great necessity for this country, although directly it has suffered comparatively little; and I can only express the hope that the mediation of our government may bring it about, no matter how the jealousies of other powers may be provoked thereby.

No. 28.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, September 4, 1880. (Received October 22.)

SIR: On the 2d instant I had an opportunity to forward my mail by a special messenger to the coast, and in my dispatch of that date (No. 26) I had the honor to transmit to you copies of correspondence and a memorandum of a conference held with Mr. Carrillo the day before, relating to the mediation between the belligerents proposed by yourself through Mr. Osborn, by which it appeared that the government of Bolivia was not likely to refuse the same, provided that Peru agreed thereto; but I was not able to forward the formal answer to the proposition, which I received only last night, it having been delayed because of a serious indisposition of President Campero, the cabinet meeting had been postponed.

I now have the honor to transmit a copy of the official answer in Spanish, and also a literal translation made by myself, from which you will perceive that Bolivia unreservedly accepts the mediation, and is not only willing, but anxious, in case the ambassadors do not agree, to leave the whole matter to our government for arbitration, only stipulating that its sovereignty and independence be acknowledged as the basis of proceedings.

I considered it proper in my note of acknowledgment—a copy of which is also inclosed—to add a few words, which I hope will meet your approval.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES ADAMS.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 28.—Translation.]

Mr. Carrillo to Mr. Adams.

No. 9. Confidential.] MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
La Paz, September 3, 1880.

Mr. MINISTER: In accordance with what I had the honor to declare to your excellency in the interview of the first instant, and repeating the acknowledgment which is due to the most excellent Government of the United States for the initiative it has taken by proposing its aid towards an honorable settlement of the present war of the Pacific, it gives me satisfaction to advise your excellency that, in conformity with the treaty of alliance which binds this republic to that of Peru, I have this day addressed to the cabinet at Lima a note, in which I make known that, on my part, I consider the proposed mediation by the most excellent Government of the United States in accordance with the great interests of America and modern civilization, and that I hope, in order to accept the same definitely, to be advised officially of the consent which the allied government may have given to a like invitation extended to it, inasmuch as this concurrence is indispensable to the good faith with which Bolivia guards its engagements.

As soon as I shall be advised officially of its acceptance by the Government of Peru, Bolivia will, without delay, send its plenipotentiary to join those of the allied nation and Chili, and to take part in the conferences and deliberations which are to be held on board a North American vessel, in order to terminate the present complications of the war.

The Government of the United States having resolved to point the way so significantly by its proposition to bring about a settlement equally honorable and acceptable to the belligerent republics, the Government of Bolivia understands that arbitration is to be the essential basis of the offered mediation, for the reason that it is not probable that the plenipotentiaries named will be able to settle the grave differences which exist between the states which they directly represent.

With that idea, and feeling that it is the decided object of the Government of the United States to aid seriously and in an honorable manner in the re-establishment of peace, as your excellency was kind enough to declare in the interview referred to, my government reposes the utmost confidence in the mediation as well because thereby it consigns the justice of its actions to the decision of a powerful nation, as because it introduces arbitration as an essential condition which, while maintaining towards the contending parties an equally dignified attitude, guards their sentiments of national honor and offers the only certain solution—one which is in accordance with the principles of justice.

My government, interpreting faithfully the national sentiment, can assure your excellency that, as much as Bolivia is resolved at any sacrifice to sustain in the present war its rights of sovereignty and independence against the impositions of force, which are contrary to South American politics, it is also ready to accept, without reserve, any means which, while preserving its honor, may tend to re-establish peace; and, believing that this will be the result of the proposed mediation, my government will also accept with pleasure that the most excellent Government of the United States may be the judge-arbitrator to decide all questions relating to the present struggle of the Pacific which it should be impossible for the plenipotentiaries of the belligerent powers to regulate and settle.

While declaring in this open and frank manner the resolution of my government in cordial response to the mediation offered by the most excellent Government of the United States, I have, &c.,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note, dated yesterday, which your excellency had the kindness to transmit to me, and in which you declare in such eloquent language that the Government of Bolivia is prepared to accept the mediation and, if necessary, the arbitration of the Government of the United States, as proposed, if the allied Government of Peru should also agree thereto.

I shall not fail to acquaint my government with the sentiments so creditable and honorable to yourself and your government, and can only express the hope that that of Peru, animated by the same enlightened views, may also consent to this manner of ending a cruel, unnatural, and fratricidal war.

If, unfortunately, after all, this attempt should prove ineffectual, I can at least bear witness that Bolivia was ready to stop the further effusion of blood, and the blame must rest where it belongs.

ON BOARD U. S. STEAMER WACHUSETT,
On the way from Valparaiso to Arica, September 3, 1880.

SIR: As I had not heard from Mr. Osborn, our minister at Santiago, for some time, and felt quite confident that the Peruvian Government was ready to enter upon negotiations for peace, with the friendly mediation of the United States, I left Lima on the 15th of August, and reached Santiago August 27th, where I immediately learned from Mr. Osborn that the ministers of England, France, and Italy, at Santiago, acting in concert with the ministers of the same governments at Lima, had urged the Chilian Government to offer peace to Peru, on condition of ceding to Chili absolutely the province of Tarapacá, and that the Chilian Government was waiting an answer from the ministers of France, England, and Italy in Lima to their colleagues in Santiago, indicating whether Peru would accept such condition of peace.

Should Peru thus accept there would be no special object for mediation by the United States; but the Chilian Government accepted unconditionally the friendly mediation of the United States, and if the representatives of England, France, and Italy do not succeed in getting Peru to accept peace on the terms they have proposed, and that they (said representatives) can guarantee such acceptance, then I am satisfied it is the wish of the Chilian Government, as I know it to be of our own, that the United States should offer their friendly mediation, provided both Peru and Bolivia accept the same, and I feel confident that Peru will gladly accept such mediation as soon as I can see the Dictator Piérola. In fact I should have consulted him before leaving Lima, had I known the position of the Chilian Government.

Mr. Osborn informs me that he wrote you some two weeks ago of the disposition of the Chilian Government, and their willingness to accept our mediation, and that in the event of Bolivia and Peru accepting such mediation, you and Mr. Osborn and myself should come to Arica upon a naval vessel of the United States and meet there the ambassadors of the three belligerent powers, and that we should there aid, in a friendly manner, to secure peace. As Mr. Osborn's letter was forwarded to you by courier from Arica, he thinks your answer must be in Arica before now, and perhaps may have been sent on to him by mail steamer; but I am to inquire when I get to Arica, and if your letter to him is there I am to open and read it, and see that it is forwarded to him.

It is very important that Mr. Osborn and myself should know as soon as possible whether Bolivia accepts the mediation of the United States. She may not be willing to accept without knowing that Peru will do the same. In such case, in order to save time, let the Government of Bolivia accept on condition that Peru shall do so.

I take it for granted and have full confidence that both Bolivia and Peru will accept the mediation, and just as soon as this can be ascertained I am to fix the day of meeting at Arica, which Mr. Osborn and myself think can be brought about by the 5th of October, and we therefore think it best that you should come down to Arica by that time, and that an ambassador from Bolivia should come with you. Please write Mr. Osborn and myself fully, under cover to the general commanding at Arica, who will forward to me and to Mr. Osborn unopened. And as there is a line of telegraph from Arica to Santiago, please write a dispatch to Mr. Osborn inclosed in a letter addressed to the general commanding at Arica, asking him to forward the dispatch. The dispatch should say only (if Bolivia accepts mediation), "Bolivia accepts." If she does not accept, please say in the dispatch only "Bolivia refuses."

You will readily understand that, if all the belligerents accept the mediation of the United States, the opening of the negotiations will not depend upon any condition such as that proposed by the ministers of England, France, and Italy; but that the field is open to any terms which, under our friendly mediation, all the parties may be willing to accept.

I will further say that should you and any ambassador come down to Arica, the general commanding there is instructed to treat you and such ambassador with all kindness and attention. He is also ordered in the mean time to aid in any way he can to facilitate communication between yourself and Mr. Osborn and me. I shall call to see him at Arica and deliver him a letter from his government, and I may possibly drop you a short letter from there in addition to the present.

I send you inclosed a copy of the mode agreed upon between Mr. Osborn and myself for telegraphing, &c., which you can also adopt.

I have strong hopes that in some one of the ways now under consideration peace will be restored.

I am, very truly, your friend,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 29.]

Memorandum of a conference held at La Paz September 13, 1880, between Mr. Carrillo, the minister of foreign affairs of Bolivia, and Mr. Adams, the minister resident of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS opens the interview by stating that on the same morning he has received from Mr. Christiancy, the minister of the United States at Lima, a dispatch dated Arica, September 7, in relation to the proposed mediation of the United States, and inquires whether anything relating to the same subject has been received from Lima by the Bolivian Government.

Mr. CARRILLO states that he has been anxious for this interview, inasmuch as he has dispatches from Mr. Terrazas, the Bolivian minister at Lima, up to August 27, in which no mention is made of the proposed mediation of the United States, although he had been led to suppose that by that date certainly the Government of Peru should have been consulted thereon, as it was the same date on which he had been first addressed upon the subject. He continues to state that, however, the three powers, England, France, and Italy, on August 17, had made offers of mediation to Peru, and that the same had been considered favorably upon the condition that Bolivia accept the same; that, however, his government had decided to answer in the negative, because, first, it had already accepted a like mediation offered by the United States, and, secondly, because it preferred mediation by the United States—that power being not only American and Republican, but also connected with the South American States by other ties and relations than those simply of commerce.

Mr. ADAMS explains that Mr. Christiancy had left Lima for Santiago on August 15, and that not until he reached there had he heard of the proposed mediation of the three powers at the same time with that made by Minister Osborn on behalf of the United States; that, however, from the tone of his dispatch, Mr. Adams concludes that he, probably, before his departure to Chili, has had an interview with Mr. Piérola, of a personal nature, in regard to this matter, from which it may be assumed that there will be no objection on the part of Peru to accede to the proposed conference; so much so that Mr. Christiancy and Mr. Osborn have already fixed upon the 5th day of October as the date of the conference of Arica, and have requested that the Bolivian ambassador and himself (Mr. Adams) meet them there on that date. As to the proposed mediation of the three European powers, Mr. Adams understands that it has been accepted by Chili, based upon the condition that Peru cede the province of Tarapacá; while that of the United States has been accepted unconditionally, which, leaving open all questions, seemed to him therefore of a nature more acceptable to the allies; and if, as he understood now, Mr. Piérola had not objected definitely to the former, he could not but believe that he would accept the latter; and so, inasmuch as by the refusal of Bolivia the former must end, it seemed to him that now the acceptance of Peru might be considered certain, and that therefore nothing remained in the way to make preparations for the proposed conference on the 5th proximo, which he (Mr. Adams), at the invitation of his colleagues, should be happy to attend.

Mr. CARRILLO states that he has no information of the condition attached to the proposal of the powers; in fact, no mention of any had been made by its representatives when offering their good offices; but, however that may be, this had been disposed of, and he could only repeat that his government would willingly leave the whole matter to the United States, and in that sense, with the further information now given, and regretting the absence from Lima of Mr. Christiancy, by which the expected answer from the Government of Peru had been delayed, he would make the necessary preparations for the proposed conference, but hoped still to receive a final dispatch from Lima before the actual departure of the Bolivian ambassador.

Mention being made by Mr. Carrillo of the reported bombardment of Callao by the Chilians, which Mr. Adams thought improbable in view of the proposed negotiations, and the probability being discussed of hearing from Lima, the interview thereupon terminated.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Christiancy.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, September 14, 1880.

My DEAR SIR: I received your dispatch, dated on board the Wachusett the 3d, with inclosures from Arica under date of the 7th instant, yesterday, and lost no time to have a conference in regard to it with the minister of foreign affairs. Of course before you receive this you will have my former letter advising you that Bolivia accepts and only waits the acceptance of Peru before it sends its plenipotentiary to the conference.

The situation is not materially changed, although your absence from Lima has delayed the consummation of the proposed mediation by the United States, while that made by the three powers had been transmitted here from Lima for approval, but was promptly rejected because that of the United States is preferred and had already been accepted.

So, concluding from the tone of your dispatch that you are certain of Mr. Piérola's acceptance, I have in that sense prevailed upon the government here to make its preparations for the conference on the 5th proximo, as suggested, although we still hope to have the official note of acceptance from Lima before we start upon the journey, which at best must be one of hardship and privation.

I would much prefer and shall probably after all come via Peru and Mollendo, and as the distance from Arica to that place is not considerable by sea, if on your arrival at Arica you find that I have concluded to go by Mollendo, it cannot make much difference for the vessel to call there.

I shall, therefore, if I do not go overland, send a letter in care of the commanding officer at Arica, which will inform you of my movements, which I cannot do at present, as the Bolivian ambassador has not yet been named, and as I intend to defer in a measure to him, whoever he may be.

I shall send a dispatch (telegram) to Mr. Osborn by this messenger, as suggested by you.

Hoping that the Peruvian government will agree and that no fiasco may reward our pains, by which besides the renown of our government might be compromised,

I am, &c.,

CHARLES ADAMS.

No. 32.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Evarts.

No. 32.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, October 4, 1880. (Received December 6.)

SIR: Instead of being able to advise you that actual negotiations in the interest of peace have commenced, I am sorry to be obliged to report that a further correspondence has taken place, from which it will be perceived that the proposed conference must be deferred.

Mr. Carrillo's lengthy note reached me on the evening of the 1st, when it had been arranged that in order to be present at Arica on the 5th we must be en route early in the morning of the 2d; and at the same time I was informed by the secretary of the ambassador that, so far as the latter was concerned, he had received instructions to delay his departure, although it was expected by the government that I would go to confer with my colleagues.

As Mr. Carrillo's note does not exactly withdraw its former acceptance, but nevertheless intimates that under the circumstances Bolivia is not bound to adhere to it, and as I did not care to place myself in the same position as my predecessor did, earning by his anxiety so little glory and so much ridicule for his pains, I immediately decided not to go, and after due deliberation wrote my answer, some of the sentiments of which may not be pleasing, but are based upon truth and my best judgment.

I consider this letter of Señor Carrillo not at all as an expression of a desire to withdraw Bolivia's acceptance of the mediation, for everybody is anxious enough to have peace established, but as a means of gratifying the national pride and public clamor, and I am borne out in this opinion, as this letter is published in last night's newspaper, and is well adapted, by its grand phrases and little meaning, to quiet the public excitement, which a few days ago, only for the prompt interference of President Campero in ordering many arrests, had nearly resulted in a revolution in favor of the peace party, and it also serves as an answer to the recent debate in Congress, where an interpellation in regard to this mediation was vigorously discussed. I, however, considered a little truth advisable at this point, and hope that my note—by which I meant to convey the idea that while our government is ready to act as mediator in the interest of peace, after the plenipotentiaries of the three powers have met, it does not intend to become a carrier of messages and investigator of grievances between the governments before such meeting—will meet your approval.

The cause of all this seems to be the destruction of a sugar plantation in Northern Peru owned by a very rich firm in Lima, the members of which have been very active supporters of Dictator Piérola, and furnished large sums for the prosecution of the war, which, however, was not ordered until after a war contribution of $100,000—the property destroyed is said to be worth four millions—had, by order of Dictator Piérola, been refused.

Of course Mr. Christiancy will know the particulars better and report accordingly, when you can judge whether this was a breach of the laws of war, and whether Chili is responsible for having violated its pledged word towards the United States, by first accepting its mediation and then fitting out expeditions of this kind, as Bolivia, and no doubt also Peru, seems to assume.

I expect to hear shortly from Mr. Christiancy, and should not Peru decidedly decline further negotiations, I have no doubt that Señor Carrillo will be glad to carry out his arrangements in accordance with his former views and agreement.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES ADAMS.

Mr. Carrillo to Mr. Adams.

No. 11.] MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
La Paz, October 1, 1880.

SIR: The last deeds of devastation committed in Northern Peru by Chilian forces against private property, disgraceful and of the most odious character as they are, have attracted the consideration of my government, not only because they are an outrage to civilization and the law of nations, which limits the damages of war to such as are strictly necessary to secure the results of military operations, but also because these acts tend to compromise the official word of one of the belligerent powers pledged to a friendly nation, which, for the sake of peace and American interests, had taken upon itself the noble effort to make its offered mediation effective.

My government, in mentioning these deeds, pronounces them contrary to the usages of war; especially those lately committed on the property of Señor Don Dionisio Derteano, when the hostile army, instead of turning its arms against the allied forces and those in the neighborhood of Lima, employed them to destroy the rich establishments and warehouses of a defenseless citizen. My government is convinced that the opinion of the other American States will also condemn these acts as contrary to the universal law of nations, as well as the traditional law of America, which has not permitted wars of devastation.

My government, knowing that the hostile operations of Chili from the beginning had not been moderate either in the respect due to the law of nations nor in the object which served as cause of the war, resolved, in accord with its ally, to maintain at any sacrifice the common national independence and South American interests, alike exposed with those of Bolivia and Peru, against the unjust domination of force.

While such preparations for a great struggle were being made, the end of which could not but be favorable to the just cause and the combined strength of the allied powers, your excellency was kind enough to bring to the knowledge of my government, in your respected note of the 27th August last, that the President of the Republic of Chili had accepted the mediation offered by the most excellent Government of the United States in the capital of Santiago. With such antecedent, and the noble desire to contribute to the restoration of peace so long interrupted, your excellency offered like mediation to this republic on bases which, being honorable to the belligerent States, could not be rejected by my government. In that sense, and after the conference of the 1st September, it was frankly accepted by the note from this ministry of the 3d, same month, with declarations which, while they defend the dignity of the republic and the engagements with the allied nation, demonstrate the high respect which my government places in the means of conciliation which acknowledge international law, as well as the faith which the official word of the Government of Chili should inspire when, listening to the counsel of reason, it had accepted the mediation proposed by a friendly nation.

A short time since the same mediation was confirmed in Santiago by his excellency Mr. I. P. Christiancy, plenipotentiary of the United States near the Government of Lima, and offered to the allied Government of Peru, was accepted with the deference due the most excellent government of your excellency.

After the friendly intervention of the most excellent Government of the United States had been so formally accepted, during the middle of August, and while in accordance with its acceptance by the allied powers the preliminary preparations for the first conference were being made, on the 10th of September and with extreme violence those deeds of devastation occurred which have been mentioned at the beginning of this note.

While such conciliatory measures were going on with the aid of a friendly nation it is difficult enough to harmonize the authorized expression of such peaceful proceedings with the outrageous hostilities committed on defenseless citizens and with the burning and destroying of private property far from the center of military operations.

My government believes it to be its duty to call the attention of your excellency to these deeds and the grave contradiction which they imply. It is still possible that they are unauthorized and reprehended by the Government of Chili; but in any case they will, on account of the atrocity and the time when they took place, merit your excellency's impartial and just consideration, inasmuch as you, while faithfully representing the intentions of your government, take such marked interest towards an honorable and dignified settlement of the present struggle on the Pacific.

Having mentioned the grave incidents as they occurred, the consideration of which and the bearing they may have upon the proposed mediation my goverement leaves to the discernment of your excellency, I have, &c.,

JUAN C. CARRILLO.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 32.]

Mr. Adams to Mr. Carrillo.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, October 2, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowedge the receipt of your note of yesterday, in which you take occasion to protest against the late operations of a Chilian force in the northern part of Peru, not only because they are an outrage to civilization and a violation of the law of nations, but also because these actions, if authorized by the Government of Chili, appear to be in direct violation of its national honor and its pledged word when it had accepted the mediation offered by the Government of the United States as a basis of peace.

Not knowing at this time the causes which led to the unnecessary and cruel destruction of private property, I cannot but reserve my opinion, but shall not fail to bring to the knowledge of my government the contents of your note, and I beg to assure your excellency that the Government of the United States, should it become convinced that its offered mediation had been accepted by Chili for ulterior motives, or not in good faith as the offer itself deserved, will not fail to maintain that dignity which it has always upheld with honor amongst the nations of the earth.

What I most deplore is that by these events the proposed conference on the 5th instant seems to be delayed or suspended, if not entirely abandoned.

I have always been of the opinion that if representatives of the three nations could be brought together and in the presence of a friendly power could discuss their grievances, justice and reason would take the place of pride and force, and all difficulties might be arranged and peace established.

I think so still; I believe the first meeting to be the most difficult to be arranged, but also the most important step towards peace, and I cannot conceive why the late actions of a small detached hostile force, as disgraceful as the conduct may be, should prove a serious obstacle in the way of the proposed negotiations, and so be actually the means of leading to further vandalism of that kind. A destruction of property—I have not heard of loss of life or other outrages—can be made good by a money consideration, and as in the proposed negotiations the subject of reclamations will undoubtedly have to be considered in one way or another, this wanton destruction of property would only form one of the many grievances which the allies can justly bring against the Government of Chili.

Taking that view of the case, I had made my arrangements to leave for the coast via Arequipa this morning, but being informed last night that the plenipotentiary of Bolivia would not be prepared to go, it became necessary for me to change my plans; for of course any conference in which the Government of Bolivia is unrepresented cannot but be unproductive of results.

Deploring, as I do, this delay, I have still hopes that the proposed conference may take place, and I shall not fail to advise your excellency should I receive any further information from my colleagues at Lima and Santiago.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Evarts.

No. 34.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES.
La Paz, October 7, 1880. (Received November 16.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 32, of the 4th instant, and especially to inclosure 3 thereof—my note to Señor Carrillo of the 2d instant—I have to advise you that I was honored yesterday by a visit on the part of Señor Carrillo, who called my attention to the word "protest" in the first part of my note, and begged to explain that his note of the 1st, to which mine of the 2d was a reply, was not intended to be a protest in that sense, inasmuch as the circumstances of the affair on the Peruvian coast might be liable to an explanation, and an official protest should be reserved to the last.

The minister also explained that the reason for not attending the conference at Arica, fixed for the 5th, on the part of Peru, was the excited feeling of the people in Lima, brought about by the acts of the Chilians near Chimbote, but that at the particular desire of Mr. Christiancy the question had been left open so as to arrange the conference for a future date, and that accordingly Bolivia, regretting the delay, had also been obliged to postpone sending its ambassador, but that it not only stood ready to do so at any time, but would use its influence with the cabinet at Lima to bring the matter to the desired issue without further delay; and Mr. Carrillo also regretted not having advised me of this before last Saturday, as by so doing that part of my note, in which I had implied a want of compliance with former arrangements, namely, the departure of Bolivia's ambassador on the 2d, might have been obviated.

After these explanations, and at Señor Carrillo's urgent request, I had no hesitation to modify my note by changing the word "protest" in the first part, and leaving out entirely in the latter part the paragraph relating to my expressed disappointment and expected departure on the 2d, all of which confirms my surmises that Señor Carrillo's note was intended more for the public eye at home than as an explanation for myself and my government.

The publication of this note has had, however, that effect, that the newspapers here in leading editorials have spoken favorably of the efforts of our government, commended the steps so far taken, and, while elaborating on the subject of "Monroe doctrine," are earnestly advocating the policy of leaving forever afterwards all questions and grievances to the arbitration of its strong northern neighbor.

Should, with our help, peace be established, the bearing this will have on our future relations and our commerce can hardly be estimated. The resources and wealth of the country are immense, and it needs only a guiding hand in its politics, some American enterprise, capital, and immigration, to make it one of the richest and most prosperous countries in the world.

No. 36.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES TO BOLIVIA,
U. S. S. LACKAWANNA, BAY OF ARICA,
October 23, 1880. (Received December 6.)

SIR: I have the honor to report that yesterday, on the 22d, the first conference of the plenipotentiaries of the belligerent nations Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, took place on board this vessel, and that, jointly with Messrs. Osborn and Christiancy, I took part in the proceedings.

Inasmuch as we have concluded to act jointly and from that date submit a joint report of our actions, I propose to limit this dispatch to my personal movements and actions up to the same date from the day of leaving La Paz.

On the 7th instant, late in the evening, I received a dispatch from Mr. Christiancy, dated at Mollendo, the 5th, notifying me that the Peruvian ambassadors were then at that point, and asking me to come without delay.

Conferring with Mr. Carrillo, minister of foreign affairs, the next day, I was informed that his government had also received dispatches in the same tenor, and that it was prepared to send its plenipotentiaries at once, and we fixed upon the next morning as the time for our departure. Accordingly, on the 9th instant, I left La Paz with Messrs. Marino Baptista, president of the Bolivian Congress, and Señor Juan C. Carrillo, minister of foreign affairs, being the plenipotentiaries on the part of Bolivia, and Señor F. Avelino Aramayo, being their secretary.

A special steamboat across Lake Titicaca and extra train from Puno to Mollendo was placed at our disposal by the Peruvian authorities, and we reached Mollendo on the 12th, in the evening.

At our arrival at this port, I found that the United States steamer Lackawanna had arrived there from Arica on the same day, and I immediately went aboard to confer with Mr. Christiancy.

Then for the first time I was informed of the existing difficulty as to the place where the conferences were to be held. Mr. Osborn having fixed Arica, Chili had refused to go to any other place, and Peru as decidedly had refused to allow its representatives to go to that point, considering it humiliating to meet the Chilians in a Peruvian port occupied by the enemy, besides other reasons.

I learned that Mr. Christiancy had just returned from Arica bringing the positive information that Chili would not agree to a change, and that unless the Peruvians were prepared to go there he would leave the next day and all our efforts might be considered in vain and the negotiations broken off. The next day we went together on board the Peruvian vessel, and after a long conference it was manifested to us that the instructions from their government forbade the Peruvian ambassadors to comply with the demand of the Chilians to go to Arica, and Mr. Christiancy left the vessel, insisting upon his determination to leave that afternoon.

At that crisis, when all negotiations seemed to be at an end before they had really commenced, I suggested to the Peruvians that I thought some consideration was due to the Bolivians, who had come in good faith, and who, before being obliged to return infecta re, should at least be notified of the dispute, and their opinion be heard.

After this point was conceded, and the Bolivians had arrived on board, I did not hesitate to explain to the representatives of both countries that in my opinion, Mr. Osborn having fixed the place at Arica, in good faith, simply on account of its convenience and central location, and neither Peru nor Bolivia having objected to it at that time, and the official notes fixing it there having been widely published in Chili, and the opposition to the place having been made only at the last moment by the minister of foreign affairs at Lima, while its chief executive had, as appeared from an official interview with Mr. Christiancy, a short time before, not definitely objected, and Bolivia having no cause to object, as Arica was the only place spoken of between myself and its government, it seemed to me that should now the change of place be insisted upon by the Government of Peru, history would make that government responsible for the failure, and would consider the reasons therefor as emanating from extreme sentimentality, not justified at this hour.

Finally, it was agreed that one of the Bolivian plenipotentiaries, Señor Baptista, should accompany me to Arica, and that while he should try to obtain a change of place from the Chilians, the government at Lima should be advised of the state of affairs and the Bolivian position, in order that in the extreme case of Mr. Baptista failing in his mission, a favorable reply might for these reasons still be expected.

Accordingly, early on the 14th the Lackawanna sailed, having aboard Messrs. Baptista and Aramayo. On the 15th Señor Baptista placed himself, after our arrival at Arica, in communication with the Chilian Government, but all his efforts in that regard being unsuccessful, he on the 17th sent a dispatch to Messrs. Arenas and García y García, at Mollendo, taking the responsibility to advise and request them on the part of Bolivia to comply, and without further delay come to Arica, in consequence of which, and an answer having meanwhile been received from President Piérola, allowing his plenipotentiaries to do so, if Bolivia should so desire, the Chalaco arrived at this port on the 20th, in the evening, and on the same evening I was officially notified by the Bolivians of their readiness to proceed to business.

Meanwhile, Mr. Osborn and the plenipotentiaries of Chili had also arrived, and both he and Mr. Christiancy were also notified, and in accordance with these notices we jointly fixed the time for the first meeting for the 22d at 12 m., on board the Lackawanna, at which time and place it actually took place.

Whatever the final result of these conferences may be, I feel justified in saying that by reason of the forbearance, moderation, and dignified position exhibited by the Bolivian plenipotentiaries as between the other two parties, both so stubborn in their resolution not to yield, the present state of affairs—that the conferences are held at all—has been attained, and if I did take an active part in advising the course as actually taken, I have done so from an ardent desire not to see the object of our mediation fail before it had fairly commenced, and I hope that such my action may meet your approval.

DEAR SIR: The Peruvian ambassadors desire you to wait, if it is possible, until they can receive an answer from their government, which is momentarily expected.

Should you decide not to wait, one of the Bolivian ambassadors has accepted my invitation to go aboard the Lackawanna at once with me and proceed to Arica with us (as Bolivia does not wish to see the negotiations fail), and will try to do what he can to bring the matter to an issue.

The inclosed memorandum is about their opinion, but, as said before, Mr. Baptista, the first ambassador, will go with us; Mr. Carrillo is too sick.

Send me word at once whether you will stay or not. If not, I will send a boat for Mr. Baptista to the shore and come without delay.

MEMORANDUM.

To Mr. ADAMS (who will kindly communicate this to Mr. Christiancy):

The diplomatic ministers of Bolivia, considering the incident which has just occurred in determining the point of their labor jointly with those of the Republics of Peru and Chili, present these brief considerations:

One of them, Mr. Carrillo, since coming on board is entirely incapacitated from any work by reason of his delicate health, a situation which will be aggravated if his stay on the sea be permanent. In Arica they would be placed in their diplomatic work under unfavorable conditions, as communication with their government would be very difficult. They thought these difficulties removed when they were given to understand on their departure from La Paz that the conference would take place at a point situated between Pacocha and Callao; they would be obviated, if Mollendo or any other place on the coast be neutralized, or if the Lackawanna would approach any other landing more convenient than Mollendo.

They simply present these considerations as likely to conciliate all inconveniences, not sufficient in any case, however, to obstruct the serious steps initiated to bind together the interests of the three nations.

ON BOARD THE LACKAWANNA,
Mollendo, October 13, 1880.

DEAR SIR: It is very important for us to be at Arica as soon as Mr. Osborn and the Chilian ministers arrive. We did wish to leave at once, but have concluded to wait until 3 o'clock a. m., by which time I hope the expected dispatch may arrive.

The plenipotentiaries of Peru and Bolivia, after the very full explanations I have given, must be aware that the government of Chili is disinclined to hold the preliminary conferences in any other port than that of Arica, while it is not disinclined to transfer the next meeting elsewhere, if the plenipotentiaries, in full council, so decide.

It being therefore evident that such preliminary conference should take place there, it remains simply for the representatives of Peru and Bolivia to say whether they will proceed to that port or decline to do so.

In the former case it will not be necessary for them to be in Arica before Monday evening next, which will give them ample time to receive the dispatch from Lima, now expected.

I have therefore decided to return to Arica at once, and shall await the arrival of the Chalaco with the envoys of Bolivia and Peru at that port until noon on Tuesday next, 19th instant.

Should they not arrive before that hour, I shall consider it as indicating their refusal to come to Arica and shall sail for Callao, calling at Mollendo at about 10 a. m. of Wednesday, the 20th instant, to convoy the Chalaco to Callao.

The Lackawanna will therefore leave at 3 o'clock a. m. to-morrow for Arica.

Captain Gillis will send a boat for yourself and Mr. Baptista at 8 o'clock, and will be most happy to see you both on board.

I remain, &c.,

DEAR SIR: Please tell Mr. Baptista that I have received a note from Mr. Christiancy indicating the following points: First, that the Lackawanna will leave this port at three o'clock this night for Arica; second, that Mr. Christiancy and the captain of the ship will be glad to see Mr. Baptista on board, in which case this boat will bring him and yourself at once; and third, that the Chalaco will have time to make its appearance at Arica until next Tuesday, when, it failing to do so, all negotiations will be considered at an end.*

LEGATION EXTRAORDINARY OF BOLIVIA, ON BOARD STEAMER CHALACO,
Arica, October 20, 1880.

SIR: The undersigned, ministers plenipotentiary of Bolivia, have the honor to inform your excellency that, having arrived at this port, they are ready to attend the conferences to which the Governments of Bolivia, Peru, and Chili have been invited through the benevolent mediation of the most excellent Government of the United States of North America.

Your excellency will therefore have the kindness, in accord with their excellencies the ministers of the United States near the Governments of Peru and Chili, to name day and hour when the said conferences should begin.

With sentiments of the most distinguished consideration, the undersigned have the honor to subscribe themselves, &c.

Mr. Adams to the Ministers Plenipotentiary.

ON BOARD UNITED STATES STEAMER LACKAWANNA,
Bay of Arica, October 21, 1880.

Señores PLENIPOTENTIARIES:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellencies' note of the 20th instant, informing me that, having arrived in this port, you are ready to attend the conferences to which the Governments of Bolivia, Peru, and Chili have been invited by my government, and requesting me in concert with my colleagues, the ministers of the United States accredited near the Governments of Peru and Chili, to name the day and hour when the said conferences should begin.

In reply I have the honor to inform your excellencies that I have been officially notified by my colleague, the minister of the United States near the Government of Peru, of the arrival here of the plenipotentiaries of that republic, Don Antonio Arenas and Don Aurelio García y García, and by my colleague, the minister of the United States near the Government of Chili, of the arrival of the Chilian plenipotentiaries, Don J. F. Vergara, Don Eusebio Lillo, and Don E. Altamirano, all of whom have signified their readiness to attend the proposed conferences.

In view of these facts my colleagues concur with me in inviting your excellencies and the plenipotentiaries of Peru and Chili to proceed, as soon as may be convenient, with said conferences, in the cabin of the "Lackawanna," and we respectfully suggest that the first meeting be held at twelve o'clock noon, to-morrow, the 22d instant.

Be pleased to accept, &c.,

No. 37.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Evarts.

No. 39.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, November 6, 1880. (Received December 17.)

SIR: I have the honor to advise you that I have returned to my post after the failure of the peace conference at Arica. I do not think that either our government or its representatives have any cause to reproach themselves nor feel that the efforts made, although without apparent result, have been entirely misplaced.

A short dispatch of the abrupt termination of the conferences was signed by me jointly with Messrs. Osborn and Christiancy, and this, with a report of the proceedings and official protocols of the three conferences, will be transmitted to the Department by the latter, who is accompanied by our joint secretary, so that it is unnecessary for me to make a separate report; but some observations may not be perhaps out of place, especially as I am cognizant of some matters affecting the negotiations as between Chili and Bolivia, which were not brought forward in the conference, but nevertheless may be of interest to yourself in order to completely understand the situation.

The decided expressions of the plenipotentiaries not to modify their first bases, no doubt influenced by public opinion in their country, which was opposed to peace, and the causes of this feeling said to be mainly based upon an official note to Mr. Christiancy by the Government of Peru, will probably be fully explained and commented upon by Mr. Osborn; as will also Mr. Christiancy, without doubt, give his views upon the popular feeling in Peru, and how much the government of that republic through its plenipotentiaries was able to concede, and also upon the rather proudly, if not offensively, expressed refusal by Chili to accept arbitration as proposed by Peru and accepted by Bolivia.

The matters are as between Chili and Peru, and I wish to add to the history of the proceedings simply that the proposition made by Bolivia to surrender the coveted territory under failure to pay a large war indemnity in a fixed limit of time, which would have guaranteed its peaceful possession to Chili, as neither Peru nor Bolivia would have been able to pay it, seemed to me at least well worthy of respectful consideration; but inasmuch as the proceedings do not show that the government at Santiago had even been consulted thereon, and its plenipotentiaries in the conference had but little to say about it, it seems to me that that government was not very much in earnest in its desires for peace; that the conditions at first submitted were meant to preclude any probability of being accepted and that from the first our efforts might be considered inutile and in vain.

The main endeavors of the Chilians in private conferences with the Bolivians, communicated to me confidentially by the latter, were made to break up the alliance between Peru and Bolivia, and engage the latter republic in an alliance with themselves as the unavoidable result of such action. Great inducements were held out, a share in the conquests already and still to be made; but I am pleased to be able to say that such perfidy and disregard of national honor was not consummated; and if, on being consulted on that subject, I took a decided stand in declaring that such proceeding, no matter how beneficial it might be to Bolivia, would be considered by my government, and no doubt by the world, as one of the most infamous transactions in history, would reflect no credit on either nation, but lasting infamy on all persons connected therewith, and that I would be neither a party thereto nor even be considered officially cognizant thereof, I hope that I only expressed your own sentiments. The advances so made by one of the Chilian plenipotentiaries were rejected; and if by the unfortunately existing alliance with Peru Bolivia is deprived from making peace, which it so much needs and desires, it can at least hold up its head amongst nations and be able to say that it will bear misfortune rather than dishonor.

I have only to add my views upon one point as appearing in the second protocol,* when Mr. Osborn, in rather strong terms, it seemed to me, stated the Government of the United States would not care to accept the office of arbitrator on account of the labor and trouble involved. In my dispatch No. 26 D, inclosure 5, I had the honor to transmit a memorandum of a conference with Mr. Carrillo, which, considering arbitration a natural consequence of the offered mediation and upon its failure the only practicable road to peace, I had no hesitation in declaring that such arbitration would be accepted by my government if desired by all the belligerents. In that sense the mediation was accepted by Bolivia, and in that sense I wrote to Mr. Osborn (inclosure 6, No. 26), and having been informed by him that he had acquainted the Government of Chili of its import, and never having been by him advised that the construction I had placed upon the terms of mediation was wrong and ill-founded. I at least may be permitted to say that both the rejection of such arbitration by Chili and Mr. Osborn's speech thereon appear to me strange and inexplicable, especially as no instructions had been received by either of us on that subject.

I have, &c.,

No. 43.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, November 12, 1880. (Received December 27.)

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a brief report of the political situation in Bolivia, since my last dispatch upon that subject, No. 27, dated September 3 last.

During the absence of the ministers and myself at Arica, everything was very quiet, especially as it was generally believed that our mediation would certainly bring about peace, if not directly at least by arbitration.

In that sense the National Assembly of Bolivia after a session of five months adjourned sine die on October 24, without passing any direct laws looking towards an active prosecution of the war. It gave, however, full powers to the President as to the enrollment of troops, the raising of a foreign loan, in compliance with which a financial agent has already been sent to Europe, the purchase of arms and employment of other means for defense; it approved the Bravo concessions, in spite of Peru's protest, for the colonization of its eastern territories and building of highways, railroads, and canals from the east via the La Plata and Amazon Rivers, and it referred the acceptance of the Peru-Bolivia confederation to popular vote in the future; so that for the present that brilliant idea of Dictator Périola of Peru may be considered a failure; it passed an excellent mining law, and in general, being very conservative, may be considered to have worked for the interest of the country as best it could.

* Enclosed with Mr. Christiancy's No. 200, November 2, 1880. See Document 285.

The Government of Bolivia having declined to declare commercial interdiction with Tacna and Arica at the request of Peru, the prefect of the narrow strip of country still nominally occupied by Peruvians between the above places, and the borders of Bolivia, had imposed upon all goods passing through his jurisdiction a transit duty in itself forbidding all trade, and had actually seized goods then en route for nonpayment, which action had excited the public feeling here very much, and came near leading to a rupture, but the Peruvian minister at La Paz ordered the goods released and a compromise was effected, whereby an additional 5 per cent. duty is to be paid to Peru, so that with the duties to Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, about 65 per cent. ad valorem, and the enormous costs of transportation prices of even the necessaries of life and especially clothing have risen to extreme figures, while money retains its full value, exchange being almost at par.

When the failure of the conferences became known here, the President made a spirited address to the troops in public; but the people are very dejected, an invasion is feared, and especially the inhabitants of this city already see their property burned and destroyed, and themselves fleeing from the cruelty and brutality of the enemy, their only hope being still that in some way or other the United States will intervene in what is now considered by all the most cruel and barbarous war of devastation, vandalism, and conquest on the part of the enemy, and that no mercy need be expected.

Minister Carrillo informed me yesterday that he, with his colleagues of the cabinet, had resigned, being forced thereto on account of the failure of the mediation; that they having held out the hope of peace to the country, and being unsuccessful, must now leave the work to others, who propose a different policy, and that the change in the cabinet would take place as soon as their report of the matters connected with the mediation with the protocols of conferences at Arica is published and submitted to the country.

What the future will bring, it is impossible to say; a hope still remains that the Argentine Republic may take part in the war against Chili; but I have not much confidence in this, and the present allies, I believe, will have to fight to the bitter and scarcely doubtful end.

I have, &c.,

Report of the Bolivian plenipotentiaries.

PLENIPOTENTIARIES OF BOLIVIA ON SPECIAL MISSION,
La Paz, November 5, 1880.

To the MINISTER OF STATE AND FOREIGN RELATIONS:

SIR: We have the honor to transmit to the department with this report the autograph protocols of the peace conferences which have taken place in the waters of Arica and on board of the American corvette Lackawanna, between the plenipotentiaries of the three republics engaged in the present struggle of the Pacific.

In accord with the high and sincere sentiments of the national government, we have tried, with decided ardor, to arrive at an arrangement for peace compatible with the honor of the allied republics and the great interests of South America.

We understood that such result would not be probable if we did not accept to a certain extent the necessary effects produced by the advantages gained on the battlefield. This consideration induced us to calculate quietly the favorable results which the allies might obtain, as well as the sacrifices which they might have to make without loss of dignity, not vaguely invoked, but defined in the course of events.

At the first step of the negotiations the designation of the place for the conferences became a point of diplomatic consideration, and might have definitely made these impossible. To obviate this incident, we agreed that one of us should go to Arica on a particular mission, accompanied their excellencies the American ministers, Messrs. Christiancy and Adams, which was done with the consent of their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of Peru. There we were enabled to speak to the delegate from the most excellent Government of Chili, who transmitted to it our different conciliatory propositions, which were, however, peremptorily rejected. On our responsibility thereupon we chose that the negotiations should take place on board of the corvette Lackawanna in the waters of Arica. The estimable arguments of their excellencies the ministers of the United States in the same sense facilitated the final opening of the conferences.

In these we maintained the same spirit which animated us. In the first we expressed our hope that the most excellent negotiators might consider the subject in accordance with its responsibility and as Americans, putting aside the inspirations of interior politics and the popular clamor of the day, considering only the serious and permanent necessities of the three republics. Our confidence in the noble action of the United States was strengthened above all when we heard his excellency Mr. Osborn, as organ of his colleagues and appreciating exactly one point in our history, declare in these words, "That for the first time the institutions of our continent were on trial."

Notwithstanding that the propositions of Chili when presented were of such a character as to shut off all discussion, we endeavored to maintain it patiently within the limits of natural development.

Consequently we introduced for the sake of peace and the high interests of America what we thought a measure of conciliation, counting upon the approbation of our government. Its sense and deductions, as well as the substance of our observations, are contained in the proper protocol. We will only add that their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of Chili declared this measure inconvenient and opposed to their instructions.

We favored decidedly the arbitration proposed by their excellencies the ministers of Peru, and did not omit to show all the advantages held out by this means even to the Republic of Chili.

Nothing was sufficient to change the unalterable resolution maintained by their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of Chili in regard to the definite annexation of all the Bolivian coast, and that of Peru as far as Camorones, as a basis sine qua non of any arrangement.

With satisfaction we have to refer to the distinguished attitude of their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of Peru in discharging their delicate and difficult task, wherein they were assisted materially by their clear and practical reasoning.

We also express our acknowledgments of the personal efforts of their excellencies the ministers of the United States, and we are well aware of what we owe to those particularly employed by his excellency Mr. Charles Adams; but, considering the antecedents of the mediation and the high object manifested in the first conference, we cannot conceal our lively regrets that it was not possible for the most excellent mediators to assume a different diplomatic attitude from that which his excellency Mr. Osborn marked out, and which reduced itself to a polite invitation to meet and preside over our discussions, without giving their presence any other character than that of the most simple and initiatory good offices.

Our efforts to re-establish an honorable and secure peace between the three republics have been without result. Arbitration, the most dignified mode of settling disputes among civilized nations, has been rejected. America will decide on which side justice remains.

Begging you to bring this report, with the protocols attached, to the knowledge of the President of the Republic, we herewith tender our respects and subscribe ourselves.

Your very, &c.,

MARIANO BAPTISTA.
JUAN C. CARRILLO.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Evarts.

No. 49.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, December 3, 1880. (Received January 21, 1881.)

SIR: Since the publication in pamphlet of the protocols of the Arica conferences, one of which, with the report of the Bolivian plenipotentiaries, I had the honor to transmit in my dispatch No. 46, another document relating to the same subject has been issued by the department of foreign affairs, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, in which Mr. Carrillo recites all the steps taken by him in regard to the mediation, and finally closes by offering his resignation on account of its failure. The manifest, as it is called, is quite lengthy, and as all the points are well known to you from my former dispatches, and the annexed correspondence with the memoranda of official interviews have all been transmitted by me, a complete translation seems unnecessary.

Mr. Carrillo begins by saying that as soon as the mediation had been offered he had, full of hopes of a successful issue, communicated these to the National Congress, which had approved of the policy to be pursued; and now, inasmuch as it had failed, he felt himself obliged to show to the country the reasons whereupon his hopes and policy were based. He then gives in detail the history of our correspondence from its commencement of our two interviews, and lays particular stress upon the idea advanced by me that if the representatives of the three republics could not agree, it seemed to me advisable that the settlement should be left to arbitration; at any rate that the different plenipotentiaries ought to have full power to accept arbitration if mediation failed, especially as this had been offered, not as a compliment, but actually with a view to end the conflict. He then proceeds to give his correspondence with his minister in Lima; refers to the offered mediation of the European powers, and states his reasons why the latter could not be accepted. He then briefly mentions that the expedition to and destruction of private property at Chimbote had nearly frustrated all hopes of the conferences taking place, but that finally, all obstacles being removed, the actual meeting seemed to hold out a hope of a successful issue.

Passing to the conference, he describes the failure of the mediation to the determined and not-to-be-modified proposition of Chili to annex the Bolivian and Peruvian coast provinces by right of conquest simply, and leaves it to America and the world to judge whether this demand of Chili and the acknowledgment of being conquered by Peru and Bolivia would be consistent with the honor of the latter and with American interests at large.

He then calls attention to the curious history of this mediation, which was first accepted by Chili in August last, then even its existence denied by its cabinet, then again officially accepted on October 7, although my correspondence, as well as the fact that the day for the conference was fixed by Mr. Christiancy and Mr. Osborn for the 5th of October, borne out by the further fact that the Chilian admiral actually permitted the Peruvian vessel with the plenipotentiaries on board to leave Callao on the 1st of the same month, would demonstrate that the second acceptance was an act hardly in accordance with the honor of an American nation. Then, speaking of the attitude of the American ministers and the course pursued by us, he continues:

> The spirit of conciliation consistent with the good offices of a mediating power has never entered into the designs of Chili. Arbitration proposed with full acknowledgment of the advantages gained in the war was hotly rejected. All discussion, all agreement was impossible. The mediation, the diplomatic action of the allied governments, and the universal wish for the return of peace, I repeat, were doomed by the determined attitude of the representatives of Chili.
> In such extreme emergency what action would have been most consistent with the dignity of the most excellent ministers of the United States and the high prestige of its government?
> With perfect right and in accordance with the first step in the mediation they might have proposed acceptable bases, or they might have approved the propositions of the plenipotentiaries of the allies, if they considered these just and proper. They might have advised, and even honored with their decided approval, the acceptance of arbitration, which, considered in the Bolivian ministry as the essential basis of mediation and frankly authorized by the representative of the United States was the only possible solution since the beginning of the negotiations. This, and much more, and on a greater scale, corresponded with the fervent and noble desires with which the most excellent government of the United States proposed to aid in the restoration of peace.
> But this important step, which might have been taken by the representatives of the United States, preceded those haughty and determined declarations as well as the protest that under no considerations would these be changed; and they, convinced also that the sentiment of Chili was for war at any price, preferred to reserve their diplomatic action in order to avoid a sure rejection of their proposition and the grave consequences which might have followed such action. Without instructions towards such extreme eventuality they were obliged to limit their action to bringing the unexpected and unsuccessful conclusion of the offered mediation to the knowledge of their government. So by this step, prudent as well as of great foresight, they have preserved the prestige of the government of the Great Republic and the respect due its policy of conciliation.

Mr. Carrillo then gives it as his opinion that the Government of Chili at first was prepared to offer moderate conditions, but that under the influence of public clamor it had abandoned the path of justice, and thereby, perhaps, endangered its political future, and he concludes by offering, as stated above, his resignation because the policy advocated by him before the Congress and the country had failed.

It may not be out of place, nor uninteresting to add, that so far this resignation has not been accepted, nor is it likely to be, as the press and people, as far as heard from, are united in declaring the action of Señor

Carrillo to have been upright and statesmanlike, and President Campero last night informed me that, unless public sentiment in the interior should be different, Mr. Carrillo would certainly remain at the head of affairs.

At the same time I was also informed that Mr. Baptista, the other plenipotentiary at Arica, and Mr. Aramayo, the secretary, had been appointed minister and secretary of legation at Buenos Ayres, so that it seems that instead of being considered a failure, the Bolivian diplomats engaged in the negotiations are rewarded, their action and position are fully approved, and the result is considered an advantage, because it is hoped by some that the so openly exposed policy of conquest on the part of Chili, coupled with the rejection of arbitration, may induce our government to intervene; while, on the other hand, there is no doubt that it will compel the Government of the Argentine Republic, which also has its frontier disputes with Chili, to demand guarantees for its own security, in which case it is expected here, that war between those two powers will be unavoidable.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES ADAMS.

No. 24.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 14, 1880.

SIR: You dispatch No. 36, of the 24th of October last, written while on board of the United States ship Lackawanna, Bay of Arica, has been received. It narrates the personal movements of yourself and the Bolivian plenipotentiaries to join the conference, under the mediation of the United States, between the belligerent powers.

Your action, as reported therein, is approved by the Department.

While upon the subject of the mediation between the plenipotentiaries of Bolivia, Chili, and Peru, I have to inform you that Mr. Christiancy has, in his dispatch No. 200, of the 2d ultimo, inclosed the protocols of the conferences of such representatives, held at Arica from the 22d to the 27th of October last.

Although this government would have been glad to have received intelligence that its efforts in the direction of securing peace between the belligerent powers had been efficacious to that desirable end, and although it cannot cease to entertain the most serious regret that such efforts have met with so little apparent success thus far, the Government of the United States still stands ready to render its assistance to that end in every proper way.

I am, &c.,

No. 42.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Evarts.

No. 52.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, December 16, 1880. (Received February 5, 1881.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a diplomatic circular addressed to the governments of South America by the minister of foreign relations of Bolivia, and which, in connection with his manifest, a copy of which has heretofore been transmitted, is intended to fully demonstrate the position of Bolivia in the present war, the unjust demands and cruel mode of warfare on the part of Chili, and seems to have in view an active intervention of the other South American States as against the encroachments on the part of Chili.

Much of what is contained in this circular is a repetition of former declarations, especially as to the policy of Chili, now openly acknowledged to be one of conquest, and which Mr. Carrillo thinks, if accepted in silence and without protest by the other governments of South America, would, after what has happened at Arica, place these in a position of virtually acknowledging it to be proper and right.

The principal reasons for invoking the intervention of the other States against Chili are its policy of conquest, contrary to American ideas, traditions, and interests; the cruel mode of prosecuting the war by destruction of private property and undefended towns; and, principally, the rejection of the proposed arbitration.

If the first should be accepted as the future policy of America, Mr. Carrillo explains, all the different republics would be obliged to keep large standing armies, which heretofore had never been necessary, and constant wars might be apprehended.

Chili had never pretended to claim any part of the territory now demanded as the price of peace; while even when the small Republic of Paraguay, after a long war, and completely at the mercy of its enemies—the powerful Empire of Brazil and the Argentine Confederation—it was especially declared that the victory did not give them title to disputed territory, but the decision on that point was left to the President of the United States as arbiter; and in accordance with it the Argentine Republic returned to Paraguay territory to which it had claimed and believed to have rights, and Brazil kept only such as it fully was entitled to.

The coast district of Bolivia, small as it is, had given it an outlet to the Pacific Ocean, and its possession was never questioned until natural deposits of salitre and guano were discovered, and should it now be taken, its only outlet would be gone, and thereby its very existence and certainly the equilibrium of South America be threatened.

Passing to the second consideration, the various acts of devastation in the present war are enumerated and compared to the policy of England during our own war of 1812–'14, when Admiral Cochrane destroyed our undefended towns on the Atlantic and even the public buildings of our capital, for which action he had not only been denounced in his own country, but all over the civilized world, and which like action, in addition to what already has been done, is now threatened against Lima, the old and historical city of the Pacific, destruction of which has been authorized by Chili.

The third consideration, the rejection of arbitration by Chili, is especially commented upon, because a month before the conference at Arica it had entered into a treaty with the Republic of Colombia on the following terms:

Desiring to affirm the sentiments of international friendship which should be the foundation of peace and fraternity in America, they have with this object in view resolved to make a treaty and have signed the following articles:

First: The two republics are forever obliged to submit to arbitration all controversies and difficulties of whatever nature may come up between both nations.

Second: In case of failure to agree, the President of the United States of America is fully authorized as arbiter to carry out his functions as such.

Third: Colombia and Chili shall try at the first opportunity to hold like conventions with the other American nations, so that the solution of all international conflicts by means of arbitration be a principle of American public right.

A month after this had been signed, the very principle was disowned, one entirely contrary to its protestations proposed, and the very power which so solemnly had been designated as arbiter by Chili itself as solemnly rejected.

Mr. Carrillo in summing up, refers also to the other conditions imposed upon the allies, which virtually deprive them of their sovereignty, as it prohibits them from entering into future treaties, besides declaring null and void a former one, and forbids Peru even to fortify its own ports in the future; thereby assuming such domination as no nation could submit to, if not totally conquered. Mr. Carrillo therefore believes that the governments of the other republics, convinced of Chili's bad faith, barbarous acts, and intentions, its false position, lust of conquest and domination, will in their wisdom take such steps as will stop these ambitions, preserve the traditions of America, and define such a policy for the future, which, in accord with the division of Spanish-America, and the definition of the limits of the different republics as agreed upon in 1810, will forever avoid further complications and conflicts; to which end he advises that an American congress should meet, deliberate upon all questions at issue, and establish such guarantees as will keep intact these limits, and in that way procure a lasting peace. On account of a severe illness, from which I still suffer, and having no assistance whatever, I have not been able to make a translation of the circular, but trust that the above summary may answer the purpose.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a second diplomatic circular,* addressed by Mr. Carrillo to the other American governments, relating to the present war with Chili, and which is especially intended as an answer to and in refutation of the position assumed by the minister of foreign affairs of Chili, as expressed in his diplomatic circular of November 10, 1880, a copy of which no doubt has reached the Department.

The charges contained in the latter circular as against Bolivia, "that she has failed to comply with the provisions of former treaties, that she had rejected arbitration, and that she had entered into the 1873 treaty with Peru with hostile intent towards Chili," are seriatim considered in this paper, and the whole question is carried back to the outbreak of the war and the causes leading to it, which, from a Bolivian standpoint, are shown to be for a long time entertained and premeditated by Chili in order to conquer and utilize the rich coast districts belonging to Bolivia.

No. 57.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, January 17, 1881. (Received March 2.)

SIR: I have the honor to report that on the 15th instant the Carrillo cabinet, whose probable dissolution after the failure of the Arica conferences was foreshadowed, went quietly out of office, and a new cabinet was announced, which consists of Dr. Nuñez del Prado, minister of government and public instruction; Señor Villazon, for treasury (retained); Dr. Aguirro for war, and Dr. Jiménez for foreign affairs and public worship. The latter, at present prefect of the province of Cochabamba, has as yet not arrived at La Paz, so that Dr. Nuñez del Prado is charged with the business of the foreign department for the time being.

This cabinet may be considered representing the extreme war party, as Dr. Aguirro will be the soul of it, who, as a member of the late Congress was daily and hourly advocating fresh measures for resistance and aggression, and has ever been opposed to President Campero's policy of inaction and expectancy.

While Chilian cannon are thundering at the very doors of Lima, and all Bolivia is trembling for its fate and praying for its deliverance, this change of cabinet takes place, and with it a ray of hope comes from the south, from the government of the Argentine Republic, which at last has granted free transit for Bolivian arms and ammunition, and should the anticipated capture of Lima be delayed, Chili may find in a short time a Bolivian army in its rear occupying Tacna, Arica, and Iquique, which might force it to abandon its plans regarding Lima, and to fight again for the possession of Atacama and Tarapaca, which provinces it has already fondly considered its own by right of possession and conquest. I am also informed by the Peruvian minister that the government at Buenos Ayres has decisively declared its intention to oppose any annexation of territory in South America, and its press and public opinion have lately assumed such bitter hostility towards Chili, that even before you receive this the latter may have considered it wiser to abandon its proud and haughty position.

This city, although rumors of revolution are frequently circulating, remains quiet; the other day a plot of mutiny was discovered amongst the soldiers, and a sergeant promptly shot, and the editor of La Patria, who advocated peace with Chili at the expense of Peru, might have shared the same fate if he had not been granted asylum in the Brazilian legation, but had to leave the republic within twenty-four hours, which measures seem to have established General Campero only the firmer in his seat, so that I do not expect any serious attempts against him, unless events now taking place near Lima should deprive Dictator Piérola of power, and in sympathy should also affect Bolivia. * * *

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS OF BOLIVIA,
La Paz, February 1, 1881. (Received May 10.)

SIR: This ministry has the honor to inform your excellency's government of Bolivia's unshaken determination to defend her rights and to repel the doctrines of absorption and conquest which are sustained by Chili.

This attitude, which is the only one that my government considers compatible with the dignity and lawful privileges of an American nation, is in accordance with the conviction which it entertains, that the vast proportions which the war on the Pacific is daily assuming affect not only the territorial integrity of the allied nations, but even their future autonomy, and the permanent interests of America in a serious manner.

In order to defend this idea, Bolivia has sacrificed her bravest sons, and is anxiously waiting for every American country to protest against the acts of that nation which has originated this sanguinary conflict.

Meanwhile the allied forces, whose arms have been attended with very ill success during the course of the struggle, have just met with another reverse near Lima.

The loss of that maritime city, and the total destruction of the allied fleet, oblige the government of the undersigned once more solemnly to declare to the friendly nations of this continent that it is resolved unflinchingly to persevere in the defense of its autonomic integrity and in that of American interests.

The occupation of Lima, far from shaking the determination of this republic, has stimulated its patriotism, and it is now prepared to continue the struggle with Chili at any sacrifice.

This resolution is strengthened by the remembrance of an act which will be condemned by all America. The war, which was inaugurated by the forcible occupation of the maritime districts of Bolivia, is not a dispute concerning a right that is more or less doubtful among the belligerent powers; it is one for the settlement of serious and highly important questions. Chili, confiding in the strength of her navy, hoists the standard of conquest and of territorial annexation. Bolivia and Peru reject these doctrines and offer their blood and treasure in behalf of the triumph of the principle of right.

There is, then, an immense chasm between the objects aimed at by the two contending parties; and peace with Chili, which is at the present moment impossible, cannot be restored save by the absolute triumph of the one and the utter overthrow of the other.

The justice of the cause which Bolivia is defending is in itself a powerful stimulus to maintain the contest, and the cheering conviction which she entertains, viz, that in sacrificing herself in her own defense she is sacrificing herself for the great interests of America, increases her warlike enthusiasm, and adds fuel to the flame of her patriotism.

My government feels persuaded that by resolutely accepting this situation it furnishes evidence of its good faith towards its ally and of its devotion to the principles which it professes.

If the final result shall be unfavorable to her, Bolivia will have the glory of having sacrificed herself in defense of her rights in preference to accepting the galling yoke of the conqueror.

Such, most excellent sir, are the declarations which my government desires to make to friendly nations, inasmuch as they are watching with increasing interest the prolonged struggle on the Pacific coast, and as for the continuance of that struggle it relies upon the favorable opinion of your excellency's enlightened government.

This occasion affords to the undersigned minister of foreign relations of Bolivia the high honor of offering your excellency the assurances of the esteem and respect with which he subscribes himself,

Your excellency's obedient servant,

DANIEL NUÑEZ DEL PRADO.

To his Excellency the MINISTER OF FOREIGN RELATIONS of the United States of North America, Washington.

No. 59.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, February 3, 1881. (Received April 26.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 57, of the 17th ultimo, I have the honor to report that Dr. Nuñez del Prado, of whose appointment as minister of foreign affairs ad interim I had advised you, has now entered upon the duties of that office in the full character. * * *

The news of the defeat of Dictator Pierola, of Peru, before Lima, and the capture of that city, at first discredited but within the last days fully confirmed, has so demoralized all classes and parties that opinions as to the probable consequences here are as yet simply speculative, and must remain so until the course of Peru in its defeat, and that of victorious Chili, develops itself.

The foreigners here not represented by ministers, or consuls even, are in the greatest terror since it has become known that Lima would have been pillaged and plundered only for the energetic action of the diplomatic corps, backed by a powerful fleet; and they fear that, if a Chilian force should approach La Paz and the government be compelled to abandon the city, not only the soldiers of the enemy but also the lower classes of the population here might commit excesses, directed of course mainly against the property and persons of foreigners.

Should this eventuality occur, I hope to be able to save life and property in exerting myself to bring about a peaceful occupation of the city by the enemy, and in organizing an armed city guard of the foreign residents, in imitation of the course taken at Lima.

Allow me to add that I still remain without mail of any kind from the United States.

I have, &c.,

No. 60.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, February 15, 1881. (Received April 26.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a diplomatic circular from the Bolivian minister of foreign affairs, issued under date of February 1, with translation, in which the position of Bolivia is defined as influenced by the late defeat before Lima.

I do not think it necessary to add any opinion of mine regarding this circular and the very strong views of the Bolivian Government therein expressed, as it quite corresponds with what I have foreshadowed in former dispatches; I may, however, say that although Bolivia is apparently exhausted and looked upon by Chili as an enemy not worth troubling herself about, it may carry on for an indefinite period a guerrilla warfare, which will be a continuous menace to Chili, and well calculated to threaten its peaceful possession of the conquered territory, necessitating the support of a large standing army, while at the same time it will no doubt turn Bolivia's commerce towards the Atlantic, via the La Plata or Amazon River. At any rate, I consider Bolivia stronger to-day than Peru, as it has more means of resistance and a more united people, and has suffered less in the actual war.

The original document, addressed to the minister of Bolivia at Washington, I beg to inclose for transmittal to its address, as requested in the accompanying note of the Hon. Dr. Nuñez del Prado, and have the honor to be, &c.,

CHARLES ADAMS.

Mr. Prado to Mr. Adams

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS OF BOLIVIA,
La Paz, February 1, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to your excellency the original and a legalized copy of a diplomatic circular which this office directs to that of the United States, and in which, by occasion of the new defeat which the allied armies have suffered, it again expresses the unalterable intention of Bolivia to defend its rights and repel the ideas of conquest entertained by Chili.

Meanwhile I beg of your excellency to please have it reach its high destination, and accept the sentiments of my most perfect consideration.

DANIEL N. DEL PRADO.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 60.—Translation.]

Mr. Nuñez del Prado to Mr. Evarts.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS OF BOLIVIA,
La Paz, February 1, 1881.

SIR: This department has had the honor to declare on more than one occasion to the most excellent government of your excellency the unalterable intention of Bolivia to defend its rights and to repel the ideas of absorption and conquest entertained by Chili.

This position, which my government believes to be the only one compatible with the national dignity and American institutions, is borne out by the conviction that the immoderate proportions which the war of the Pacific from day to day assumes do not only affect the territorial integrity of the allied nations, but also the future self-government of the same and in a grave manner the permanent interests of America.

In defense of that idea Bolivia has sacrificed its most illustrious sons, and hopes anxiously that each of the South American sections may hear its voice of protest against the country which has brought about such bloody struggle.

In the mean while the allied armies, whose fortune has been adverse for so long, have just suffered in the course of the conflict a new check in the neighborhood of Lima.

The loss of the last seaport of the alliance and the total disappearance of its squadron places the government of the undersigned in the position to declare solemnly again before the sister nations of the continent its determined and persevering resolution, which it assumes in defense of its integrity, autonomy, and American principles.

The occupation of Lima, far from weakening the firm intentions of this republic, has strongly wounded its patriotism, and to-day it finds itself resolved to sustain the struggle with Chili to any sacrifice.

This unconquerable resolution is strengthened by the bitter remembrance of a fact which will be condemned by the judgment of America. The war, begun with the forcible usurpation of the coast province of Bolivia, does not mean a controversy between the belligerent nations about a right more or less in doubt; it is a combat over questions of serious importance perfectly antagonistic and at variance; Chili, supported by its naval power, raises the standard of conquest and of territorial annexation; Bolivia and Peru reject these doctrines, and offer towards the triumph of principles of modern rights its blood and its treasures.

There is therefore an abyss between the propositions of both adversaries, and peace with Chili, impossible for the present, can only be brought about by the absolute superiority of the one and complete ruin of the other.

The justice of the cause which Bolivia defends is alone a powerful encouragement and the consoling conviction that besides sacrificing itself to the great interests of America, fires its martial enthusiasm and gives new vigor to its patriotism.

My government is persuaded that in accepting resolutely this situation it gives proofs of its loyalty to its ally and the cause of principles. If the final result should be adverse, there will remain for Bolivia the glory of having sacrificed itself for principles and rights before accepting the offensive yoke of conquest.

These are, most excellent sir, the declarations which my government has the honor to bring to the notice of the friendly nations who look with growing interest upon the prolonged struggle of the Pacific, and to sustain which it relies upon the favorable opinion of your excellency's most illustrious government.

This occasion affords the undersigned, minister of foreign affairs of Bolivia, the high honor to offer to your excellency the pledges of esteem and respect with which he subscribes himself,

Your obedient servant,

DANIEL NUÑEZ DEL PRADO.

LEGATION OF BOLIVIA IN THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, February 18, 1881. (Received February 19.)

SIR: In reference to the subject which I had the honor to broach to your excellency, in the name of my government, on the 3d instant—the conference which you were pleased to accord to me, at my request, having then remained pending—I take pleasure in laying before your excellency's government the latest intelligence that I have received from the Pacific touching the war subsequently to the occupation of Lima by the Chilian army.

According to this intelligence the government of Peru had retired to the departments of the south. Mr. Pierola, the President, having declared that the seat of government is where the Executive is, Mr. Auelio Garcia y Garcia had been appointed secretary-general.

The Government of Peru, on taking its departure for the department of Arequipa, was firmly purposed to continue the war to the utmost extremity. This information is contained in a telegram which has been received by Mr. Ramon I. Garcia, chargé d'affaires of Peru near your excellency's government.

General Baquedano, moreover, who is in command of the Chilian forces which have occupied Lima, had addressed an official communication to the municipal government of the capital of Peru, apprising it of the necessity of forming a board composed of the principal citizens, that it might designate a provisional government with which an armistice might be concluded or some other arrangement made. The municipal government had replied that, inasmuch as President Pierola's government was still existing and had received its powers from the nation, no municipal government or board of principal citizens could arrogate to itself the right to appoint another government.

General Barquedano had likewise addressed a communication to the supreme court of Peru, requesting it to re-enter upon the discharge of its functions, but the court had replied declining to do so.

As to Bolivia, it is known that her army was to march against Tacna under the command of General Campero, the President of the Republic, and in concert with a portion of the army of Arequipa, on the 15th of last month.

It was also known that she had received a supply of arms, and expected to receive more, through a reliable channel.

All this shows that the occupation of Lima has not ended the war, and that, so far from this being the case, the Governments of Peru and Bolivia will continue it with greater activity than ever.

Nevertheless, some solution must be sought that will put an end to the present state of things, and I firmly believe that, an earnest desire existing to secure an honorable peace, and one that will meet all present questions of the belligerent nations, as well as those of the future, some combination acceptable to all parties is not impossible.

To this effect I beg leave to offer the plan contained in the documents numbered 1 and 2, and herewith inclosed, to the consideration of your excellency's government.

This plan, if carried out, would, in my judgment, meet all the difficulties that have given rise to the war, they being simply the wealth of Peru and Bolivia.

It would systemize the working and management of that wealth in the interest of universal commerce; in the interest of the markets which purchase guano and saltpetre; in the interest of the owners of the territory containing these valuable substances, and in the interest of modern civilization, which loves peace and detests war.

In a political point of view it would prescribe the right of conquest; and as regards the stability of the South American nations, it would firmly establish the uti possidetis principle, which is the foundation of their nationality and independence.

Moreover, with regard to the manner in which the guano and saltpetre deposits of Peru and Bolivia have hitherto been worked by European capital, long years of experience have shown that there is need of a new element, capable of giving renewed vigor and a different form to the industry and commerce of those republics.

With the most respectful and cordial sentiments, I am, &c.,

LADISLAS CABRERA.

To His Excellency the SECRETARY OF STATE.

PLAN.

1st. The organization of a company in the United States is suggested, for the purpose of working the guano and nitrate deposits of Peru and Bolivia, the company to consist of powerful capitalists, and the effective capital and organization to meet the approval of the Governments of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia.

2d. The three governments to turn over to the company, for the period of —— years, the entire and exclusive control and administration of the districts claimed by Chili by right of conquest, as well as any guano deposits not so claimed, and to guarantee their pacific occupation by the company.

3d. The United States Government to guarantee that the company shall remain in peaceable and undisturbed possession and administration of the districts to be designated in the contract.

4th. From the proceeds of the working of the guano and nitrate deposits—the company to retain such amounts as may be indicated in the contract, and to apply the remainder in such proportions as Chili, Peru, and Bolivia may arrange by treaty.

First. To the war indemnity which may be agreed upon.

Second. To the payment of nitrate certificates.

Third. To the existing foreign loans of Peru.

Fourth. To the Peruvian Government.

Fifth. To the Bolivian Government.

5th. The company is to establish its own agencies in the various markets of the world, conduct and manage all sales of the guano and nitrate, and manipulate both products within limits to be agreed upon; but the entire operations of the company shall be subject to periodical report and inspection.

6th. The contract company to have authority to capitalize, in the form of a public loan, the war indemnity and the nitrate certificates; and if it be found convenient by the company, the Peruvian loans of 1870 and 1872 may be included in a single consolidated issue; the rate of interest, sinking fund, issue-price, commission, &c., to be agreed upon in consultation with the three governments.

Should a loan be negotiated, Chili to be paid the full war indemnity at once, and to release all claim and charges upon the guano and nitrate deposits and districts of both Peru and Bolivia held by the company, but not to retire her obligation guaranteeing the pacific occupation by the company of the districts confided to its administration.

No. 61.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, February 24, 1881. (Received April 26.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the correspondence which has taken place between some Spanish subjects residing in La Paz and myself, upon the question of a war-tax levied upon the people of Bolivia by the late Congress and now about to be enforced.

You will perceive that I have refused to accommodate these gentlemen, for aside from the consideration that the request for my official interference should have come from the Spanish Government directly, or its minister at Lima, I consider the tax referred to not one of an extraordinary character as implied by the treaty mentioned in the petition, as it was decreed by a Congress and imposed upon all inhabitants of the Republic in proportion to their property.

A question of this kind upon application of American citizens residing in Mexico was at the time decided by the then minister, Mr. Corwin, in the same spirit, and his action was approved by the Department, so that although my reply to this—a test petition, which was to have been followed by others—has obviated all further resistance on the part of other foreigners. I feel that in advising Americans, even, to pay, I have acted properly and in accordance with international comity.

To his Excellency General CHARLES ADAMS,
Minister Resident of the United States of America, present:

Mr. MINISTER: We, the undersigned, Spanish subjects resident in this city, see ourselves obliged to trouble your excellency and to request your assistance towards a petition, which we are compelled to direct to the supreme government of this republic, which petition, praying for an exemption from the extraordinary contribution now actually demanded from Bolivian citizens, is attached to this note.

We request your protection, most excellent sir, on account of the known absence of a diplomatic representative of His Majesty the King of Spain to a simple consular agent in all the territory of the Republic, in which case the international practice of civilized nations authorizes us to have recourse to the representative of a nation friendly to our own, who cannot refuse to assist us if he is convinced of the justice of the reclamation.

In the present case your excellency will perceive that our request cannot be more just, and the minister of the United States, a nation so friendly to Spain, cannot do less than accede to our demand.

Your excellency will, therefore, be kind enough to present our petition to the supreme government near which you are worthily accredited, and to duly favor the same, being assured that by so doing you will not only earn our gratitude, but also, as may be imagined, that of the Government of his Catholic Majesty.

With this motive we have the high honor to subscribe ourselves your excellency's obedient and respectful servants,

[Inclosure 2 in No. 61.—Translation.]

Mr. PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC: Asking a declaration of exemption of what they mention, founded on the international laws they quote:

The undersigned, Spanish subjects resident in this city, through the organ of the minister for foreign affairs, and by the mediation of the minister resident of the United States of America, not having a diplomatic or consular agent of their own nation, most respectfully submit to your consideration:

That the supreme Government of Bolivia, making use of its legitimate authority, has ordered the carrying out of a law of the late national convention, by which an extraordinary forced war contribution was ordered to be levied, assessed equitably and proportionately.

That for this purpose and in this department of La Paz, in which we are residents, a commission of most honorable and competent persons has been appointed to assign to each citizen the quota he has to pay according to the judgment of said commission.

That in the distribution of the said forced war contribution and its assessment, not only the inhabitants of this city, without distinction or exemption whatever, have been included, but also the foreigners; as the said honorable commission has not weighed the powerful and imprescriptible exemptions established as a general rule in favor of foreigners by international law, and fixed especially in our behalf by solemn international treaties in full force to-day between Bolivia and Spain.

On this account we are obliged to address ourselves to the justification of the government of the republic, asking a declaration of exemption from all extraordinay war loans or taxes, on account of our being Spanish subjects, protected not only by international law, but by the formal engagements of this nation towards ours.

The legal reasons on which we base our claim are obvious, and fearing to offend the recognized knowledge and integrity of the government of the republic, we will briefly and summarily mention just only in order to bring them to mind.

By the treaty made between this republic and His Majesty the King of Spain, at Paris, on the 29th of August, 1879, ratified and exchanged in the same city on January 19, 1880, and promulgated as a law of the republic in this city of La Paz on the 30th of August last (third article), are re-established in full force the stipulations of the treaty made between the said nations on February 12, 1861. The eleventh article of said treaty says literally: "Neither Bolivians in Spain, nor Spaniards in Bolivia, are obliged to serve in the army, navy or militia, and they are exempt from all extraordinary impost tax or loan, and in the ordinary taxes which they pay on account of their industry, commerce or landed property, they must be treated just as the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation." One cannot find a more clear, peremptory, and reciprocal exemption in favor of the citizens of both states, living in each other's territory, and which involves their exemption from all forced or extraordinary taxes (of war) in strict compliance with the doctrines of international law.

And even if this positive law referred to did not exist—a law that, like all international treaty law, is supreme and modifies even the constitution of the state—it is enough to legitimate our claim by stating that the practical jurisprudence of all civilized nations and the doctrine established by all the authorities on the subject are all in our favor.

There is no need to quote Vattel, Pradier, Forderé, Fioré, Jenner, Block, Bello, and so many other eminent writers, who unanimously sustain this doctrine; but we will refer to all the treaties of amity and commerce in force to-day between different nations, all of which establish the doctrines of exemption with rigorous uniformity.

To insist on this would be tiresome and superfluous. We are sure that the government has had no doubt about it, and that, taking duly into account our petition, the government will modify the proceedings of the assessing commission, and that it will proclaim a doctrine which is a law of the nation and attested by a sacred agreement, by declaring that the subjects of His Majesty the King of Spain are not obliged to pay now, and are not subject to any other tax of the kind, either of blood, money, or otherwise.

We expect our petition will be duly and justly appreciated, and granted as it is founded on justice.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Cotaña, February 18, 1881.

Messrs. SARAZABAL, DEVIN, MALDONALDO, and others, subjects of Spain in La Paz, Bolivia.:

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, in which you ask me to transmit to the Government of Bolivia, in an official manner, a document signed by the Spanish subjects of La Paz, praying for an exemption from the forced loan lately decreed, and in which you ask my help and protection, basing your request upon the fact that Spain has no representative of its own near the Government of Bolivia, and that you feel yourselves authorized by common international usage to call upon me as the representative of a friendly nation.

In reply to your polite and dignified letter, I am sorry to be obliged to inform you that I cannot comply with your request, inasmuch, by the established usage of nations, and in compliance with the rules made for the ministers of the United States by its government, it is required that the request for diplomatic protection of subjects of another country by any minister of the United States should come from the government of such country, and should be acknowledged by the government where both reside.

In cases where the life, liberty, or property of a foreign subject or citizen, not represented, has been in danger either from local persecution or foreign invasion, it has been customary for such foreigner to claim the help and protection of the representative of a friendly nation, and without a previous request from his own government and the usual formalities it has been accorded freely and fully, especially by ministers of the United States, at different times and occasions, but this case, involving as it does no act of persecution or injustice even, but simply the rights and duties of foreigners under established treaty stipulations, into a discussion of which I am not prepared to enter, offers no reason for my official interference, especially as I cannot deny that a sovereign nation has the right, even in time of war, to levy extraordinary taxes, not upon the person, but the property and business of its inhabitants, and as long as no distinction is made in the assessment of this tax, called strangely, for what reason I know not, a forced loan (emprestito forzoso), although legally authorized by a constitu-tutional Congress of the republic, I do not feel warranted in throwing obstacles in the way of the government, and did and shall advise my own countrymen to pay the said tax.

I have the honor, in returning to you, gentlemen, the document referred, to assure you of my highest respect and consideration, and to subscribe myself,

Your very obedient servant,

CHARLES ADAMS.

Mr. Cabrera to Mr. Blaine.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF BOLIVIA IN THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, May 9, 1881. (Received May 9.)

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: In the month of February last I had the honor to have a verbal conference with Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, with regard to the urgent necessity of putting an end to the long and disastrous war between Peru, Bolivia, and Chili.

For the purpose of reaching some practical result, I proposed, after some preliminaries, the bases of a peace contained in my note of February 18th and the two inclosures therewith transmitted.

His Excellency Mr. Evarts, although he considered the plan submitted to his consideration as possessing a high degree of importance, had not time to give it the necessary attention, owing to the change in the administration of the United States Government, as he had the kindness to state in his note of March 5.

I duly reported what had been done to the Governments of Bolivia and Peru, calling their attention at the same time to the necessity of proposing those bases of a peace to Chili as their ultimatum.

Since that date the character of the war has not changed much, notwithstanding the occupation of Lima by the victorious forces of Chili. In the south and north of Peru resistance is still continued, and in Bolivia public spirit has been invigorated by the news of the occupation of Lima, all of which renders it probable that the war will be interminable.

This view is confirmed by a telegram which was published by the New York Herald in its issue of the 6th, in which it was stated that the King of Holland had authorized his representative to tender his (the King's) good offices, in conjunction with France, England, and Italy, to the three belligerent nations for the restoration of peace.

I cannot believe, under these circumstances, that your excellency's government, which during the course of this war has manifested so deep an interest in the restoration of peace among the nations of South America, will permit foreign powers to claim the merit of having restored peace, while the plan which I had the honor to propose is still pending before it. In presenting that plan my object was manifold, viz, to bring about an honorable peace; to strengthen and develop the wonderful productive power of North America by opening new and profitable markets to its commercial activity; to secure to your excellency's government that influence in South America which rightfully belongs to it by reason of its proximity, its civilization, and the similarity of its institutions; and, finally, to satisfy the pecuniary demands of Chili, the conqueror of Lima.

In order to secure such great benefits to humanity, to whom war must ever be repugnant; to bring two continents of the new world into immediate contact by closely uniting them in the bonds of industry and commerce; and, finally, to secure even the rights of the conqueror (although they are improperly so called), what is it that the plan proposed by me asks of your excellency's government?

Nothing but the fulfillment of an obligation, which is to be common to all the governments, viz, to guarantee that capital invested by citizens of the United States in the management and working of the guano and nitre deposits of Peru and Bolivia shall not be disturbed in its industrial application.

I take the liberty to submit these passing reflections to your excellency, that they may receive attention when you may see fit to consider my plan, and to secure a new title to glory to your government by restoring peace in South America, and by opening up new sources of wealth to North American labor and activity.

I purposely avoid presenting any further considerations, but I feel sure that the foregoing will not be disregarded by your excellency.

With sentiments of true respect and high esteem, I am your excellency's obedient servant,

LADISLAS CABRERA.

No. 51.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Blaine.

No. 75.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, June 8, 1881. (Received July 18.)

SIR: Regarding the political situation of Bolivia, I have the honor to report that everything remains in statu quo. The Congress of the country has been called to meet in extra session on the 13th of this month, but it is simply expected to approve the measures of the government since its adjournment last November. President Campero seems to be established firmer in his seat than ever, and his policy of quietly strengthening the army, drilling and equipping it, and of getting the national guard ready for active service, if necessary, seems to meet the approval of the country, based as this policy is upon the expressed will of the people to resist any invasion Chili might contemplate.

Meanwhile, the visit of President Piérola to La Paz has strengthened the alliance between Peru and Bolivia, and I do not believe that one will make peace without the co-operation and approval of the other. Nobody here so far acknowledges the government of García Calderon at Lima while it is upheld by Chilian bayonets. While an invasion from Chili in the near future is entirely improbable, as Chilian soldiers could never endure an Andean winter, and so no immediate fighting is expected, it is still hoped here that our government may be pleased to put an end to the war, and in the interest of commerce, humanity, republican institutions, and American traditions and ideas may compel Chili, if necessary, to grant to Peru and Bolivia honorable terms of peace, instead of holding both countries by the throat, so to speak, by demanding continuous contributions and excluding them from all commerce on the sea.

Inasmuch as under these circumstances my presence here can be spared, and unless next mail brings me orders to the contrary, I shall leave here on the 15th instant en route to the United States, and I may expect to reach New York on the steamer following the one which brings this dispatch, and shall report in person at Washington immediately after my arrival.

I have, &c.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 14, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of February 1 last, setting forth the reasons which animate and control the Government of Bolivia in resisting to the last extremity the encroachments of the Chilian Government.

The people of this country have watched, not without the deepest interest, the continued struggle between the three nations on the Pacific, whose institutions and forms of government are allied to their own, in the sincere hope that the differences of whatever nature which engendered the present conflict might be amicably and satisfactorily adjusted, and the perpetuity and prosperity of those republics guaranteed.

Still cherishing this confident hope, I bid you accept, sir, in the name of the Government and people of the United States the assurances of my highest consideration.

NEW YORK, November 8, 1881.
(Received Nov. 15.)

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I fear that it will be almost impossible for me to have another interview with you in relation to South American and Bolivia affairs, as to-morrow will be my last day before I sail, and you are occupied with so many important affairs, but before I go I would ask you if only in a brief memorandum to outline for me a course of action which I would think you and the government would approve.

I can assure you that Bolivia perhaps to-day is a stronger factor in the war with Chili than Peru, and that it only awaits my return and what word I bring with me from you as to the intentions of this government towards the belligerents to shape its actions for the future.

You are aware that the last Congress of Bolivia resolved to ignore any government in Peru until it was firmly established and recognized, and I suppose that any instructions I may receive and bring to President Campero will influence him and the government as to what course he will pursue; at any rate, whatever your policy may be, will, I am sure, be almost considered a command, for, in accordance with the Monroe doctrine, Bolivia will not call in the assistance of any other nation as long as it may be assured of the sympathy of ours and the rejection on your part of the lust of conquest so clearly shown by Chili.

On that point I should desire some instructions, and I would ask to be allowed to take them with me, not only for Bolivia's sake but for my own, so that I may be prepared to act with discretion and decision in case of emergency.

Hoping that you will not let me depart without this, and if possible to grant me another interview,

I have, &c.,

No. 54.

Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts.

No 83.] LÉGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, February 20, 1879. (Received March 26.)

SIR: Chili is involved in another dispute concerning her boundaries. It is with Bolivia now, and concerns the territory on the Pacific coast lying between the 23d and 25th degrees of latitude. Prior to 1866, jurisdiction over this territory was claimed by both of these governments, but on December 9 of that year they promulgated a treaty which had for its purpose a settlementof the dispute. In substance, the treaty provided that the 24th degree should constitute the line of division, but that all guano deposits within the territory prior thereto in dispute, as also all duties which might be derived from the exportation of minerals therefrom should be equally divided between the two countries. It soon became evident, however, that the treaty had failed to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended, and on the 6th of August, 1874, they celebrated another.

In this the 24th degree was reasserted as the line of division, and each government relinquished its right, within the jurisdiction of the other, to duties arising from exportation of minerals. They agreed, also, that within the hitherto disputed territory neither government should, for the term of twenty-five years, impose upon the exportation of minerals a higher duty than was then provided for, and that neither government should, within said territory, tax the citizens, industries, or capital of the other, of whatever character, in excess of that then fixed by law.

The country referred to as the disputed territory is in the heart of what is known as the desert of Atacama, and was regarded, until about the time of the execution of the first treaty, except for the deposit of guano at Majillones, its northern boundary, as of little or no value. The discovery of vast nitrate deposits about that time, however, in that part of the territory set apart to Bolivia by the treaty soon brought it into prominent notice, and companies were organized for the purpose of developing that industry. The business seems to have been monopolized by a corporation known as "El Compañia de Salitres y Ferrocarril de Antofagasta," a company composed mainly of gentlemen of means, citizens of Chili. It is claimed in behalf of the company that it had full authority from the Bolivian Government for the prosecution of its business, and that it relied upon the good faith of Bolivia in making its investments. It is claimed that its investments now exceed $4,000,000. It has constructed a railroad 40 miles into the interior, running through the nitrate deposits, and Antofagasta, the shipping point for the nitrate, and the location of the principal works, has developed into a city of nearly 10,000 people.

In February of last year the Bolivian Congress enacted a law exacting a tax of ten cents a quintal on all exportations of nitrate, and from this has arisen the present difficulty with Chili. The Chilian Government promptly protested against the execution of this law, claiming that it was in direct conflict with the guarantees of the treaty of 1874. The law was allowed to remain dormant for several months, but no action was taken looking to its revocation.

A short time since, however, the Bolivian authorities notified the company at Antofagasta that the law was to be executed, and that the amount which was due from it on account of shipments made since the passage of the law was something in excess of $90,000. The Chilian Government protested anew, and caused Bolivia to be informed that if she insisted upon executing the law Chili would regard the treaty as abrogated, and would proceed to assert her right of dominion to the territory claimed by her prior to 1866. Notwithstanding this threat the works at Antofagasta were levied upon and notice was given that they would be sold; whereupon, on the 12th instant, the Chilian minister at La Paz was instructed by telegraph to demand his passport, and forces were immediately forwarded by water with instructions to take possession of the territory on the coast as far north as the 23d degree of latitude. On the 14th the Chilian forces occupied Antofagasta without firing a gun, and the disputed territory is all now held by Chilian troops.

The course of the government here meets with a hearty approval from all classes. The movement was an exceedingly popular one. It is doubtful, indeed, if the administration could have taken another course and sustained itself. There is much anxiety concerning the course which Peru is likely to take. That her people strongly sympathize with Bolivia in this affair is undoubtedly true, and it is feared by some that the government may be driven into an alliance with Bolivia. I think the fear is well grounded.

The Chili Government is endeavoring to prepare itself for any emergency. The naval force has all been sent to the north and troops are being forwarded as rapidly as possible.

It is understood that Congress will be convened in extraordinary session about the 10th of March.

I forward you by this mail a copy of a pamphlet entitled the "New question of Chile with Bolivia," which was sent to me from the foreign office. Also a copy of the "Diario Official," which contains a sort of manifesto from the government under the head of "El Conflicto con Bolivia."

No. 86.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, April 3, 1879. (Received May 8.)

SIR: Following the events related in my dispatch No. 83 came the proclamation of the President of Bolivia, on the 1st of March, declaring war against Chili, and providing for the confiscation of the property of Chilians. Upon the receipt of this proclamation here, the Chilian land forces were ordered to advance upon Calama, and the naval force was directed to occupy Cobija and Tocopilla. The two latter places are the only Bolivian ports north of the 23d degree, and the former is a town of about five hundred people, in the valley of the Loa, some hundred miles from Antofagasta, and is supposed to have some strategic importance.

The two ports were taken possession of without trouble, but the secretary of war, who was in the vicinity, reports that at Calama the Chili troops were seriously resisted.

A number were killed on both sides, but the Chilians triumphed, and the Bolivians who were not killed were taken prisoners. I judge, however, that there were not more than five hundred men engaged, all told. This is the only engagement of which advices have been received here.

Peru is giving the government and people here much more concern just now than is Bolivia.

Soon after the taking of Antofagasta the Government of Peru sent here an ambassador extraordinary, Señor Lavalle, with instructions to tender the good offices of his government in the settlement of the dispute with Bolivia, and to urge, earnestly, an amicable arrangement. Señor Lavalle was kindly received by the government, but among the people there has been an almost universal expression of displeasure at his coming. From day to day the newspapers have been filled with reports from the north tending to show that Peru is preparing herself for a struggle with her rival, and charges have been freely made that the ambassador was sent here merely for delay, to enable his government to prepare itself for the contest. This idea has taken a strong hold upon the public mind, whether there be foundation for it or not.

I was invited to an interview with the minister of foreign relations, and attended for that purpose at his official quarters, on the 29th ultimo. Among other things he informed me that Chili was not satisfied with the attitude of Peru, and that Mr. Godoy, their minister at Lima, under instructions from his government, had demanded an answer from the Peruvian Government as to its purpose in the dispute between Chili and Bolivia. The answer was not, he said, satisfactory. In it was embodied an acknowledgment that there had existed for several years a secret alliance between Peru and Bolivia, the effect of which would be to force Peru into the conflict against Chili.

I told Mr. Fierro, the foreign minister, that I was sure that my government would be exceedingly sorry to hear of a war between these countries, and I urged him to neglect no opportunity to settle the dispute amicably. In response to a suggestion from him, I remarked that I did not doubt that the United States Government would cheerfully lend its efforts to an amicable arrangement of the difficulties if the governments engaged in the controversy should request it to do so, but that I trusted that they would be able to arrange it among themselves.

From the manner of the minister rather than the matter of his conversation, I discovered that he felt much interested in the response, and it would not surprise me to learn that an effort was being made to induce these countries to join in a request to the United States to assist them in the settlement of their dispute.

However his language concerning the reply of Peru to Mr. Godoy led me to believe that war was almost certain to follow.

I had informed the minister some time previous of my intention to avail myself at a convenient time of the privilege granted me by my government to visit the United States, and he now expressed a very earnest wish, in behalf of his government, that pending these difficulties I should remain in Chili. He seemed satisfied with my answer.

Minister Lavalle is still in Santiago, and it is barely possible that Peru may yet remain out of the conflict. I don't regard it as probable, however.

Neither of the countries is prepared for war, and where the money is to come from is more than I can tell. The probable condition of their credit at its close does not present so difficult a problem.

The navies of Peru and Chili are about equal in point of strength, and there cannot be much difference in their land forces. The Chilian army, the minister informs me, consists of nine thousand men, with a reserve force, called national guards, of fifteen thousand more. The national guards are, I judge, not unlike our State militia.

The minister informed me that the Chilian legation in Washington was about to be supplied with a minister, and that that post would be filled by Don F. L. Asta-Buruaga. Mr. Asta-Buruaga formerly represented Chili at Washington in the same capacity. He has a high regard for our country, and I look upon his selection as a fit one. He will probably leave for the United States next week.

I enclose some slips cut from an English paper containing an article translated from the "Diario Official" of Santiago, upon the "Desert of Atacama and its resources." The article will repay perusal.*

No. 88.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, April 4, 1879. (Received May 8.)

SIR: I have but just time before the closing of the mail to say that the friendly relations between Chili and Peru have been broken off. The Peruvian special envoy received his passports last night, and soon after left on a special train for his home. To-day it is officially announced that the amity and friendship heretofore existing between these countries is at an end. The Official Gazette promises to-morrow a "Memorandum" of the causes which have brought about this unfortunate result. Suffice it to say that the grievance of Chili is the alleged secret alliance between Peru and Bolivia, and the apparant preparation making by Peru for war.

Congress has conferred upon the President extraordinary powers. He is authorized to increase the army without limit.

No. 89.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, April 10, 1879. (Received May 16.)

SIR: As will be seen from the inclosed translation of a note received by me from the minister of foreign relations, war was formally declared against Peru on the 5th instant, and on the same day the port of Iquique was placed in blockade by the Chilian squadron.

The government promises a statement of the reasons for its action, for the information of friendly governments, in a few days. Awaiting it, I inclose a slip from a newspaper containing the "memorandum," published in the "Official Gazette" simultaneously with the declaration of war.

The army is being rapidly increased, and there is apparently no abatement in the enthusiasm.

Iquique is the great niter depot of Peru, and is situated about midway in the province of Tarapacá, from north to south. This province extends to the Bolivian frontier on the north, and is supposed to contain almost inexhaustible wealth in its niter and guano deposits. If Chili succeeds in getting possession of Tarapacá, she will, I judge, insist upon holding it. An intelligent gentlemen with whom I have conversed upon the subject, and who formerly lived in Tarapacá, estimates the value of its niter deposits alone at four hundred millions of dollars.

REPUBLIC OF CHILI, MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, April 9, 1879.

SEÑOR: I have the honor to inform you, pursuant to special orders received from his excellency the President of the Republic, that on the 5th instant war was declared against the Government of Peru.

The reasons which obliged my government to take that hard but necessary resolution will be in a short time communicated to you.

At the same time it becomes my duty to announce to you that on the date above indicated the maritime forces of Chili placed in blockade the port of Iquique.

In requesting that you will please place these facts within the knowledge of your government, it affords me pleasure to offer to you the assurances of high consideration with which,

I am, &c.,

MANIFESTO OF THE CHILIAN GOVERNMENT TO THE REPRESENTATIVES OF FRIENDLY POWERS, WITH REFERENCE TO THE DECLARATION OF WAR AGAINST PERU.

[Translated from the Diario Oficial.]

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Santiago, April 12, 1879.

Mr. MINISTER: Annexed to the present note you will find a copy of the official gazette of Chili, from which you will learn the authority conferred on my government by the high authorities of the state to declare war against Peru, and conduct it to an end by all the means recognized by the rights of nations, and with all the resources at the disposal of the country.

By order of his excellency the President of the republic, I fulfill the duty of informing you of the grave causes that have led to the formation of this unavoidable though lamentable resolution, which breaks old ties that Chili has always endeavored to strengthen.

The government, in whose name I have the honor of speaking, flatters itself with the hope that the calm judgment of that represented by your excellency will duly appreciate the conduct that Chili has observed in this emergency—as foreign to her character and tradition as contrary to her dearest interests.

The especial characteristic of this country, the constant tendency of its foreign policy, and even its social and economic necessities, have withdrawn it from all spirit of adventure, and have stimulated it to maintain the most friendly relations with all nations. Chili lives by peace and industry; requires as a prime element of its prosperity, foreign immigration; and possessing a vast territory only partially fertilized by the rude labor of its sons, requires more than any people foreign and internal tranquillity.

The latter has been obtained, thanks to the frank adoption of a system by which all the public powers emanate from the national vote; and clearly is it proved, by the history of many years, that it has always endeavored to avoid conflict with foreign nations. The republic can show with legitimate pride that it has never been sparing of its blood or resources whenever it has been embarked in a noble cause, and much less when to it have been united the interests of this continent; but it can also declare with no less satisfaction that, though always ready to defend outraged rights, it has systematically avoided all provocation, even under circumstances that would have authorized it. Only a few months ago it has given a new proof of the traditional character of its policy, by submitting to the honorable solution of arbitration an old and vexed question it sustained against a neighboring power, although it had to yield to the uncertainty of a sentence, rights to which the national sentiment attached great importance. From this it will be easy for your excellency to deduce that Chili, in forgetting its historic conduct and the necessities of its situation, has done so only by the irresistible force of evident justice and in obedience to the clearest demands on its dignity.

My government very recently complied with its duty in manifesting to those with whom it has the pleasure to maintain cordial relations, the circumstances which obliged it to declare at an end the treaty existing with Bolivia, and to occupy the territory lying between parallels 23 and 24 S. lat.

Subsequently, and without previous declaration of war, the President of Bolivia issued a decree emanating from his single will, by which he expelled Chilian citizens from that state, confiscated their property, and sequestrated the products of the industry and capital of this country.

It is unnecessary to recapitulate the bonds uniting the two nations, confirmed by solemn treaties, never respected by our neighbors; unnecessary to repeat that since 1866 till the occupation of Antofagasta on February 14 of this year, my government, by a series of concessions more or less valuable, had arrived at the last sacrifice in order to maintain peace.

If Chili has been forced into war, it is not through its own act, but is the unavoidable consequence of the extraordinary conduct observed by the government of La Paz. This, on one hand, declined to fulfill the treaty of 1874, in virtue of which, and by whose sole title, it occupied conditionally the territory whose possession was transferred by the treaty mentioned. On the other it refused the honorable resource of arbitration, pretending to constitute itself absolute judge of the interpretation and practical application of the rights and duties established by the mutual sanction of both nations.

From whatever point of view the severest impartiality may consider the irregular proceedings of the Bolivian authorities, we feel convinced that the friendly powers whose opinion we so much esteem will recognize, in homage to the strictest justice, that the situation imposed on Chili by a will not its own, indicated one sole course as possible in protection of its decorum.

My government nevertheless, in spite of antecedents that perhaps should have indicated a different course, wished to limit itself to pointing out the natural consequences of the rupture of the treaty of 1874. If it be undeniable that before the treaty of 1866 the territory comprised between parallels 23 and 24 belonged to Chili by right and by the constant exercise of veritable possession; if it be true that it was ceded to Bolivia by the treaty of 1874 on the emphatic condition that no new taxes should be levied on Chilian industry and capital; and if, in fine, it is the melancholy truth, proved by public documents of the Bolivian Government, that it, turning a deaf ear to all remonstrance, ceased in truth to impose taxation, but rendered illusory the right of property recognized by its own laws—it was necessary on the part of Chili to replace things in the state in which they stood before the extraordinary violation of the treaty mentioned.

This violent act of Bolivia was necessarily followed by the occupation of the consideration ceded, on the ground of nonfulfillment of the conditions. This sufficiently explains the landing of our troops at Antofagasta, so that in attributing to this the character of a belligerent act, the antecedents of the conflict are deliberately disregarded. In order to avoid the occupation, Bolivia possessed the means open to the commonest honesty—viz, promising to respect the treaty of 1874. This would have been the course of a civilized nation, for no reasoning, no protest, can defend the unjust sentence Bolivia claimed to give in the question; to retain the territory it owed to the liberality of Chili, and at the same time to break the fundamental condition of the concession.

It is painful, but at the same time indispensable, to bring to the memory of friendly powers another evident reason that my government could have wished not to reveal, out of respect to a state of the same origin. Official documents, and still more, the private history of Chilian industry on the coast between 23° and 24° S. lat., are witnesses that cannot be refuted to the fact that since 1866 to the date of the occupation of Antofagasta, the Bolivian Government appears to have conceived, organized, and put in practice an inflexible system of persecution against the development of Chilian enterprises which have been the only origin and the principal element of the wealth of that locality, never suspected and never stimulated by the private industry or national protection of Bolivia.

The capital of this republic, and that developed under the protection of our laws without distinction of nationality, being embarked in costly speculations, my government could not view with indifference the adoption by Bolivia of special measures tending to place Chilians in an exceptional situation. Soon after the treaty of 1866, and then after that of 1874, the painful certainty was realized that in Bolivia no idea existed of individual guarantees. Taxes were imposed under the pretext of municipal rates; disgraceful punishments were inflicted by the authorities on citizens of this republic; and finally, a Chilian enterprise for the working of nitrate beds, authorized by the Bolivian Government, afforded a pretext for a law irreconcilable with the most essential stipulation of the treaty of 1874.

My government could not and ought not abandon its citizens to the caprice of that of Bolivia, and less to the discretion of its subalterns; and the official documents inserted in the reports of the ministry of foreign affairs since 1866 render unnecessary any additional proof that since then till now it has been impossible to restrain the action of the Bolivian authorities.

These precedents showed sufficiently that the occupation of Antofagasta was urgently required, through the violation of the treaty; and my government found itself under the necessity of ordering it, for the protection of interests and persons threatened by measures which respected no rights whatever.

The occupation effected on February 14 could not be considered as a declaration of war, and still less as a threat on the part of my government against the sovereignty of Bolivia. Nor was it reasonable to suppose that the cabinet of Santiago intended to modify the geographical limits of the neighboring nations. In this conflict, which never would have arisen if even a show of respect had been evinced for the spirit and letter of treaties, what this republic has aimed at from the beginning, with the greatest frankness, was to defend its national rights and protect private property. Before 1866 we possessed effectively up to the parallel 23. By the treaty of that year we accepted the exploitation in common up to parallel 25; and subsequently we fixed the limits of Chili at 24°, on condition of the neighboring republic leaving our industry free from any new exaction.

The situation of the two republics seemed to be clear enough. Chili renounced its effective possession up to lat. 23° S.; Bolivia ceded its fantastic pretentions up to lat. 24°; and both countries, respecting the fact that Antofagasta, Mejillones, Caracoles, and Salinas were of Chilian creation, agreed to guarantee the freedom of the industries established in those regions. This undoubtedly imported an immense sacrifice to Chili, considering that she not only ceded to Bolivia a territory in dispute, but also a large area over which her title could not have been questioned for a moment.

The antecedents of the treaty of 1866, and the negotiations which resulted in that of 1874 are the most evident proofs that Chili, far from desiring the extension of its limits recognized under the colonial régime, only sought an arrangement that permitted the untrammeled exercise of Chilian industry, notwithstanding the appropriation by Bolivia of the territory that we possessed.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the right of a sovereign state to claim from another with which it contracted the fulfillment of its stipulations, and the no less indisputable faculty to employ the means of enforcement which the law of nations has placed in use. Although the proceeding of my government was open to no objection, considering that the conflict with Bolivia in no way affected Peru, we wished to give the latter a proof of our friendship by informing it fully of whatever transpired, calling previously its attention to the necessary results of a groundless complication.

The Lima cabinet knew, therefore, everything concerning the negotiations at La Paz; it could appreciate the tenacious resistance opposed to the conciliatory proposals of our chancellery; and it also knew that such proposals were replied to by unheard-of acts of violent spoliation. In spite of this, that cabinet, so zealous for the peace of America, which has assumed at the eleventh hour the charge of Bolivia, could find then—when an opportunity offered for it to fulfill its duty—not a single word nor course whatever to avert a conflict in which it may now be said Peru represented a secret rôle by no means in conformity with its much-talked-of highmindedness.

It was our duty then to confide in the loyalty of Peru; still more, we had the right to demand it, either on the ground of a sincere friendship, or as a slight return for the blood of our citizens and our treasure spent in giving that country a nationality, and defending it at the price of our own ruin.

It was natural for us to give faith to the professions of netrality which the Peruvian Government transmitted to us through our plenipotentiary; and to consider as friendly the intimation given us by that cabinet, that until war was declared it must permit the passage of Bolivian troops through its territory, in virtue of a previous treaty.

There were, however, various antecedents which contradicted in a great measure the declarations that now we may stigmatize as insidious, with full knowledge of the circumstances. The President of Peru did not hesitate to express his fears for the pressure that might be brought to bear in an opposite sense by a reckless popular opinion. He hinted at the not improbable event of the action of the authorities being interfered with, and recognized the influence of certain circles whose disaffection to Chili is only founded on the childish jealousy with which our prosperity is regarded.

This caused my government to observe an attitude of vigilant expectation. According to the rules regulating the relations of friendly powers, it would have been rash to provoke a definitive situation; but according to the claims of our own responsibility and dignity, we were bound to prepare for any emergency.

This explains the reception accorded to the extraordinary legation from Peru which arrived at Santiago at the beginning of March, with words of peace and conciliation.

The nature of the complication with Bolivia did not exclude the possibility of some arrangement, as it was not our desire to make war unnecessarily. My government, however, believed that all mediation under the then circumstances was inopportune; that it had even been so when on a previous occasion it had been offered by the chargé d'affaires of Peru; and that the cabinet of Lima had lost the occasion of interposing its friendly offices, even if it had at any time professed them.

When the government of La Paz showed itself deaf to all remonstrance; when its only argument was decrees violatory of the treaty of 1874; when it replied to pacific indications by the enforcement of the law of 1878, which implicitly abrogated its recent pledges to Chili; then, indeed, mediation would have been practicable, supposing that Peru had possessed the real character of an honorable mutual friend.

Believing firmly that mediation for the moment was groundless, my government yet considered that such belief was not incompatible with hearing the ideas of the Peruvian Government, transmitted by its representative, Don José Antonio de Lavalle. At the preliminary conference held by the undersigned with Señor Lavalle, it appeared that the object of the mission was to exchange ideas and make general observations on the Chilino-Bolivian question. As then the belief became more pronounced in the existence of a secret treaty of alliance, concluded in the year 1873 between Peru and Bolivia, it seemed advisable to interrogate Señor Lavalle concerning an event of such importance; and as at the same time an unusual activity was observable in the army and navy of Peru, explanations were demanded as to the signification and object of such preparations.

Señor Lavalle gave the following reply:

"That he had no knowledge of the treaty alluded to; that he believed it had no "existence; that it could not have been approved by the Congress of 1873, because the "legislature being biennial till the constitutional reform of 1878, that assembly did not "meet in that year; and that he was sure it was not approved on the following years, "during which he had the honor of presiding over the diplomatic committee of Con"gress, at which such negotiation would necessarily have had to be discussed. But "nevertheless, as since his arrival in Chili he had heard the existence of this treaty "spoken of, he had asked instructions from his government, which he would commu- "nicate immediately they were received."

Respecting the belligerent attitude which Peru commenced to assume, its representative attributed it to the special condition of its territory, and to the necessity of preventing its violation by the operations of the belligerents, which it was reasonable to anticipate, as the Bolivians had invaded it even in the cases of internal commotion.

These explanations were not tranquilizing, because they were not conclusive, and confirmed my government in the conviction that it would be necessary to resolve so equivocal a situation before the cabinet of Lima itself; and even without knowing its antecedents, instructions were sent at the first moment to our minister at that capital, to ask for a prompt declaration of neutrality.

The cabinet of Lima, as I have already had the honor of stating to your excellency, declared to our representative in verbal conference that it would be neutral in the conflict with Bolivia, and that such resolution would remain in suspense until the declaration of war were notified to it.

On March 14 our minister in Lima announced to my government that the chargé d'affaires of Bolivia had made known to the diplomatic corps there resident that his country was at war with Chili, and on the same day orders were sent Señor Godoy to demand the declaration of neutrality. It was asked for in moderate terms on the 17th of the same month, and the Peruvian chancellery, replying on the 21st, referred to instructions that would be transmitted to its envoy extraordinary in Chili, without explaining the reasons which induced it to delay the solution of a legitimate right which gave no margin for further explanations. The disloyal evasion of Peru was unacceptable even to the least suspicious judgment, and for this reason my government informed Señor Godoy on the same day that it did not admit of such a tardy course being adopted; that it insisted on claiming its right in Lima itself; and that it now not only asked Peru to define its attitude, but demanded a frank explanation as to the object of its armament, and substantial guarantees for the future, in the event of any probable contingency.

Such a demand was fully justified. The extraordinary mission of Señor Lavalle, at such a critical moment, only served to satisfy us as to his ignorance of subjects of immense importance; and at the same time the Government of Lima had to be reminded that it had confessed itself impotent to fulfill its duty, and that an explosion of hate as profound as unreasonable against this republic had burst forth among the people of the pretended mediator.

The moment had therefore arrived to dissipate all doubt. My government, sensible of the responsibility weighing upon it, and being aware of the extent of the right of self-defense before an ill-defined neutrality that was arming in every haste, did not hesitate to give its demands the pressing nature that the gravity of the situation demanded.

On the said 21st of March Señor Godoy communicated to my government the result of that step, but the defective telegraphic transmission necessitated the rectification of the dispatch, which from various causes could not be effected before the night of the 24th. His note had not been replied to in writing, but in verbal conference he was given clearly to understand by the Government of Peru that it was impossible for it to assume a neutral attitude, owing to the existence of a treaty of alliance with Bolivia. In spite of the importance of this declaration, that government insisted on Chili abiding by the explanations of the Peruvian envoy; and exhibited, with an impassiveness at variance with the simplest demands of honor, the desire of postponing the solution of the problem.

Notwithstanding, my government, obedient to the respect which it has always professed toward the opinions of other nations, and desirous of avoiding the reproach of hastiness by the omission of any essential requisite to establish clearly the situation of Peru, endeavored to obtain explicit and exact explanations.

On the said 24th of March peremptory instructions were sent to our minister at Lima. According to them he was to insist that the question of neutrality should not be discussed in Chili; that we demanded the immediate and guaranteed suspension of the armament, and the production of the secrect treaty, inquiring if it was approved in due form, and if Peru was disposed to abrogate it immediately and give us the requisite explanations for having negotiated in secret, while on terms of friendship with us, a treaty showing want of confidence in and even of hostility toward Chili.

Such were our last demands and their just foundations. Our representative in Lima, putting them into prompt execution, conferred verbally with the head of the Peruvian Government and the members of his cabinet.

The result of those conferences was the following declarations, which suffice without any comment to show the international policy of a government allied till then with us by a treaty of friendship offered by Chili when the ancient masters of Peru imposed on it a humiliating vassalage.

The cabinet of Lima, without a tinge of shame, undeterred by recent events, without even the frankness which occasionally excuses great faults, tranquilly answered our minister:

1. That it would not declare nor assume an attitude of neutrality, though with an incomprehensible logic it offered, nevertheless, on its already violated word, to suspend its warlike preparations.

2. That the secret treaty with Bolivia—a shameful net spread for our friendship—was duly completed for a long time past.

3. That that treaty, whose hidden existence was the best proof of its bastard nature, had to be kept secret, in accordance with one of its articles, calculated cunningly against the friend of many years, the ally in trouble, the savior in the two great crises of the nation, that with such a monument testified its gratitude; and

4. That a copy of this singular treaty had been remitted to Señor Lavalle; but on the understanding that it should only be read to us, doubtless to satisfy our curiosity to know a negotiation whose like can scarcely be found in the darkest records of diplomacy.

It is not surprising that the cabinet of Lima had the assurance to insist, with all the appearance of seriousness, on the possibility of the continuance of the pending negotiations.

If all this was not war, such as it is understood by civilized nations, it signified the same thing, under the transparent disguise of a mediator who assumed the double part of a friend when he was an interested belligerent.

The secret treaty of February 6, 1873, needs no lengthy examination to ascertain its object; and the reserve in which it has been maintained confirms in the least suspicious mind the conviction that it was entered into solely as a means of security for the fiscal egotism of Peru in its pecuniary troubles and to aid the schemes of the Government of Bolivia, a perpetual conspirator against the treaty of 1866. In 1873, neither Peru nor Bolivia was threatened by the remotest danger of territorial dismemberment; and much less could it be foreseen that Chili cherished such idea, seeing that it had granted to Bolivia whatever that republic demanded in the convention of 1866—applauded by the Bolivian people as a splendid manifestation of Chilian generosity.

The treaty of 1873 owed its origin—hidden as a shameful act—to the measures adopted by Peru at that epoch to justify one of the most audacious and cruel spoilations witnessed by countries submitted to a régime of common respect toward the industry of all nations.

Peru desired to monopolize and appropriate the nitrate works; and in order to sustain its daily diminishing credit, adopted the supreme measure of ruining an industry to satisfy a fiscal voracity that could not satisfy itself with the ordinary resources of a country that has lived, thanks to its territorial wealth, in complete obliviousness of economy and labor.

Your excellency cannot be ignorant of the situation of these three republics in February, 1873; and in fact only by the cause I have just indicated can be explained the existence of the treaty of that year, entered into in prevision of acts that nobody threatened to realize; that could not be realized while the treaty of 1866 existed; and when in no case was it possible to anticipate that Chili or any other nation would threaten the integrity of Bolivian territory, or the never-disputed sovereignty of Peru within its recognized limits.

It is evident that Peru sought in the treaty of 1873 to protect the financial measures it meditated against an industry that in any commonly scrupulous country would have had the right to develop itself freely. What it desired was to strengthen the nitrate monopoly without considering the sums invested in that industry; for in vain are antecedents of any kind scraped up to justify the belief, not probable, but even possible, of any aggression against the independence or dominion of the contracting powers.

Knowing the respective situation of these countries, the secret treaty of which I have spoken was either wholly useless, or it possessed an ulterior design that events have shown to be the real one. Neither Bolivia nor Peru could fear the perturbation of their sovereignty by any of the surrounding nations; so that the alliance is explainable by much less elevated motives, and which decidedly were intended to embarrass the action of my government in exacting the due fulfillment of the treaty we had celebrated with Bolivia, and provide against the consequences of the indignant clamor of Chilian citizens, despoiled by the despotic hand of the monopoly established in Tarapacá.

As a last analysis, the Peru-Bolivian convention was for Peru the cold calculation of a trader; and for Bolivia a vote of indemnity which covered the previous violations and future infractions of the agreement of 1866. The monopolizing interest of the former republic and the international ill faith of the second found their faithful expression in that document, whose celebrity will be as lasting as the condemnation which the honest conscience of every civilized people will attach to it.

And this, you excellency will observe as an orignal lesson of diplomatic loyalty, was on the eve of adjusting the treaty of 1874, when Chili, without necessity, and only in homage to peace, being able to exact the fulfillment of the treaty of 1866, agreed to renounce its recognized right to the territory between 24° and 23°.

There is even yet something more worthy of observation. Article 3 of the secret convention reserves to each party the qualification of the casus fœderis. The 8th establishes, as a solemn pledge, to avert war as far as possible, employing conciliatory means to avoid a rupture, and among them arbitration.

Peru therefore possessed the fullest liberty of action for deciding if the time for an alliance had arrived. It could and ought to have considered the object and character of the operations undertaken by my government; and more than one opportunity presented itself for offering its mediation, when it assisted as a mute witness to the negotiations whose logical results it could not otherwise than forsee. It is not therefore unwarranted to impute to the cabinet of Lima the deliberate intention, formed long before, of assuming the character of a belligerent. For this reason it manifested a decided inclination for neutrality even whilst it armed with unusual rapidity; for this it sent us a legation which claimed to be without instructions on the cardinal points of its mission; for this, whilst it delayed the replies asked by our representative, it sent urgent orders to Europe for new war material.

All this would merit, on the part of any power disinterested in the conflict, qualifications too severe for my government to repeat here out of respect for that of your excellency. The nations whose worthy representatives I have the honor to address will observe by the accompanying documents, that even accepting as obligatory the secret treaty of 1873, the Peruvian Government was free from any pledge. That of Bolivia refused the arbitration referred to in article 8 of the secret treaty, as it did in the treaties celebrated with Chili; and the casus fœderis had not occurred, inasmuch as Chili stated, and repeated frequently, that it did not intend to conquer a hand's breadth of Bolivian territory. Peru not only could but should observe the strictest neutrality, even observing the secret stipulations binding it with Bolivia; because these are founded on the existence of a threat against territorial integrity, which was never thought of on our part; and because they also fix as an indispensable precedent to the casus fœderis the previous recourse to arbitration.

The explanations given by Señor Lavalle, far from attenuating, strengthened more clearly, if that be possible, the terminant spirit of the treaty of 1873. How accept the trifling excuse that it contained a generic stipulation, not directed at Chili, whilst it is carefully hidden from her knowledge? If the treaty meant a general guarantee against any advance of a foreign power, why was the co-operation of Chili not sought, which has given more than one example of being the first to contribute, with its men, and its wealth, toward the maintenance of the sovereignty of nations of a common origin?

It was still more inconceivable that Peru should inform us by its envoy that the reserve of the treaty arose from one of its conditions, fearing our susceptibilities might be wounded if it proceeded to act as mediator while informing us of its relations with one of the belligerents.

To discuss such allegations would be merely to tire your patience, and is doubly unnecessary, inasmuch as Peru from the beginning of the conflict has done everything in its power to elude any explanation relating to the secret treaty.

My government needed no extraordinary effort to ascertain, from the acts and declarations related, what was the position that Peru preferred to assume, what were the rights, and, more than all, what were the duties that were consequently imposed.

The mediator offered himself, backed by an army, whose rapid reunion testified to the prevision of proximate conflicts, manned his navy, and, whilst uncertainly stammering words of impartiality, allowed to transpire the engagement of a belligerent duly sealed.

It was Peru which, if it did not declare war first, with the frankness of a noble resolution, commenced it first; and, what is worse, a war hidden and sheltered under false protestations of friendship.

Chili has never forgotten the course marked out by the patriotism of its sons, the energy strengthened by the conviction of violated justice, and its historic name among civilized nations. It is Peru that has plotted and desired war; let Peru, therefore, be charged with the responsibility, whilst Chili delivers its future to the protection of God, to the stout hearts of its citizens, and to the just opinion of enlightened nations.

No. 98.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, May 10, 1879. (Received June 16.)

SIR: I herewith inclose an English translation of the secret treaty between Peru and Bolivia, of which I have heretofore written. It will be observed that the alliance is a defensive one, each agreeing to defend the other from all foreign aggression. While the treaty is general in its terms there can be no doubt that its purpose was to consolidate the remaining South American Republics against Chili. Article 4, it will be seen, provides for the extension of the alliance to one or more of these states. I have it from reliable authority that the Argentine Government was some time since urged to become a party to the arrangement.

I also inclose a "map of the theater of the war," first issued here. The 24th degree south has heretofore been the north line of Chili. The territory comprised in the degree lying north of this line is that in dispute between Chili and Bolivia, and the Bolivian jurisdiction extended thence north to the river Loa. The purposes of the Chili Government are, in my judgment, outlined in this map. The plan contemplates an extension of the northern frontier to the river Camerones, and a compromise with Bolivia by guaranteeing to her the possession of the territory on the coast embracing Arica and Tacna. It is believed here very generally that Bolivia would much rather have the territory mentioned than that hitherto possessed by her embracing Antofagasta, and that as soon as a favorable opportunity shall offer she will be found ready to break with her present ally. When it is remembered that the imports and exports of Bolivia nearly all pass through the Peruvian custom-houses at Arica and Mollendo, this faith of the Chilians does not seem extravagantly wild.

The military situation now is about this:

Antofagasta is occupied by about 10,000 Chilian troops. Iquique is occupied by Peruvian troops, about 5,000 strong. This place is still under blockade, and the people and soldiers are suffering much for want of healthy provisions and water. Arica is occupied by a combined army consisting of about 6,000 Bolivians and the same number of Peruvians.

The Chilian campaign seems now to contemplate a movement by the forces at Antofagasta upon Iquique. If they should be successful in this they believe that the time will have arrived for an arrangement with Bolivia. If this should be consummated the new allies would unquestionably have Peru at their feet. President Daza, of Bolivia, is understood to be with his troops in the neighborhood of Arica, and I do not doubt that with the assistance of the Chilian navy he would be able to overcome the Peruvian force there with but little difficulty. It may perhaps be said that this course on the part of Bolivia would be highly dishonorable, and that, therefore, she is not likely to pursue it. She may not, but it will be for other reasons than this if she does not.

I have been disappointed in the faint resistance which Peru has thus far made upon the sea. The Chilian naval force is traversing the Peruvian coast with impunity, destroying the moles and launches in the various ports, and occasionally, by way of diversion, destroying a town.

The secret treaty between Peru and Bolivia.

The Peruvian minister of foreign affairs, Señor Manuel Irigoyen, and the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Bolivia, Señor Serapio Reyes Ortiz, having agreed to publish the secret treaty of defensive alliance celebrated between their repective governments on the 6th of February, 1873, in accordance with the terms of the additional article appended to the said treaty, the same has now appeared in print, and the following is a translation:

ADOLFO BALLIVIAN, constitutional President of the Republic of Bolivia:

Inasmuch as, between the republics of Bolivia and Peru, represented by the respective plenipotentiaries, there has been celebrated in the city of Lima on the sixth day of the month of February of the present year the following treaty of defensive alliance:

The republics of Bolivia and Peru, desirous to cement in a solemn manner the bonds that unite them, to increase thus their strength and mutually guarantee one another certain rights, have drawn up the present treaty of defensive alliance, to which end the President of Bolivia has invested with ample powers to conduct the said negotiation, Juan de la Cruz Benevente, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary in Peru, and the President of Peru has conferred the same upon José de la Riva Aguero, minister of foreign affairs, who have agreed upon the following stipulations:

ARTICLE I. The contracting parties will unite and join to mutually guarantee their independence, sovereignty, and the integrity of their respective territories, binding themselves by the terms of the present treaty to defend themselves against all foreign aggression, whether proceeding from another or other independent states, or from a force without a flag owing obedience to no recognized power.

ART. II. The alliance will become effective to protect the rights expressed in the preceding article, and particularly in cases of offense consisting, first, in acts tending to deprive either of the contracting parties of a portion of their territory, in order to assume dominion over it, or to yield it to another power; second, in acts tending to oblige either of the contracting parties to submit to a protectorate, sale or cession of territory, or to establish over it any superiority, right, or pre-eminence whatsoever, which may injure or offend the full and ample exercise of its sovereignty and independence; third, in acts tending to do away with or change the form of government, the political constitution or the laws that the contracting parties have made, or may in future make, in the exercise of the sovereignty.

ART. III. As both the contracting parties admit that every legitimate act of alliance is based upon justice, for each of them, respectively, the right is established of deciding whether the offense inferred to the other is comprised amongst those mentioned in the preceding article.

ART. IV. The casus faederis once declared, the contracting parties bind themselves to cease immediately their relations with the offending state, to hand their passports to its diplomatic ministers, to cancel the appointments of the consular agents, to forbid the importation of its natural and industrial products, and to close their ports against its ships.

ART. V. The same parties will also appoint plenipotentiaries to adjust by protocol the arrangements necessary to determine upon the subsidies, the contingents of either sea or land forces, or the aid of whatever kind that must be lent to the republic which has received the offense, the manner in which the forces are to act and the assistance to be lent, and whatever else may be convenient for the defense. The meeting of the plenipotentiaries will take place in the place assigned by the offended party for that purpose.

ART. VI. The contracting parties bind themselves to provide the one offended with the means of defense of which each may consider it can dispose, though the arrangements pointed out in the preceding article may not have taken place, provided that they consider the case urgent.

ART. VII. The casus faederis once declared, the offended party will not be able to make arrangements for peace, truce, or armistice, without the concurrence of the ally who may have taken part in the war.

ART. VIII. The contracting parties bind themselves in addition—

1st. To employ with preference, whenever it is possible, every conciliatory measure in order to avoid a rupture, or to put an end to the war, holding as the most effective the arbitration of a third power.

2d. Not to admit nor accept from any nation or government, protectorate or superiority that may injure and lessen their independence or sovereignty, and not to yield up nor transfer in favor of any nation or government any part whatsoever of their territories excepting in the cases of better demarkation of limits.

3d. Not to celebrate treaties of limits or of other territorial arrangements, without the other contracting party first knowing of same.

ART. IX. The stipulations of the present treaty do not extend to acts performed by political parties or the result of internal disturbances independent of the intervention of foreign governments; inasmuch as the principal object of the present treaty of alliance being the mutual guarantee of the sovereign rights of both nations, none of its clauses must be interpreted in opposition to its primary end.

ART. X. The contracting parties will, separately or collectively, when by a subsequent agreement they may consider it convenient, solicit the adhesion of another or other American states to the present treaty of defensive alliance.

ART. XI. The present treaty will be exchanged in Lima or in La Paz, as soon as it is legally perfected, and will remain in full force on the twentieth day after said exchange takes place. Its duration shall be for an indefinite period, each party reserving to itself the right of considering it as no longer existing when such shall be thought convenient.

In such a case the party desiring to annul the treaty must notify the other party of the same, and the treaty will no longer have effect on the elapse of forty months from such notification.

In testimony whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries signed it in duplicate and sealed it with their private seals.

Done in Lima on the sixth day of the month of February, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three.

JUAN DE LA CRUZ BENAVENTE.
J. DE LA RIVA AGUERO.

Here follows an additional article which provides that the treaty shall be kept secret as long as both parties by common accord shall not deem its publication necessary.

The treaty having received the approbation of the extraordinary assembly of Bolivia and been confirmed and ratified by the then President of that country, Señor Adolfo Ballivian, was formally exchanged between the two parties, represented by their respective ministers, in the city of La Paz, on the 16th day of June, 1873.

The Peruvian Congress gave its approbation to the treaty on the 22d of April of the same year, and notified Señor Pardo, at the time President of Peru, of same on the 30th of the same month and year, who thereupon ratified it.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch of the 19th ultimo (92), in which you send me a copy and a translation of the manifesto of the government of Chili, in justification of its war with Peru.

Whatever may have been the causes leading to this war, its commencement and continuance cannot but be regretted by the United States; and it is hardly necessary to add that the announcement of an early peace between the two governments, as also with Bolivia, would be news most welcome to the Government of the United States.

No. 100.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, June 5, 1879. (Received July 8.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of the President's message, delivered to Congress at its opening on the 1st instant.

The message treats almost exclusively of the international difficulties in which the country is involved, but I discover little in it worthy of note which has not been already adverted to in my dispatches. Its review of the origin of the war with Bolivia and with Peru is but a repetition of the arguments presented by the foreign office in documents with which you have been furnished.

The President speaks with a pardonable pride of the valor displayed by the Chilians in the combat of the 21st ultimo at Iquique between the Chilian wooden ships Esmeralda and Covodonga and the powerful Peruvian iron-clads Huascar and Independencia. In this battle the Esmeralda, with no possible hope of escape from destruction except through a surrender, continued for four long hours the desperate encounter, and then went down with her colors still at the mast. The Covodonga, more fortunate than her companion, managed to get out of the bay closely pursued by the Independencia, and being a ship of light draught, by running close to the shore she led the large iron-clad upon the rocks and witnessed its total destruction.

The enthusiasm of the people in consequence of this battle is beyond my power of description. Chili has had other heroes, but I doubt if any were ever so honored as is now the memory of Arturo Prat, the late commander of the Esmeralda.

At the time of this battle the Chilian fleet, except the two ships mentioned, was in the neighborhood of Callao, where it still remained at last advices received here. The Huascar in the mean time has continued in the vicinity of Iquique. The loss of the Independencia must prove to be a severe blow to the Peruvian cause, and I doubt if it can be repaired in the present condition of the Peruvian credit.

The two Chilian iron-clads are powerful vessels, and ought to be able to destroy the Huascar if they can succeed in bringing her under their guns.

The government is exceedingly reticent as to the future movements of the fleet, but I infer that the blockade of Iquique will soon be re-established, if it has not already been done.

You will have learned ere this, doubtless, through our legation in Lima, of the tender made by Great Britain to Peru and Chili of its good offices in the capacity of a mediator, and of the refusal thereof by Peru. The President states in his message, as you will observe, that the offer was accepted by his government. I cannot speak positively, but I am strongly impressed with the belief that the action of Great Britain was the result of a suggestion from their legation here, and that this suggestion was inspired by the Chili government.

I see by the newspapers that the Queen's ministers have assured the British Parliament, in response to questions propounded to them, that their government would take the proper steps to protect the interests of British citizens on this coast pending the war. This declaration caused considerable uneasiness here.

The large Peruvian debt is principally held in England, and it was feared by the friends of Chili that the contemplated action meant an interference in behalf of the holders to the extent of insisting that the niter and guano in the Tarapaca district should be applied to the liquidation of this debt, regardless of the result of the war in that section. The British minister called on me a few days since, and in the course of conversation, referring to this subject, said that the commander of the British naval forces in the Pacific had been instructed from home by telegraph to exercise due diligence in protecting British interests here, and that that was all that was meant by the assurance given by Her Majesty's ministers to Parliament. I do not doubt that such a dispatch was received, but you are better able to judge than I am whether the promises of the British cabinet contemplated this and no more, or not.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

P. S., JUNE 6.—A dispatch received this morning announces that the Chilian fleet had returned to Iquique. On the 31st ultimo the Huascar was at anchor in a small inlet a short distance this side of Antofagasta.

No. 101.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, June 11, 1879. (Received July 24.)

SIR: I inclose an English translation of what I find published in the newspapers purporting to be a decree of the Bolivian government concerning privateers, and beg leave to direct your especial attention to sections 5 and 6 thereof. I assume that the treaty of the United States with Bolivia, proclaimed January 8, 1863, is still in force. This treaty fully recognizes the doctrine of "free ships, free goods," and unequivocally defines which shall be regarded as contraband of war. On these points the decree is in direct conflict with the provisions of the treaty.

This decree has caused quite a flutter in diplomatic circles here. The British representative has been especially exercised concerning it. He informed me a few days since that he purposed telegraphing the substance of it to London, and I conclude that if his government shall agree with him privateers under the Bolivian flag will be treated by Great Britain as pirates.

Bolivia is not, I understand, a party to the treaty of Paris, and I know of no maritime power, except that of the United States, which has stipulated with her for the recognition of the principle that the flag protects the cargo.

I have taken the liberty of mentioning this matter to my friend Judge Pettis, in a personal note which I forward to him at La Paz today. The decree is dated prior to his arrival at La Paz, and it may have escaped his notice.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

[Inclosure.]

Translation of Bolivian decree concerning privateering.

Whereas, the Republic of Chili having declared itself in a state of warfare against Bolivia, and having taken armed and forcible possession of a portion of the coast, thereby breaking former well-defined treaties, it has become necessary to make use of all legitimate means of maritime warfare; and to such effect, having the right and believing in the necessity of sending forth vessels carrying letters of marque against any other vessels sailing under the enemy's flag, or against any Chilian merchandise, whether or not contraband of war which they may meet under a neutral flag, or for the taking or confiscation of the saltpeter works, guano deposits, or other products of the Bolivian coast which may be worked and exported, such acts being considered as robbery and piracy committed by the Chilian Government on the national property, I hereby issue the following decree for the guidance of all captains of privateers holding letters of marque from this republic in the present war against Chili.

1st. It is hereby authorized to any Bolivian privateer to chase and capture any Chilian vessel, whether she be a ship of war, privateer, a merchantman, whether she be at sea, or in the waters or harbors of the republic, waters or ports of the enemy.

2d. It is forbidden to privateers of the republic to make any attack or hostile act within the limits of any waters or ports belonging to neutral nations, it being understood that national waters are such as are within the reach of a cannon shot from low water mark.

3d. The privateers of the republic may take possession of the cargoes of Chilian merchant vessels, provided that such cargoes do not belong to any neutral, except in the case that the articles of which the same is composed may be contraband of war, destined to the enemy, the which will be always seizable. If one portion of the cargo is contraband of war and the other not, the first only shall be seizable.

4th. The privateers shall be authorized to stop or seize any neutral vessel which may carry official dispatches from or to the enemy, or troops for land or marine service, or supplies for the enemy.

5th. The privateers of the republic may seize any cargo being Chilian property, which they may find on board of any neutral vessel, whether or not the same may be contraband of war.

6th. Contraband of war is composed of the following matters: cannons, muskets, mortars, and all description of arms, and also all kinds of projectiles, gun carriages, fusees, fulminants, percussion caps, gunpowder, saltpetre, sulphur, articles of military clothing, harness, horse saddles and bridles, field tents, coal intended for the war ships of the enemy or their privateers, or other such, and all instruments and appliances destined for warfare, including food and victuals, gold and silver coined, and the correspondence addressed to the enemy; also military contingents or individuals belonging to the service of the enemy, are contraband of war.

7th. Also any vessel which cannot prove her neutrality may be seized, and in like manner those which may fail to produce the necessary documents, namely, the register, the bills of lading for the cargo, or other such documents as may vouch for the neutral ownership of the ship and cargo, and shall be deemed lawful prize unless there shall be proof that the said documents have been lost by inevitable accident. All the papers presented must be properly accredited in order to be accepted.

8th. Vessels which shall hoist any other flag than that of their true nationality, or which may throw their papers overboard into the sea, or which may offer resistance or attempt to escape from the privateer, shall be considered as enemies.

9th. The privateers of the republic are authorized to seize any vessels of whatever nationality which may carry on board produce exported from the ports of Mejillones or Autofagasta, and minerals from Caracoles, such as saltpeter, guano, silver or copper, unless they can prove that the same have been shipped through the intervention of the Bolivian authorities.

10th. The declaration of lawful prize shall be given by the courts established by the laws of the republic. If, on account of distance or other cause, the prize cannot be brought before such court, judgment shall be delivered by the diplomatic or consular agents of the republic in the ports of any friendly nation which may consent to the sale of such prize. If by chance the privateer, being embarrassed by extraordinary circumstances, may be unable to send the prize for proper judgment, she may act according to the circumstances, consulting her own safety, and keeping the necessary documents, which shall be presented in due course before the competent authorities.

11th. The privateers of the republic shall hold the right of visit which belongs to all belligerents, and in the exercise of the same comply with the following regulations: The privateer shall display the national flag, firing a blank shot towards the vessel which is to be visited, and which shall stop and hoist her ensign. If she do not do so the privateer will take the necessary means to oblige her to comply.

12th. If the merchant vessel stops and displays her ensign, the commander of the privateer shall send a visit on board, with all necessary precautions to examine the papers, and ascertain the nationality of the ship and cargo, and that she is engaged in legitimate trade.

13th. If on such visit it results that the vessel is seizable, the privateer shall take an inventory of the cargo, and all the effects which shall be found on board, and shall keep such documents as may prove the legality of the prize, to present the same before the respective tribunal (court).

14th. If it results from the visit, that the vessel is not seizable, nor may be detained, and that the cargo is altogether neutral property, and not contraband of war, a certificate shall be given to the captain of such vessel, in which these facts shall be set down, and the captain of the privateer shall keep a duplicate of the said document.

15th. Any vessels captured by Bolivian privateers, and also the cargo of the same, shall be free of all fiscal dues in the ports or harbors of the republic.

16th. The commander, officers, and crew of such privateers shall be under the protection of the government and law of the republic, and shall be considered Bolivian citizens, with all the rights and warranties thereunto annexed, even though they may be foreigners, from the time of the arming of the privateer, or that they may belong to her.

No. 107.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, July 24, 1879. (Received September 4.)

SIR: General Urbina, an ex-president of Ecuador, has been here a few weeks on a special mission from his government in the interest of peace, and left this morning for Lima. On his way down the coast General Urbina had an interview with Presidents Prado of Peru, and Daza of Bolivia, at Arica, which resulted in his being informed that Peru and Bolivia would consent to a cessation of hostilities and an arbitration of the matters in dispute upon the condition that the status quo ante bellum should be restored, and should continue pending the arbitration. In an informal interview which I had with the minister of foreign relations yesterday, he informed me that this condition would not be ageeed to by this government. Said he, and truly, I believe, "a ministry which would consent to this now could not stand a day."

He added, however, that Chili would consent to arbitrate, leaving the status quo as at present, and with an understanding that if the dominion of the country in dispute should be determined to belong rightfully to Bolivia, Chili would pay therefor the price which the arbitrator might fix. I judge that this is the proposition with which General Urbina goes to Lima to-day.

What the other governments will say to it now is more than I dare to venture an opinion upon.

Since the first interview of General Urbina with Presidents Prado and Daza, the allies have met with quite a severe loss in the destruction of the "Independencia," one of the Peruvian ironclads, and it is possible that their demands touching the status quo may be somewhat modified.

From the beginning I have believed that, if the Chili troops should succeed in capturing Iquique before an arrangement could be reached, it would be difficult to induce Chili to consent to withdraw therefrom until she should be indemnified for expenses in the war; and this opinion I still entertain. The proposition which I assume General Urbina carries, is, I doubt not, made in good faith, but it is made with the surroundings of to-day. There is here a strong party urging upon the government greater energy in the prosecution of the war, and one of the movements demanded is the capture of Iquique. President Pinto is exceedingly conservative and disposed to "make haste slowly," but public sentiment is pressing him forward, and has just made it necessary for him to change the commander-in-chief of the army. There is a very general demand for an aggressive campaign, and I think I venture little in predicting that before the receipt of this dispatch a part of the army now at Autofagasta will have effected a landing north of Iquique. I know that a forward movement has been determined upon, and the government anticipates a severe and bloody battle.

In the conversation referred to, the foreign minister volunteered some expressions touching the choice of an arbitrator, if that point shall be reached. While the Emperor of Brazil would be satisfactory to Chili, the government expects, I am led to believe, that the President of the United States will be requested to assist the belligerents in the arrangement of their difficulties.

Business in all its branches is at a standstill, and I can see nothing but universal bankruptcy in a long continuance of the war.

Some few months since the government, after failing in all efforts to secure a loan, issued six millions of paper notes. This is about exhausted, and I apprehend that ere long a new issue will be made.

The extraordinary expenses growing out of the war are not much short of two millions a month.

To provide the necessary funds for expenditures abroad, a decree has just been issued by the Executive requiring that all import duties shall be paid in silver or its equivalent in bills on Europe. This was made necessary by the great decline in the value of paper money exchange on London, which, rated at about 40*d.* for the dollar at the commencement of the war, has advanced to 28*d.*; or, putting it in another way, the American gold dollar, which was worth a few months since a dollar and a quarter in this money, now commands a dollar and three-quarters.

By the New York papers which came to hand by the last mail, I see that there has been some newspaper discussion growing out of a telegraphic dispatch from Berlin indicating an intention on the part of the German Government to interfere in this controversy.

These articles have been generally copied and commented upon by the Chili press, and I have yet to see an expression of dissent from the views entertained by our leading journals regarding the ability of America to arrange her difficulties without assistance from the other side of the Atlantic. Thé Ferro-canil, the leading newspaper of the country, has quite an able editorial on the subject this morning, in which it rejoices that the opportunity occurred for an expression of opinion upon the part of the American press regarding the "Monroe doctrine."

Public sentiment here now seems to be decidedly averse to European interference in any contingency. It may not be inappropriate for me to remark in this connection that several months since Baron von Gulich, the German minister here, informed me that he had just received a dispatch from his government directing him in the most positive manner to have nothing to say concerning matters which are purely American. I did not see the dispatch, nor am I sure now that he said that it in terms mentioned the "Monroe doctrine," but in our conversation I know he regarded it as conforming fully to this principle. The dispatch was received prior to the commencement of the present war, and was occasioned, I think, by some suggestions made by von Gulich concerning the Argentine dispute.

The British representative informs me that his colleague in Lima is especially anxious that Great Britain shall be permitted to mediate, and is suggesting that the good offices of the government shall be urged upon the belligerents.

In my dispatch, No. 100, speaking of the tender by Great Britain of its good offices I intimated a belief on my part that this action had been inspired by the government here. Further developments lead me to conclude that my suspicions were groundless.

SIR: I transmit herewith for your information copy of a dispatch from Mr. Ernest Dichman,* United States minister resident at Bogotá, reciting the causes which have prompted Colombia to proffer mediation for the settlement of the war between Chili and Peru and Bolivia, and announcing the appointment of Dr. Arosemena, the former secretary of foreign relations of Colombia, to visit Santiago, Lima, and La Paz on a special mission for the purpose of tendering such mediation.

Although abstaining from any direct indorsement of, or co-operation in, this apparrently laudable effort of Colombia in the interest of peace and reconciliation, this government, which feels lively solicitude for the prosperity and tranquility of the South American states, cannot but watch Dr. Arosemena's mission with especial attention.

In personal intercourse with the doctor, when he visits Santiago, you will probably find a fitting occasion to express to him the warm interest taken by the United States in this tentative step, and the friendly solicitude of this government as to the result.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

No. 110.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES.
Santiago, Chili, August 9, 1879 (September 16).

SIR: Since the arrival of Judge Pettis on this coast, in April last, we have exchanged many letters, some of a personal and others of a public character. Quite naturally the distressing war in which these countries are engaged has been a subject of comment. Realizing the sincere regret of the United States at this sad conflict we have endeavored, by careful inquiry into the real cause of the difficulty and a comparison of views thereon, to find some fair basis upon which an honorable and a lasting peace might possibly be consummated.

* For inclosure see inclosure to document No. 5.

It is unnecessary that I should recapitulate in detail our correspondence. Suffice it to say that all parties seemed willing to arbitrate, and all appeared desirous that some branch of the Government of the United States should officiate as arbitrator, but the difficulty which blocked the way was the status quo. Peru and Bolivia insisted that the status quo ante bellum should prevail, while Chili contended for it, as at present. Judge Pettis seemed to think, however, that this difficulty might be removed if a fair opportunity should be afforded the belligerents for a comparison of their views.

On the 29th ultimo I received a telegraphic message from Judge Pettis on board the steamer at Coquimbo, on his way to Valparaiso, notifying me of his coming to Chili. In an unofficial interview with Minister Hunaeus, in charge of the foreign office, I informed him of the receipt by me of this message, whereupon he requested me to urge Judge Pettis to continue his voyage to Santiago. On the arrival of Judge Pettis here I introduced him to Minister Hunaeus, and several extended conversations, all having in view a peaceable solution of the difficulties, have followed. In the outset Mr. Hunaeus was informed that Judge Pettis was here without instructions from his government. Mr. Hunaeus expressed a belief that his government would be glad to arbitrate the questions in dispute and would accept as arbitrator either the President of the United States, the Supreme Court of the United States, or the United States ministers at Santiago, Lima, and La Paz, but that it would not recede from its position regarding the status quo.

Many suggestions were made, when finally Judge Pettis expressed a belief that a status quo would be consented to by Peru and Bolivia which would provide for the immediate withdrawal of the Chilian forces from the territory north of the 23d parallel of south latitude, and for a concession to Bolivia of the coast as far south as, and including the port of, Majillones. Mr. Hunaeus seemed to think that this would be satisfactory to Chili if it were coupled with an understanding that if the arbitrator should determine that the territory between the 23d and 24th parallels was a part of Bolivia, Chili should pay Bolivia therefor a price to be by the arbitrator fixed. In support of this demand he urged the fact that the population and interests in the territory spoken of were almost exclusively Chilian. Judge Pettis replied that he did not know that there would be any serious objection to this, whereupon Mr. Hunaeus requested that an informal written memorandum should be made of the suggestions presented for submission to the President and cabinet. Judge Pettis desired an opportunity to confer with me privately on the subject, and in an hour I forwarded to Mr. Hunaeus the memorandum of Judge Pettis, written in pencil, under cover of a personal letter from me. I will forward hereafter a copy of the memorandum. I am not in possession of it now, but having stipulated for a return of the original when it was sent to the minister, it will, I presume, be returned to me in a day or two. The cabinet is in earnest consultation on this matter to-day, but I will not be able to give you the result thereof by this mail. I must close my dispatch in an hour. I may say, however, that notwithstanding the cheerful opinion expressed by Minister Hunaeus, my hopes of a peaceable solution of the dispute between Chili and Peru at present are not unbounded. There is a deep-seated feeling of enmity between the two countries, and I doubt if either is yet ready for peace. They are jealous of each other, and are engaged in a terrible struggle for supremacy in the Pacific. It is different with Bolivia. Chili would settle with Bolivia on the basis suggested in a moment. That such a settlement would, by removing the original cause of the war, tend to simplify the road to peace with Peru, is probably true.

It is proper that I should say that the presence of Judge Pettis here has, in my judgment, materially improved the prospect for an amicable arrangement of the difficulties.

The advance of the army predicted in my No. 107 has been, by reason of the capture by Peru of one of the Chilian transports, indefinitely postponed.

The blockade at Iquique has been raised. I am not advised whether the government intends to re-establish it or not.

No. 112.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, August 16, 1879. (Received September 17.)

SIR: In my dispatch No. 110 I spoke of the arrival here of Judge Pettis and of the informal submission to the minister of foreign relations of his memorandum regarding peace. I now have the honor to inclose a copy of the memorandum, together with an English translation of the response sent me by Minister Hunaeus. It will be observed that they are both without date and signature. The memorandum of Judge Pettis was inclosed to the minister in a personal letter from me, a copy of which I forward, as I do also a copy of the personal letter to me from Minister Hunaeus accompanying the response.

It will be seen that the fears expressed in my No. 110 regarding the prospect for an immediate peace with Peru were well founded, as was also my belief that Chili would consent to submit to arbitration its questions with Bolivia on the basis proposed in the memorandum. In my judgment the President would gladly conclude a peace with Peru on the terms suggested, if he could. But he is powerless in that direction. The war spirit is in the ascendency, and it is likely so to remain until a trial of strength has been had.

President-making is now the order of the day, and I very much fear that this spirit will soon develop into one of President-breaking. The cabinet is being repeatedly called before Congress for explanations concerning the conduct of the war, and it is now understood that there is soon to be another change in the ministry. The mass of the people, urged on by the politicians, clamor for more activity, while the administration hesitates. The government doubtless fears that a serious reverse would, in the present condition, produce a revolution. I seriously fear that Chili is being threatened by an enemy far more dangerous than the armies of Peru and Bolivia. Her internal political condition is that of confusion, and as each day succeeds the other it becomes more so.

A rumor obtained currency a few days since that the United States Government had determined upon intervention in the controversy, and the newspapers of the clerical party, accepting the rumor as well founded, proceeded to inform the President as to his duties in the premises. Circumstances, among which I may mention the arrival of Mr. Fisher, of Boston, with dispatches for the legation, and the visit of Mr. Pettis, conspired to give credence to the report. It was freely stated that Mr. Fisher had announced on the steamer that he was the bearer of important dispatches to this legation concerning the war, and an article was copied by the press from a Lima paper, announcing the arrival there of Mr. Fisher with important dispatches from the government at Washington for our legations at Lima and Santiago. The excited condition of public opinion gave to these incidents an important coloring and afforded the sensational newspaper man a fair field for operations. Of course the rumor was of short duration, but the discussion which it produced developed the existence of a strong public sentiment in opposition to dictation from without. I may have more to say hereafter regarding the source of this rumor.

I have, &c.,

Memorandum of basis for peace.

Whereas, it has been suggested through a friendly medium that even now the pathway to an early, honorable, and profitable peace leads in the direction of arbitration at the hands of some known and acknowledged power alike friendly to Peru, Bolivia, and Chili;

And desiring in the spirit of conciliation and compromise, and in the interest of peace and humanity, to transfer and elevate the contest of principle from the theater of force to that of reason and conscience:

It is agreed that all differences and all matters in dispute between Peru and Bolivia upon one side, and Chili upon the other side, of whatever character, class, kind, description, or extent, be submitted to —— ——, who shall be requested to meet upon the —— day of September, 1879, for the purpose of receiving and considering the statements of the proper representatives of each of the three republics in support of their respective views and claims; and after such presentation, hearing, and consideration, to determine and decide upon all matters concerning which Peru, Bolivia and Chili are now at variance, and the same being reduced to writing and signed by a majority of the arbitrators, to be final, binding, and conclusive upon the said republics and the governments thereof; and in the event that the arbitrators should be of opinion that Bolivia is justly and equitably entitled to any territory south of the twenty-third parallel south latitude, it is understood that the arbitrators, or a majority of them, shall ascertain and fix the amount that Chili shall pay to Bolivia and the manner of payment for such territory, provided the respective legally-constituted representatives before the arbitrators cannot agree upon such amount as compensation therefor, and the divisory line between Chili and Bolivia shall thereupon be by such arbitrators established upon the said parallel 23d south latitude. Therefore,

It is stipulated:

That from this —— day of August, 1879, hostilities of every character shall cease, and neither party augment its forces on land or sea; that Chili at once disoccupy all territory south of the 23d degree of south latitude, withdrawing all her forces by land and sea south of said 23d degree, leaving clear to Bolivia as well the coast south of said degree ten minutes below said 23d parallel, but in all other respects the status quo to remain as at present.

This instrument to have no force or validity until signed by the proper authorities of the three republics.

Response sent by Mr. Hunaeus.

1. The government has no objection to submit the questions between it and Bolivia to the arbitration of the United States upon the terms proposed, inasmuch as such terms cover the purpose of the war and express the spirit by which Chili has been governed in the question of boundaries with Bolivia, as also because it believes that such agreement would be cheerfully accepted by Congress, and meet the approval of the country.

2. With regard to the questions with Peru, although the conditions proposed meet, to a great extent, the purpose of the war, the disloyal conduct of Peru or its government in preparing for war while at the same time it was outwardly manifesting towards Chili pacific and friendly feelings; in offering herself as a mediator, while at the same time she was bound by a secret treaty of alliance with Bolivia, which, for the time being, was our enemy, affords this country and its government just grounds for not accepting a solution of our existing difficulties by means of an arbitration, and for demanding that in future Peru shall enter into no treaties such as the one of February of 1873, and which she kept secret for six years, doubtless waiting her opportunity to take the aggressive when the advantage might be on her side under a treaty which did not render war upon her side obligatory, unless we desire to expose ourselves to the serious danger of a standing menace against peaceful relations abroad, and to be always ready to resist.

Such are the grave considerations which deter the government from accepting the arbitration upon the terms proposed, and make it incumbent on it, before accepting them, of informing itself of the views of Congress with regard to the proposed conditions, and also to ascertain how far they would meet the exigencies of the country.

For, although the government recognizes it as a duty, suggested as well by reason as by the practice of all civilized nations, to put an end to war by pacific means, it also feels it to be a duty to consider well whether such pacific solution of the difficulties would really bring a lasting peace to Chili and shield her from the machinations of which she has been the object and by which she has been unwittingly dragged into a war for which she was not prepared.

Mr. Osborn to Mr. Christiancy.

Private.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, October 17, 1879.

SIR: I have your communication of the 24th ultimo concerning the unfortunate war in which these republics are engaged, and suggesting propositions looking to peace, and have given it a very careful consideration.

You are right in concluding that, personally, I would be glad to see this conflict at an end. I see no good in it, but, on the contrary, much injury to all the governments concerned, and such influence as I may have had here with this government has been on all proper occasions thrown into the scale in behalf of peace. I have been careful, however, to avoid making myself offensive by tendering advice where it did not seem to be welcome. I have endeavored to keep in mind the fact that the conflict is one in which we are quite remotely, if at all, concerned, and the policy which has governde the United States would scarcely warrant her agents in meddling obtrusively in it.

As to mediation by the United States, my own judgment is against any movement in that direction, as the matter now stands, except upon a positive assurance that the good offices of our government would not only be accepted, but that they are desired.

Contingencies might arise in the future which would justify our government, perhaps, in urging its good offices, but I see nothing in the present aspect to warrant any such action.

If it should hereafter appear manifest that some of the European powers were on the eve of armed intervention, the aspect would doubtless be changed.

It is a mistake to suppose that this government is anxious to end the war and only seeks a way to let herself down easily. The war spirit here is quite as strong now as it has been at any time, and there seems to be the most perfect confidence in Chili's ability to conquer its enemies. Such being the case, it is useless to talk to them of mediation. They regard themselves as capable of settling their affairs without the assistance of a mediator. Mr. Arosemena, of the Colombian Government, whom you met in Lima, assured me last evening that he should leave in a few days without formally tendering the good offices of his government, as he has been privately made to understand that such good offices are not desired.

I still regard it as probable that in the end some of the questions in dispute will have to be submitted to arbitration, but the manner in which they are to be submitted will depend much upon the result of the war. When that point shall be reached I feel confident Chili will be content with the United States as arbitrator. I cannot, however, concur in your suggestion that the other governments mentioned should be associated with ours. I see many objections to it, and you will, on reflection, I think, conclude that it would be impracticable.

Regarding your suggestion as to a division of the territory between the twenty-third and twenty-fourth parallels, I am confident that if Peru and Bolivia were to send here a direct proposition to that end it would not be accepted. Nothing short of utter defeat in the war will induce Chili to give up any considerable part of the territory south of the twenty-third parallel. She is willing, I judge, to arbitrate it, but only on condition that if the title should be determined to be in Bolivia, Chili should retain it by paying an equivalent therefor. I suppose that Judge Pettis has furnished you with a copy of the memorandum which was sent me by the minister of foreign relations. The memorandum was quite as moderate as public sentiment here would justify, and now that the depression which then prevailed over the loss of the "Rimae" has given way to universal joy and renewed confidence because of the capture of the "Huascar," you can judge how utterly useless it would be to suggest to them a division of the territory referred to.

I have written you quite hurriedly in my anxiety to get my letter into the mail which leaves to-day, but have endeavored to speak plainly, and trust I have made myself understood. I am as anxious for peace as any one can be, and will go as far in the effort to bring it about as my sense of propriety will permit. My chief regret is that I am unable to see how, in the present condition of affairs, I can be of any service in that direction. I trust, however, that our correspondence shall be continued, and if events shall place it in our power hereafter to aid in extricating these republics from their difficulties, I feel confident that we will both be found equal to the occasion.

I will write you further on the subject as circumstances may seem to require.

I have the honor to subscribe myself, truly your friend,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

No. 68.

Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts.

No. 120.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, October 28, 1879. (Received December 18.)

SIR: Referring to your instruction, No. 70, regarding the mission of Dr. Arosemena, special ambassador of the United States of Colombia to the belligerents in the existing war in this section, I have the honor to inform you that I have discharged, to the best of my ability, the duty therein imposed upon me. Soon after the arrival of Dr. A. at this capital we were made acquainted with each other, and circumstances have since brought us together quite frequently. On more than one occasion before the arrival of your instruction he had mentioned to me the purposes of his mission, and had intimated a hope that possibly the United States Government might join the United States of Colombia in its efforts for peace. I said to him in substance that I was without instructions touching the matter suggested by him, but that, while I knew that the United States Government felt a deep concern for the welfare of all the American republics, and that it regretted very much the present conflict and would rejoice at its termination, still I did not believe that it would, in the absence of knowledge that its good offices were desired by all the belligerents, or until it should have some good reason for believing that an effort by it in behalf of peace would be crowned with success, propose to meddle in the controversy in any manner.

Subsequently, when your instruction came to hand, I was more than gratified to observe that my expressions were in harmony with the views of the State Department in so far as the Department had seen fit to make them known. Dr. Arosemena is not hopeful of accomplishing anything now, and will leave here in a few days for Lima without formally tendering the good offices of his government. He has private assurances that the services of his government are not desired by Chili at present.

Upon this subject of mediation by the United States, I had occasion to write at some length a few days since to my colleague Judge Pettis in answer to some letters from him. In the course of my communication I took occasion to say that I was "fully convinced that our diplomatic agents should be careful to avoid any action which could possibly be tortured into an effort to urge the mediation of our government upon the belligerents." "This rule," I continued, "I have adopted for myself, and it shall be adhered to unless a change of circumstances shall render another course necessary or until advised otherwise by the government at home." I informed him that Chili seemed perfectly confident of its ability to conquer its enemies, and that I had no reason to believe that it desired the good offices of our government at present.

This country was never more confident of success in the war, apparently, than it is now. The government, as now organized, with Señor Santa Maria at the head of the cabinet, represents fully the aggressive war spirit of the country. The government has the confidence of the people in so far as the conduct of the war is concerned, and all are sanguine regarding the result. And I judge, from the tone of the Peruvian press, that the allies are quite as confident that they will ultimately triumph. While matters continue in this condition I am at a loss to understand how our government can possibly make itself useful in the direction of peace. I am sure that no proposition which would admit of the reoccupation by Bolivia of the territory between the 23d and 24th parallels, or any considerable part thereof, would be accepted by Chili, no matter where the proposition should come from. It will also be remembered that in the unofficial "memorandum" sent to me by Mr. Hunaeus, late minister of foreign affairs, a copy of which was inclosed in my No. 112, it is claimed that, as between Peru and Chili, the latter must have some guarantee that its peace shall not be disturbed in the future before there can be a cessation of hostilities. At the time of the delivery of the memorandum I asked Mr. Hunaeus if he was prepared to say what guarantee would be required, but he did not answer. The principal cause for the declaration of war against Peru was the secret treaty between Peru and Bolivia. Chili understands this compact to have originated in Peru's hostility to her, and I am led to infer that the "security for the future" mentioned contemplated an abrogation of the treaty and an assurance that a like one would not be entered into hereafter. If Chili should, however, get possession of the Tarapaca district, I apprehend that it would be interpreted to mean much more.

There can be no peace until at least one of the parties to the conflict shall show a disposition to abate some of its pretensions. I am confident that Chili is not so disposed now. If the allies are, I do not know it. The fact is, the belligerents have not sufficiently felt the horrors of war to incline them in the direction of peace. Up to this time the conflict has been confined to the sea. There has been no engagement worthy the name of battle by the army, and there must be, in my judgment, at least one serious, bloody engagement by the land forces ere they will be found ready to listen to friendly suggestions from outsiders.

The Chilian land forces now number about twenty-five thousand men. They have been supplied with new arms of the most approved patterns, purchased in Europe. The men are regarded as good soldiers, and there will be much disappointment here if they fail to render a good account of themselves in the engagements which must, sooner or later, take place.

The capture of the famous turreted monitor "Huascar" by the Chilian navy has produced here the most unbounded enthusiasm. This vessel is now in the Valparaiso harbor undergoing repairs. This naval victory leaves Chili undisputed master of the sea. It remains to be seen whether she is to be as fortunate on land. Her position is undoubtedly much stronger than it was prior to this naval engagement.

The government is anxiously watching the course of events in the Argentine Republic. There is much hostility there to Chili, and it is feared that that country may yet drift into an alliance with Peru and Bolivia.

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, December 15, 1879.

Mr. SECRETARY: I have the honor to address your excellency for the purpose of calling your attention to the case of a torpedo-boat, which it is proposed to ship from Bristol, R. I., so that it may be used against Chili in its present war with Bolivia and Peru.

This legation has received reliable private information confirming the intelligence published on the 12th instant in the Evening Telegram (a slip containing the intelligence in question will be found on the margin of my letter), to the effect that this terrible agent of destruction has been in process of construction for some time, in pursuance of an order given by Peruvian commissioners or agents with the object above stated.

Without considering the question whether in legitimate warfare the use of an instrument of hostility would be admissible which uselessly endangers and sacrifices many lives, it may be asserted that a torpedo-boat comes under the head of armed vessels, as does any other of larger dimensions belonging to a navy, the fitting out of which violates the neutrality of the country in which it takes place. These boats are managed and operated by their own independent force, or as auxiliaries of other vessels forming part of a squadron. In such capacity they go to form, in my judgment, armed expeditions, whose preparation is in evident violation of the laws of the country in which it occurs, and from which they are conveyed for the purpose of carrying on hostilities against another with which that one is at perfect peace. I do not consider that this torpedo-boat is included in the right which is allowed to belligerents to purchase arms or other articles contraband of war in a neutral country.

Consequently, and in virtue of the stipulations of the treaty of 1832 between this country and Chili, which is still in full force as regards peace and sincere friendship, and of the neutrality law, I would request your excellency to adopt suitable measures to prevent the said torpedo-boat from leaving any port of these United States, it being evidently intended for hostile use against Chili.

I avail myself of this occasion to repeat to your excellency the assurances of the very high consideration with which I am,

Your excellency's, &c.,

SIR: I have received a dispatch from the minister of the United States at Lima, with a copy of a letter from the consul at Lambayeque, Mr.

Montjoy, from which it appears that certain property of the American Oil Company, at Talara, which is described as "exclusively American property," and other like effects at the Lobos Islands, have been destroyed by the fleet of Chili; also that "a launch belonging to an American steam tug-boat was captured and taken away by the Chilian vessels, although made fast to the steamer and flying the American ensign."

It is understood that these facts are already within your cognizance. You will bring these acts to the early attention of the Chilian Government, and so represent the matter as may distinctly show, without however any appearance of captious opposition to the legitimate processes and needs of war, that the United States expect the equitable rights of their citizens under treaty and the laws of nations to be respected to the full, as befits the relations between two such friendly powers.

Santiago, Chili, February 25, 1880. (Received April 10.)

SIR: Under date of the 3d instant, the minister of war and marine issued an order to the chief officer of the Chili squadron regarding the course to be pursued in the further prosecution of the war, an extract from which, with a translation in English, I herewith inclose. The remainder of the order I have not deemed it necessary to forward, as it treats only of the magnanimity of Chili heretofore in dealing with the enemy, and is of no consequence.

It will be seen that this government proposes to adopt more vigorous measures than it has heretofore had recourse to in the prosecution of the war, and that to that end it directs the bombardment and destruction of all towns on the Peruvian coast which have prepared cannons for defense, and the destruction of all moles and other property in the various ports of the enemy used in the loading and discharging of cargo.

To say nothing of the misery and suffering which would necessarily ensue from a rigid execution of this instruction, it occurred to me that neutral rights and interests were liable to become very seriously jeopardized by it, and I therefore suggested to my colleagues of the diplomatic corps that it might be well to consider the propriety of addressing the Chilian Government on the subject. The result was a meeting of the corps, and, after a full discussion, an understanding that each representative should address the Chilian Government concerning the interpretation to be placed on the order in question. A copy of my note is herewith inclosed.

You will observe that I have urged that bombardment should only be resorted to as against towns which possess some importance in a military sense, and that even then sufficient notice should be given to enable non-combatants and neutrals to remove themselves and their property from danger. You will also have observed that I have protested against the right of Chili to destroy the moles and other means of loading and discharging cargo on the enemy's coast except where such destruction appears to be necessary in view of the military situation.

An important fact in connection with this subject is that a very large proportion of the population, and even a larger proportion of the property, in the various towns on this coast, whether in Chili or Peru, is foreign; and it is upon these people and upon these interests that the severity of this measure must, in a great degree, fall, if its execution is insisted upon. Many of these people are Americans. If the government should listen to my suggestions, much ruin would be avoided, and I am not without hope of such a result.

My note is now under consideration at the foreign office, as are also those of the other ministers, and I anticipate a reply soon.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 131.—Translation.]

Extract from order of minister of war and marine, February 3, 1880.

So, then, now that it is manifest that the enemy did not duly appreciate the humanity of our conduct, I believe that our hostilities must be conducted with greater severity. In virtue of this, all towns on the coast that are protected by cannons should be bombarded and destroyed; all railroads that are serving the enemy in the transportation of troops and elements of war should be fired upon; and all moles and boats employed in the ports of the enemy in loading or discharging cargo should be destroyed. In a word, our standard of conduct hereafter must be to do the enemy all possible injury, without neglecting anything that is authorized by the law of nations, until it is made to feel the necessity of obtaining peace. Any other course will result in prolonging the war without limit, and will greatly increase the sacrifices which the country is making to sustain it.

If heretofore it was believed that great severity in conducting our hostilities was, until a certain point, unnecessary, now we have sufficient data to believe that we shall not oblige Peru to lay down her arms except by reducing her to absolute want, and making her feel, in the property and interests of her inhabitants, all the burden of the war.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, February 21, 1880.

SIR: I find published in the Diario Oficial an order from the minister of war and marine of your excellency's government issued on the 3d instant to the commander-in-chief of the Chilian squadron, regarding the course to be pursued in the prosecution of the present war, touching the purport of which I deem it my duty to address your excellency.

The very cordial relations which exist between our respective governments encourage me to believe that the motives which impel me cannot be misconstrued, and that my suggestions will be received by your excellency as they are offered, in a spirit of the utmost sincerity and friendship.

I understand the order mentioned to direct the bombardment and destruction of all Peruvian towns which have made preparations for defense, and the destruction of all launches and other property, whether public or private, used for loading and discharging cargo in the various ports of the enemy. The instruction to bombard is, I understand, unrestricted, except as stated above. The importance of the place in a military point of view is not to be taken into consideration. It is enough to know that it has in place some cannons for defense. Nor is there any requirement for the notice now so generally recognized as necessary by the civilized governments in such cases.

The right of bombardment is a cruel one in any aspect, and the public opinion of the world very justly demands that it should be sparingly exercised, and when exercised that the horrors attending it should be mitigated in the greatest degree possible. It is a relic of the barbarism of the dark ages, against which civilization has for several centuries steadily and unceasingly directed its fire, and while the progress which has been made may not be as great as good men everywhere could wish for still much has been accomplished for humanity. The limits which circumscribed its exercise in the ages which are past have been, through the expansion of an enlightened public sentiment, gradually reduced, until, I respectfully submit to your excellency, the law of nations recognizes it only as pertaining to ports which possess some importance, strategic or otherwise, in a military sense, and that even then sufficient notice of the proposed bombardment should be given to enable non-combatants and neutrals to remove themselves and their property from danger. And so, too, regarding the destruction of the launches and moles. It will hardly be seriously contended that such destruction could be justified except when the necessities of the military situation might seem to require it.

These observations are of a general character, but it is in its bearing upon the interests and rights of neutrals that I desire more especially to direct your excellency's attention to the order in question. These rights are liable to be seriously compromised by a rigid execution of the order, if I correctly understand its purport. The destruction of all the moles and launches on the Peruvian coast, for instance, involves the destruction of all neutral commerce with that country without the necessity of a blockade. I trust to be informed that my interpretation of the order in this respect is a mistaken one.

Without, however, particularizing further, I feel that my duty has been performed in bringing the matter to the consideration of your excellency, and I shall rest in the hope that whatever may appear to be wrong in the order referred to, in so far at least as it affects the right of neutrals, will be duly righted.

With sentiments of the highest consideration, I have, &c.,

SIR: The minister of foreign relations has addressed me a note soliciting the friendly aid of our legations at Santiago and La Paz in securing an exchange with Boliva of prisoners of war, in answer to which I have assured him that I would very cheerfully render his government all the aid in my power, and that I would communicate at as early a day as possible with my colleague in La Paz on the subject. I further informed the minister that Judge Pettis had been absent from his post, and that I was uninformed touching the time fixed for his return, but that I judged that the legation had been left in the hands of some person who would give due consideration to my communication if Judge P. should not be there to receive it.

I have this day written to the legation in La Paz, as promised in my note.

No. 133.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, March 5, 1880. (Received April 10.)

SIR: In several of my dispatches upon the subject of the existing war in this section I have expressed the conviction that if Chili should succeed in placing her army in possession of the rich niter and guano deposits of the Tarapacá district she would insist upon holding them, regardless of any declaration which she may have made touching the purposes of the war. Prior to her occupation of this district her authorized officials here strenuously insisted that great injustice was done her if it was believed that her purpose was one of conquest. In a conversation with Judge Pettis and myself, in August last, Mr. Hunaeus, the acting minister of foreign relations, expressed himself quite emphatically on the subject, asserting that there was no responsible public opinion in Chili in favor of the conquest of a part of Peru, and he appealed to me to bear him out in this statement. I do not doubt that Mr. H. was sincere; nevertheless it was apparent to me then, as it had been before and has been since, that if Chili should succeed in conquering the district of Tarapacá she would eventually annex it to her dominion.

The drift of public opinion has constantly been in the direction indicated, and now I doubt if any responsible citizen would have the temerity to suggest a contrary course. There has been, and is now, doubtless, a difference of opinion as to the manner in which the annexation should take place, but that Tarapacá is to be annexed, now that it is in the possession of the Chilian army, is an acknowledged fact which no one presumes to question. A proposition for peace which should exclude the possibility of such a consummation would not, in my opinion, be seriously considered by this government. Just prior to the adjournment of the late session of Congress a resolution proposing an immediate annexation was offered by a very prominent and influential member, but the minister of the interior urged that its adoption then would be inopportune, and at his request it was laid aside. I judge that the government would prefer to accept Tarapacá as a reimbursement for expenses in the war to any other form of annexation.

The management of the niter and guano interests in the conquered territory is presenting some difficult questions to the Chilian Government. By military order an export duty upon niter of one dollar and fifty cents per hundred pounds was established some three months since, but from various causes comparatively little has been shipped, and the revenue derived therefrom is quite small. Of the principal causes for the meager shipment may be mentioned the excessive duty and the fear upon the part of the individual owners of a confiscation of their interests if Peru should recover her lost possessions. The government is sadly in need of money, and is making every effort to bring about a shipment of the niter, but I incline to the belief that before much is accomplished in that direction a reduction of the duty will be found necessary.

The average value of niter in the European markets during the year 1878 was thirteen shillings per hundred pounds. At this figure it would hardly pay to engage in its production, with the export duty as fixed. In 1878 the amount exported from the Pacific coast was 313,000 tons. Assuming this to be an average year, it will be seen that upwards of seven millions of dollars per annum could be realized from this source with the duty at one dollar per hundred pounds.

I inclose a military order recently issued regarding the exportation of guano from the districts mentioned. These guano deposits are, it is understood, all mortgaged to secure the payment of the Peruvian foreign debt. An agent of a part of the Peruvian bondholders has been here for about five months endeavoring to secure an arrangement with the government by which the guano in question should be appropriated to the payment of the debt for which it was mortgaged, and the inclosed order is the result. In diplomatic circles here this action of the Chilian Government in permitting the foreign bondholders of Peru to pay themselves from the conquered territory is very highly spoken of.

It occurs to me that there may be some question touching the ownership of guano shipped under this order in the absence of further action by the Chilian Government.

I have, &c.,

Military order touching exports of guano from the occupied district of Peru.

JOSÉ A. VILLAGRAN, GENERAL IN-CHIEF OF THE ARMY OF RESERVE, &C.

The province of Tarapacá being occupied by the Chilian army, and in virtue of the powers conferred upon me by the Supreme Government, I decree:

That as the foreign holders of Peruvian bonds have solicited due permission from the Supreme Government to ship guano from the Peruvian deposits occupied by the arms of the republic, and there being no impediment to granting this permission, I decree:

ARTICLE 1. The foreign holders of Peruvian bonds are hereby allowed to extract guano from the Peruvian deposits occupied by the arms of the republic, under the following conditions:

1st. The bondholders shall name a committee or responsible business house to direct the operations;

2d. The Chilian Government reserves the power of intervention and of naming one or more functionaries to inspect, and if it be thought opportune, to direct the operations of extraction and shipment.

3d. The functionaries referred to in the foregoing paragraph shall dispatch the loaded ships to Valparaiso, whence they cannot sail to a foreign port until the sum of 30*s*. per ton of guano on board has been paid into the custom-house.

4th. This payment shall be made in bills of exchange upon London, in favor of the Chilian Government and to its satisfaction; this payment shall be lowered to 20*s*. per ton, in case that the price of guano falls below £6 per ton.

ART. 2. The papers of the ships sent off shall be made out to the order of the firm of Messrs. Baring Bros. & Co., or to some other equally respectable firm, in case consignation is not arranged with them.

Until a contract of consignation be signed, the ships' papers shall be made out in favor of the Chilian minister and plenipotentiary in Europe, and of James Croyle, esq., and Sir Charles Russell.

ART. 3. The consignee or consignees of the guano shall proceed to sell the cargoes, and, after deducting the sums expended, be it in the obtaining of this permission, be it in payment of the debts referred to in article 1, or be it to repay the shipping expenses, or in other similar objects, the remainder shall be divided between the foreign holders of Peruvian bonds, in whose favor the guano deposits have been mortgaged.

PROVISIONAL ARTICLE. Until the committee, mentioned in article 1, be named, Mr. John Proctor is authorized to arrange provisionally the mode of shipment, he being empowered to use for that purpose the material in possession of the government.

Let this be published, noted, and communicated.

No. 85.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 9, 1880.

SIR: The indications which reach this government from trustworthy sources, and among others from the legation at Lima, point to uneasiness on the part of the governments of Great Britain, France, and Germany, with respect to the duration and tendency of the existing South American war, and to the exertion of considerable pressure by them on the contestants, and especially on Peru, to induce a speedy termination of the struggle.

It is not thought that this movement looks to a removal of the projected intervention in settlement of the quarrel, which was in contemplation last year. It is rather more probable that the almost continuous successes of Chili hitherto, and the distracted internal condition of her principal opponent, may induce the European powers to use effective arguments to bring about a practical surrender on the part of Peru and Bolivia. On the other hand, it is possible that the pressure in favor of a settlement, of mutual advantage to the commerce of those countries with the three States at war, may be exerted at Santiago as well as at Lima and La Paz, and that such arguments may be supported by suggestion of intervention if not accepted.

If, however, any renewal of the idea of European joint intervention should take shape, it is conceived that its application would encounter resistance on the part of all three of the belligerent governments, and that in such a contingency they would more naturally turn to the United States for counsel and arbitration.

Chili, as well as Peru and Bolivia, is already aware of the disposition of this government with regard to mediation, and its willingness to act as peacemaker if assured by all the parties to the struggle that its peaceable intervention would be acceptable and unhampered by any conditions in disparagement of belligerent rights. It is, therefore, at the present time unnecessary to again instruct you on this point, further than to observe that should the pressure of foreign governments upon the combatants tend to assume a coercive character, your attitude should be such as to facilitate a joint and friendly resort to the good offices of the United States. In such an event, requiring prompt action, perhaps, before the instructions of this government could be asked and received, the Department would place much reliance upon your own good judgment.

An instruction identical with the present is sent by to-day's mail to Mr. Christiancy, at Lima, and Mr. Pettis, at La Paz, with whom you are counseled to continue the friendly conferences and consultations by letter which have heretofore been so beneficial to the conduct of the intimately related affairs of your respective legations.

LEGATION OF CHILI IN THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, April 24, 1880. (Received April 26.)

SIR: In the conference which I yesterday had the honor to have with your excellency, in relation to the war in which my country is involved with Peru and Bolivia, you informed me that you had received official advices from the former of those republics, to which, in view of their gravity, you deemed it indispensable to call my attention.

By those advices your excellency was informed that the corvette Chacabuco and the transport Loa had appeared, on the 10th of March last, off the island of Lobos de Afuera, and that after notifying the governor of the island of the object of their visit, they had proceeded to burn and destroy the wharf, platforms, cars, boats, and other appurtenances of the port, and to take on board everything movable that they could find on the island, including mules, horses, cattle, and provisions, belonging both to the company which is engaged in taking guano there, and to the store of the parties who supply it with provisions (over which the flag of the English consul was floating), without leaving anything on the island for the inhabitants to eat, save a quantity of rice and jerked beef sufficient to last them for eight days; that the commander of the Chilian vessels had declared, on performing these acts, that he had positive orders to take whatever he could find, to await re-enforcements, and then to destroy all the ports of Peru between Paita and Callao. Finally, that without any provocation on the part of the inhabitants, and without any warning to them, shots had been fired at their dwellings.

Your excellency further informed me that you had also received official advices that instructions had recently been issued by the ministry of war and marine to the Chilian squadron in the sense stated by the aforesaid commander, and that you were likewise informed that, as regarded those orders, representations had been addressed to the Government of Chili by the diplomatic ministers accredited to it, in behalf of neutral interests in Peru and Bolivia; your excellency observing that, in view of this intelligence, and since it was proposed to destroy property in those ports, ninety per cent. of which was understood to belong to foreigners, a large proportion belonging to North American citizens was thereby endangered, for which reason you requested me to give you some satisfactory explanation concerning the nature of these proceedings, and the reasons which had led to the adoption of such extreme war measures, since such acts of hostility affected not only the combatants and other inhabitants, but also neutrals, whose property and commerce thereby received injuries for which it was the duty of their respective governments to demand reparation, in the interest of their citizens. Your excellency remarked that you referred to this state of things in order that I might call the attention of my government to it, as likewise to the view which was taken of its action, reminding me that during the course of this war the government of this country had uniformly maintained strict neutrality, notwithstanding the fact that it had been urged, in various quarters, to assume a different attitude.

To all the above statements made by your excellency in the aforesaid conference, I had the honor to reply that I had no knowledge of the facts alleged, but that I would refer them to my government, together with your excellency's observations, feeling confident that it would hasten to rectify the inaccuracy with which I thought that those facts had reached your excellency, and to manifest the legitimacy with which hostilities are adopted, even to a rigorous degree, under the present circumstances of the war, for the purpose of completely subduing the enemy.

I nevertheless think it proper for me, in the mean time, to give you an idea of the line of conduct that has been followed in this war, in which Chili was forced to engage in defense of her rights.

In the early part of the war, Chili carried on hostilities against the two allied republics with extreme mildness, respecting the property of her enemies even to excess. She made war, arms against arms, without the rigor which is authorized by a state of war, or by the necessity of putting a speedy end to a deplorable and ruinous struggle, in order to re-establish peace on a solid and permanent basis. The prevalence of a state of war allowed her, however, within the sphere recognized by civilized nations, to disable and destroy her armed enemies, and whoever in any way, even incidentally, took part in warlike operations against her; to render useless or destroy any property belonging to her enemies, and any means of communication and traffic; to deprive the enemy of all resources, provisions, and means of subsistence, and, if military necessity required it, to extend her action with the same legitimacy to all inhabitants and property in the hostile country, so as to render it unable to continue hostilities.

A precedent for this course is found in the war in this country in 1861–'65, and in the recent European wars.

Chili did not do so. She now, however, finds herself obliged to comply with the demands of a military necessity, although she is careful not to disregard the dictates of humanity and the precepts of international law; she is obliged to do so by the conduct of her enemies, who, as is shown by Peruvian official documents, conduct hostilities on land by illicit means, and carry on an irregular warfare with armed prowlers. Nothing, therefore, remains for my government but to adopt severe repressive measures against hostilities of that character, in order not to prolong the contest indefinitely, at an immense sacrifice of blood and treasure, and to the great detriment of even foreign commerce. Under these circumstances, it is not strange if Chili has ordered the bombardment of armed ports whence resources are procured for the enemy, or that she should cripple the activity of railways and other means of communication which enable him to transport troops and munitions of war; nor is it strange that she should order the destruction of wharves, apparatus, and material intended to facilitate the loading and unloading of vessels, and to serve to maintain establishments like that of the island of Lobos, from the working of which the government of Peru derives means to continue the war. Those establishments, moreover, in several of the ports, even if controlled by neutrals residing there or associated with enemies, partake of the same hostile character.

If, through hostilities which are performed through military necessity, the property or interests of foreigners residing in the enemy's country are injured, it is an evil similar to many others which emanate from the exceptional condition of a state of war. My government, however, has endeavored to avoid, as far as possible, doing injury to neutrals residing in the territory of the enemy, and I make bold to assert that it cannot be justly charged with doing anything detrimental to those interests without imperious necessity. Nevertheless, it is a recognized rule of international law that if a neutral suffers injury through the unavoidable hostile acts of a belligerent, he does not thereby acquire a claim to indemnity; because, if he has preferred to continue or comes to reside in a belligerent country after the commencement of hostilities, it has been his intention to submit to all the contingencies consequent upon a state of war.

There is still another circumstance to which I will take the liberty of calling your excellency's attention, and it is that the bulk of the property in the ports of Peru has been transferred, perhaps surreptitiously, to foreign hands since the beginning of the war, with a view to investing it with a neutral character, which explains why so large a proportion of that property has been represented to you as belonging to foreigners.

Yet, in spite of all, I can likewise assure your excellency that the Government of Chili, with the fairness and justice that characterize it in its dealings with friendly nations, will not refuse to make such reparation as may be called for by sound reason and the recognized principles of international law, and it hopes that the claims which it may prefer on account of the acts of foreign citizens during the war will be considered in the same spirit of reciprocity.

Hoping, sir, that the contents of this note will be satisfactory upon some of the points which formed the subject of our yesterday's conversation, until I shall have reported them to my government, so that it may explain them more fully, I have the honor to avail myself of this occasion to reiterate to your excellency the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

No. 143.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, April 30, 1880. (Received June 5, 1880.)

SIR: Referring to your dispatch No. 83, concerning the destruction by the Chilian fleet of certain property of the American Oil Company at Talara, Peru, and the seizure at the Lobos Islands of a launch attached to an American tug-boat, I have to inform you that the instructions therein contained have been duly observed.

The information which I have been enabled to obtain, bearing upon this subject, is exceedingly meager, yet I judge that I am sufficiently acquainted with the facts to warrant the conclusion that the destruction of the property at Talara, at least, was without justification. Talara is far removed from the field of actual military and naval operations, and if the property destroyed had been used, or if it was in condition to be used, to further the prospects of Peru in the war, I am not advised thereof.

My information in regard to these matters is limited to a copy of the letter of Consul Mountjoy written to Mr. Christiancy, under date of January 3. By referring to your copy of this letter you will see that the information furnished, touching the affairs at Lobos Islands, is based entirely upon a conversation with a Peruvian official at that point, and while it may be correct in every particular, I am as yet without testimony confirming it. It is true, however, that this government has asserted from the beginning of the war that Peru should not be permitted to export guano or niter, and to that end has insisted upon the right to destroy in the various ports used for these purposes the means by which these articles have been loaded. Early in the war her navy destroyed the moles and launches at the guano deposits of Pabellon de Pica and Huanillos. The loss was very great, and the owners, who were British subjects residing in Great Britain, had the earnest support of their government in an effort to obtain assurances from Chili that they should not be again molested if they should repair their moles and launches. The note of Lord Saulsbury was, I am credibly informed, somewhat dictatorial in its tone, but it accomplished nothing. The guano deposits are, it will be borne in mind, the property of the Peruvian Government, and it was contended here that Peru relied upon the exportations from them for means with which to carry on the war. That Peru has been very materially crippled in the finances by Chili's course in this matter will not admit of a doubt.

The Lobos Islands contain large beds of guano, and I infer that the launch referred to was seized to prevent its being used in loading that article.

I may add that the naval officer under whose immediate direction the acts complained of were committed was a rash man, and that he has since paid with his life for his excessive temerity.

I have reason to believe that the government has cautioned its naval officers against a repetition of such scenes as that at Talara. But while the war lasts I feel confident that Chili will endeavor to maintain her position regarding the exportation of guano.

No. 148.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, May 20, 1880. (Received June 26.)

SIR: For your information I inclose a copy of a communication written by me to Mr. Christiancy, regarding the war between these republics, in which I have discussed somewhat briefly the prospects of peace, the probabilities of intervention by the European powers, and the methods by which our government could make its good offices available if our friendly mediation should be desired by the belligerents, and I wish especially to direct your attention to what is said on the latter branch of the subject, beginning on page 4.

It seems to me plain that if friendly mediation should be agreed upon, an early conference of duly empowered representatives of the belligerent governments would be a necessity. A discussion of the questions at issue could hardly be carried on in any other manner. The distance intervening, and the difficulties in the way of communicating by mail, would, in my judgment, render impracticable the holding of such conference at Washington, and I conclude that some point on this coast would be fixed for its sessions. You will observe my suggestions as to the course which should be observed by our diplomatic representatives in connection with such conference if it should take place. We could not expect to be of much service to the belligerents in arranging their difficulties unless some authorized representative of our government could be present at the conference and assist therein, and the course suggested seemed to me the most practicable in the absence of instructions from the Department on that point. If peace could be secured without resorting to the conference, of course it should be done, but I do not regard such a result as probable.

Should my views on this subject be in harmony with those of the State Department it might be well, I respectfully submit, that the aid of the Navy Department should be solicited in carrying them into effect. In the contingency referred to it seems to me that the representatives of the Government of the United States having in charge this business should have at their disposal a naval vessel.

My suggestions are all made, of course, in contemplation of the contingency spoken of—a contingency which is liable to happen at any time, and which may, on the other hand, never occur.

I fail to discover any evidence here of a disposition on the part of the European powers to dictate to this government regarding the settlement of this controversy. Should such disposition manifest itself, however, and should it tend in the direction of armed intervention, I do not doubt that this government would solicit counsel and advice from the United States. It is unnecessary, I judge, that I should assure you that your instructions on this subject, embraced in your No. 85, shall be carefully observed.

It may be added that the Government of Chili is fully informed as to the willingness of that of the United States to use its good offices in the way of friendly mediation for the purpose of bringing about a peace when it shall be assured that its services to that end would be acceptable to all the belligerents.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, May 13, 1880.

SIR: There prevails here to some extent among well-informed people an impression that following the battle which will probably be fought in a few days at Tacna, if its result should be favorable to Chili, negotiations between the belligerents will be opened, having in view the accomplishment of peace. The government officials have not discouraged the growth of this sentiment, and I am credibly informed that the President has stated that after this battle a proposition will be submitted to Peru for its consideration. I have no special means of knowing the terms of the contemplated proposition, but judge that it will include a relinquishment by Peru in some form of the province of Tarapacá. It could not do less and meet with the popular approval. Possibly, it may in substance contemplate an acknowledgment by Peru of an obligation to pay Chili's expenses in the war, and the right of the latter to occupy Tarapacá until such payment shall be made.

It is possible, however, if not probable, that the government may change its mind, and that no proposition whatever will be made. If the allies should be successful in the battle, an event which is not regarded as possible here, of course the idea would be abandoned. You best know how the terms suggested would be received by Peru, but my impressions incline me to the belief that they would not be accepted. It occurs to me, however, that perhaps an arrangement might be made which would acknowledge the obligation of Peru as above stated, but should leave the settlement of the amount of the expenses, together with the determination of all rights and equities in the nitre and guano in the district referred to, to arbitration. I merely suggest this that you may give it thought, if you think it worthy of consideration. Such a project would, I judge, receive the moral support of the European powers, and I know of no reason why it should not be favorably looked upon by our government. The arbitrator would, I assume, be the United States, in case a resort to arbitration should be had upon any basis.

Now as to mediation. As I have written you heretofore, there is no evidence here, in so far as I can observe, of a contemplated intervention by the European powers, and but for the instruction from the State Department, of which I have spoken in a former communication, I should regard the probability of such a proceeding at this time as exceedingly doubtful. In view of this instruction, however, I feel constrained to regard the contingency as liable to occur. I assume that, in such an event, the good offices of our government would be very acceptable to all of the belligerents. It occurs to me, then, that we should endeavor to arrive at some understanding regarding the means by which the friendly mediation of our government can be made available. Prompt action would doubtless be required, and it is therefore important, in my judgment, that we should by comparison of views labor to comprehend each other fully, and to place ourselves in perfect accord.

Upon the tender and acceptance of the good offices of our government it strikes me that the first thing to be done is to bring about a conference at some suitable point of duly empowered representatives of the belligerent governments.

At this conference the United States ministers in the belligerent countries should attend and assist, and it might be convenient and proper to hold it on an American man-of-war. Our naval commanders would doubtless accede to any proper request which might be made of them in this connection. It may become very important that communications between our respective legations should be transmitted at a more rapid rate than the mails are carried. In such a contingency I do not doubt that our naval officers would afford us all proper assistance. You are in the vicinity of the seat of war, and will probably be informed of any movement in the direction indicated before knowledge of it can reach me.

If at any time it shall appear that the Government of Peru is ready to accept friendly mediation by the United States on the basis suggested by the State Department, I trust you will not fail to cause me to be promptly informed thereof; and I will thank you also for any information which you may give me concerning the disposition of Bolivia in this regard. As I understand it, neither of them has as yet signified its desire to that end. This is true also of Chili, but I feel quite confident that if I could positively assure this government that Peru and Bolivia were desirous of our good offices, an expression of its willingness to accept would not long be withheld.

I beg that you will write me generally on the matters herein discussed. I shall send a copy of this communication to the State Department for its information.

Very respectfully, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

P. S.—I observe that a new minister has been appointed for Bolivia. The difficulties attending the transmission of communications from here to La Paz are very great, and it appears to me that the burden of conducting the correspondence with that legation on this subject will necessarily fall upon you.

Yours, OSBORN.

No. 149.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, May 21, 1880. (Received June 26.)

SIR: Pursuant to an invitation from the minister of foreign relations, I to-day had an interview with him concerning our consulate at Iquique. The Chilian military governor at that point, Captain Lynch, has repeatedly charged that Dr. Merriam was unfaithful to his obligations as a neutral, and that his consulate was being used in the interest of Peru in the present war. In a conversation which we had some six weeks ago, Captain L. stated that he was quite confident that Merriam had taken advantage of his position to afford the Peruvian Government means of communicating with its southern army at Arica. Merriam, knowing of the suspicions concerning him, addressed me a letter denying that he had been guilty of any impropriety. There the matter rested until to-day, when the foreign minister told me that he had positive evidence that our consulate at Iquique was being used as had been charged by Captain Lynch.

I replied that I did not doubt that Merriam's sympathies were on the side of Peru, for his wife and children were Peruvians; but if he was at liberty to give me the evidence upon which he based his conclusion I would be obliged to him. In reply, he said there was no doubt of the facts, and he then sent for and exhibited to me an official envelope addressed to the minister of war at Lima, in which was contained an official letter, signed by General Montero, the Peruvian director-general of the war at Arica. "This," said he, "was in transit to Consul Merriam for the purpose of having it forwarded to Lima by the mail steamer;" but just how the government got possession of it he did not tell me. The minister says the government is much displeased with the conduct of Consul Merriam, and he thinks he should be promptly removed from his position. In this opinion, in view of the evidence submitted to me to-day, I fully concur, and it seems to me that his displacement cannot be too soon brought about. There are several Americans in Iquique who are competent for the position, either one of whom would, I judge, take temporary charge of the consulate if asked.

By this mail I write to Mr. Christiancy on the subject. If the Iquique consulate were recognized as being within the supervision of this legation, I would not hesitate a moment to place it in temporary charge of another person, as the minister politely requested I should, but under the circumstances I have deemed it prudent to confer with my colleague at Lima.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch, No. 148, of the 20th May last, in which you inclose a copy of a letter addressed by you to Mr. Christiancy in reference to the prospects of peace between the contending powers on the Pacific coast, and suggesting a method by which the Government of the United States might make its good offices available in the way of mediation. On the 29th instant I telegraphed you as follows:

No. 155.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, August 4, 1880. (Received September 17.)

SIR: I inclose a copy of a letter which I have written to Mr. Christiancy regarding some movements made here by a portion of the European legations, with a view of removing the obstacles to peace, and I beg of you to regard it as a part of this dispatch.

The legations which took part in the movement were those of France, Italy, and Great Britain, but the minister of the latter took but little interest in it and seemed to regard it as futile. There was nothing which indicated even in the remotest degree a disposition on the part of the European powers to dictate terms to Chili, nor was there the slightest evidence of an intention to urge a peace except with the full and free consent of the belligerents. In answer to a suggestion from me, the Italian minister said quite emphatically that European intervention with force was not to be thought of.

I am not aware that the German minister, Baron von Gülich, was consulted in this matter. He is about to depart for his home in Europe on leave of absence, and I therefore conclude that the German Government has in contemplation no movement of an extraordinary character in this part of the world. I see no reason to hope for an early conclusion of the war. Public opinion here emphatically demands Tarapacá, and I fear that Peru is determined to continue the desperate and apparently hopeless struggle rather than cede it. This fear is based, in part, upon the fact that my suggestions to Mr. Christiancy, under date of May 13, have met with no response from him.

There are some men of influence here who would welcome a peace without exacting the district of territory mentioned, but they see fit to reserve their views to this effect from the public. A successor to President Pinto is to be elected in April next, and the desire of the party in power to continue in control has tended to make of an exceedingly careful administration a timid one. The government is inclined to follow public opinion rather than to attempt to lead it.

The army has been remitted to its strength prior to the late battles in Southern Peru, and I judge that it now contains about 25,000 effective men. Much discontent pervades it at the delay of the government in giving the order to march on Lima. The government is, for obvious reasons, exceedingly desirous of avoiding a campaign against Lima, and will, I judge, for the present occupy the army with expeditions to Northern Peru.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

[Inclosure in No. 155.]

Mr. Osborn to Mr. Christiancy.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, July 31, 1880.

SIR: During the present week there has been considerable discussion here among members of the diplomatic corps, and between some of them and the President and his advisers, regarding the difficulties which stand in the way of a peace between these countries. The discussion seems to have originated in the receipt of advices, by some of the European ministers, from their colleagues in Lima, from which it is inferred that President Piérola is desirous of peace, and that he would be willing to enter into negotiations for its accomplishment, even though he might know that it would cost him the province of Tarapacá. I need not say to you that I was not of those who so presented the matter to the government here. The fact that the suggestions upon this subject, contained in my letter to you of May 13, have elicited no response, was strong evidence to my mind that, however much I might wish it otherwise, my friends in the European legations had been misled touching the disposition of Peru. However, be the information well founded or otherwise, by means of the conferences referred to a definite understanding has been reached regarding the basis upon which Chili will consent to enter into negotiations. President Pinto directed that the details of the conferences should be laid before me, and I am, therefore, able to put you in possession of the conclusions reached. I will state them as briefly as possible.

President Pinto is anxious to conclude a peace, and will appoint ambassadors for that purpose, with full powers, when he shall be assured from an authoritative source that President Piérola is alike anxious and that he is desirous of entering into negotiations.

Before arriving at a definite conclusion in the affirmative, however, President Piérola should be fully advised of the conditions which Chili will impose. In consideration of the injuries sustained by Chili, by reason of the war, she will insist upon retaining the province of Tarapacá. No other conditions will be imposed, but she will withdraw from the country now occupied by her army in the neighborhood of Arica, making the river Camarones the line of division between the two countries. She will respect private rights in the province mentioned as the same are defined by the authorities on international law regarding territory similarly acquired. Antofagasta and the ports to the north thereof will be made, for the purposes of Bolivian commerce, free ports.

That is all. There is, it is true, quite a sentiment here demanding that other and more severe conditions should be imposed, and I am quite sure that the government will subject itself to much censure if it shall conclude the war on the basis suggested. It is possible that these terms are quite as liberal as the government would dare to subscribe to in the condition in which we find public opinion. President Pinto expresses himself quite averse to the imposition upon Peru of humiliating conditions, and I am convinced that he is disposed to exact no more than the circumstances seem to require. Nothing was said regarding Bolivia, except that she could have free commerce as stated. The disposition of her government does not seem to have been considered.

Now, as to the assurances demanded as to Peru's purposes. What the government here requires, before proceeding with the appointment of ambassadors, is a positive assurance from one or more of the foreign legations to the effect that the Peruvian Government is sincerely desirous of peace and is ready to negotiate as before stated. The authority to give such assurance must be derived, of course, from the conference of their colleagues in Lima with the government there.

If there should be a conference of ambassadors, Chili would not object to its taking place on board a neutral man-of-war at any point on the coast, but Arica would seem to be the most desirable point. If such conference should include all the belligerents, by all means it should take place on an American ship. Some of the European ministers here, who have more faith in this movement than I have, would, I am informed, be pleased to appoint the conference on a European man-of-war.

I still think that mediation suggests the most feasible way out of this difficulty. Now that the allies are to be informed of the terms which Chili will impose, they will be able the more intelligently to consider whether they can be served by mediation or not. I think it highly probable that, through mediation, other and more satisfactory terms, perhaps, could be obtained for Bolivia. On this point, however, I do not speak by authority. * * * Public sentiment here is quite the reverse of hostile to Bolivia, and I infer that the government would welcome a settlement on terms which should promise a lasting peace.

Simultaneously with this will go forward letters from the European ministers to their colleagues in Lima, touching the matters herein discussed. The Italian and French representatives seem to have been the most active in the matter, but I hear the opinion of Mr. St. John, of the British legation in Lima, quoted as a reason for the hope that the Peruvian Government will be found ready to treat on the terms proposed.

Tarapaca has been the bane of Peru, as it will be also, I fear, of Chili if she shall continue to retain it. Congress and the press are already almost exclusively occupied in the discussion of subjects pertaining to it, and it threatens to become a source of serious trouble to the country. Chili makes a great mistake in reaching out for it, in my judgment, on more accounts than one. Peru without it is infinitely better off than with it. It strikes me that Peru has a grand future before her if she can but have peace. She has had many difficulties to contend with in the past, the most of which were the outgrowth of Tarapaca. With that cause removed, she only needs peace to insure her prosperity and greatness.

Very respectfully, &c.,

No. 156.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED SEATES,

SIR: On the 6th instant I received the following telegraphic message, without date, to wit:

OSBORN, Minister, Santiago:

Press upon Chilian Government our desire to aid in restoring peace on honorable terms between nations to which we are sincerely and equally friendly. A like instruction is sent to-day to Lima.

EVARTS,
Secretary.

Later in the day I had an interview with President Pinto and Mr. Valderama, the foreign minister, regarding the subject of your message, in the course of which I urged in as strong terms as seemed prudent the propriety of the belligerents calling to their aid in the present emergency the friendly efforts of our government. The President expressed his gratitude for the generous and friendly manifestations by the United States, but spoke of the long distance intervening and the difficulties in the way of communicating between Santiago and Washington, as serious obstacles in the way of mediation. After considerable discussion the President expressed himself satisfied, personally, with the form of mediation suggested by me to the Department in my dispatch No. 148, of the 20th of May last, and said that he would consult his advisers, and inform me as soon as possible if mediation on that basis would be accepted. I was careful to inform him that I was not prepared to say positively that the mode proposed would receive the sanction of my government, but that I trusted soon to hear that my suggestions to that end had been favorably considered.

On the 10th instant I had a further interview with Minister Valderama, and received from him the assurance that mediation in the form suggested would be accepted by Chili. We therefore agreed upon a memorandum of the interviews referred to, a copy of which I inclose.

The minister concurred in my suggestion to the effect that a formal tender of mediation should be deferred until I could be further informed regarding the purposes of the other belligerents, and until advices should be received from Washington touching the proposed manner of proceeding. If, therefore, you have not already instructed me in this matter, it might be well, upon the receipt of this, to do so briefly by telegraph.

On the 11th instant I telegraphed you as follows:

EVARTS, Washington:

Chili will accept mediation in form suggested my dispatch May 20.

OSBORN.

I have also written to Mr. Christiancy and to Mr. Adams, informing them of the result of my efforts.

If mediation should take place in the manner suggested, you will not fail to see the importance of having the hearty co-operation of the Navy Department.

A source of some embarrassment to me in this exigency is my seeming lack of reliable information from Peru and Bolivia. I have nothing upon this subject from the legation in Lima later than May 7. The fact that Mr. Christiancy has not deemed it necessary to communicate with me would seem to indicate that the situation there has remained unchanged.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

P. S.—AUGUST 13. I am just in receipt of a letter from Mr. Christiancy, under date of July 14. He thinks Chili should take the initiative in a movement toward peace. This she has now done in accepting our mediation. The movement suggested might prove a failure, but I believe that if the door to negotiation can once be thrown wide open under the influence of our mediation, eventually a peaceful solution will be reached.

Respectfully, &c.,

OSBORN.

[Inclosure in No. 156.]

Memorandum of conferences.

On the 6th of August, 1880, Mr. Osborn visited President Pinto and Minister Valderama touching the subject of mediation by the United States in the present war, and after some general conversation in which the President expressed himself as desirous of arriving at an early peace, Mr. Osborn read from a telegraphic message which he had received from Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State of the United States, instructing him to press upon the Chilian Government the desire of the United States to aid in restoring peace.

The President expressed his gratitude to the Government of the United States for its kindness, but thought that the great distance intervening and the difficulties in the way of mail communication presented obstacles to prompt action, if mediation should mean a reference of all matters to Washington.

Mr. Osborn replied that he understood that the United States Government was desirous of serving the belligerents in whatever way might seem best calculated to produce the desired result and as might to them seem advisable, but that, anticipating the force of the suggestions of President Pinto in May last, he had written to the government at Washington and to his colleague in Lima suggesting that, if the United States should be called upon to mediate, in his judgment, the best mode of proceeding would be to request the belligerent governments to appoint duly empowered ambassadors to meet at some point on their coast, on board an American man-of-war, and there to confer regarding the settlement of their difficulties in the presence of and with the advice and assistance of such ambassador or ambassadors as the United States Government might designate for that purpose. To his dispatch to the foregoing effect Mr. Osborn stated that he had not yet received an answer, but that he believed his suggestions would prove acceptable to his government. President Pinto and Minister Valderama expressed themselves as satisfied with the form suggested for mediation, and the President, after a conference with his advisers, caused Mr. Osborn to be informed, in another conference with Minister Valderama, on the 10th of August, that the Chilian Government would be pleased to accept the services of the United States Government in the capacity of a mediator in the form by Mr. Osborn suggested.

No. 160.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, August 26, 1880. (Received October 11.)

SIR: Referring to your instruction No. 83, concerning the destruction by Chilian naval vessels of property belonging to American citizens at Talara, Peru, and at the Lobos Islands, and to my dispatch No. 143 on the same subject, I have the honor herewith to inclose an English translation of a note, with accompanying documents, from the Chilian minister of foreign relations, in answer to one from me dated April 30 last, a copy of which was transmitted to the Department with my No. 152.

It will be seen that the subject of my note was referred to the minister of marine for explanation, and that that officer in turn directed the commanding officer of the Chilian fleet to report touching the matters complained of. The note of the minister of marine embraces a report from the admiral, and is accompanied with a statement from the second officer of the cruiser Amazonas, touching the affair at Talara.

It is alleged in justification of the burning of the launch at Talara that it was entirely abandoned; that it bore evidences of having been used as a coal-hulk, and that the circumstances were such as to warrant the Chilian officials in concluding that it was being used for such purpose by the enemy.

Regarding the affair at Lobos Islands, the admiral says that only such launches were destroyed as belonged to the company engaged in loading guano, and that no indignity was offered to any neutral flag.

No proofs have been received at the legation in support of any claim for damages on account of those affairs, and I have not therefore deemed it necessary to present anything further to the government here on the subject.

I judge that the main purpose of your instruction has been accomplished in the very observable growth of respect for neutral interests in this section.

My note of the 30th of April, referred to, also called the attention of the government to some alleged outrages upon one Campbell, an American citizen, by the Chilian soldiery, at Mollendo, of which subject your instruction No. 90 treated. I am assured by the foreign office that the commanding general of the Army has been directed to make inquiry regarding this affair, but I have no information yet of his having reported thereon.

REPUBLIC OF CHILI, DEPARTMENT OF MARINE,
Santiago, June 28.

SIR: In answer to your note of the 8th ultimo, I herewith transcribe the report which the commander-in-chief of the squadron has given upon the subject thereof.

"Mr. MINISTER: In compliance with the orders contalned in your note of the 14th of May, in which you ask for information regarding some incidents which occurred on the coast of the north of Peru, which have caused a protest from the representative of the United States in Chili, I proceed to give you the explanations of the case.

"The facts to which the honorable minister refers took place in the expedition of the Blanco, the Amazonas, and the Loa, in search of a torpedo-launch belonging to the enemy. On the Peruvian coast, between Paita and Tumbes, was found hidden in a small inlet a launch in very bad condition, completely abandoned, and without any cargo or crew on board. It contained only a few empty barrels, which were considered useless. It was believed that that old and dismantled vessel was being used as a coal hulk by the enemy in their frequent voyages to Panama for the purpose of procuring war material, for which reason its destruction was deemed expedient. I have asked for a report from the second officer of the Amazonas, who destroyed the launch, and he has forwarded me the inclosed, which I herewith transmit. It would be very easy to direct an official investigation of this occurrence, and it will be made if you should deem it necessary.

"Having received orders to destroy the guano-loading appliances at the Lobos Islands as a measure necessary to deprive the enemy of his resources, this measure was carried into effect on the 27th of December, 1879. The only property destroyed were the large launches belonging to the loading company at the islands, the wharves, and platforms. It is, however, true that one or two of the captains of the merchant vessels at first alleged that the launches belonged to them. Subsequently they ackowledged that this was merely a subterfuge on their part to prevent the stoppage of their taking cargo on board. The same attempt was made at Pubellon de Pica, when the Chilian squadron carried into effect the same necessary operation. No act of violence or lack of consideration was perpetrated against neutral flags at the Lobos Islands. Only such launches were destroyed as from their size and condition showed conclusively that they did not belong to vessels.

"It has been a matter of regret to me during the present war that certain captains of neutral merchant vessels, whether from interest or sympathy with the enemies of Chili, in endeavoring to favor them, have sought to ignore the lawful rights of our navy in its hostile operations.

"I think that the foregoing will comply with your excellency's orders as far as I myself am concerned."

All of which I communicate to you for the purposes for which it may serve, inclosing you copy of the report of the second officer of the Amazonas, before referred to.

God protect your excellency.

BLOCKADING SQUADRON OFF CALLAO,
June 13, 1880.

SIR: In compliance with your excellency's orders to report upon the destruction of a launch, which was burned by the cruiser Amazonas on her return voyage from Panama in December of last year, the undersigned, who was executive officer on board at that time, has to say:

That on the 24th of December of last year, at 10.30 a. m., upon doubling a point four miles north of Talara, in latitude 4.26 south, longitude 81.16 west, a launch was discovered concealed in a small cove. It was wholly abandoned, and showed no signs of having had a crew on board for a long time previous. It was half full of water, with no cabin on deck or below, without masts or spars, in very bad condition, and had some 50 old empty barrels in the hold. It showed signs of having been used for a coal-hulk, the deck being in very bad condition. The locality where the launch was discovered is some four or five miles to the north of some petroleum wells, which are at Talara. There were no indications of any inhabitants on shore. We discovered this establishment while steering south at a distance of some five miles, and about an hour after having set fire to the launch, hence there was nobody on the spot who could have explained the fact of this launch being concealed and abandoned at that place, and serving as a coaling station for the enemy's transports in passing by that place on their voyages from Panama while engaged in the transport of arms. Furthermore, the torpedo-launch, which was coming for the enemy, was expected about that time, and it was to be supposed, for the reasons given, that the launch burned was intended for the service of the enemy. From inquiries which we made of one of the English steamers, and of some Italian fishermen who were on board at the time we passed Paita on our voyage to Panama, we knew that the Peruvian Government had no stock of coal at the former place.

The foregoing is all that I have to communicate in compliance with your excellency's instructions.

God protect your excellency.

SIR: On the 20th instant I received the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, August 17.

OSBORN, Minister, Santiago, Chili:

Your telegram received. Instruction sent to Christiancy, asking views of Peru. Your action approved, and your earnest attention to the matter urged.

HAY.

That the government here might know that my course upon the subject of mediation by the United States in this war had been approved by the government at Washington, and as well for the purpose of still further impressing them regarding your desires in this matter, I immediately caused the President to be informed of the contents of your dispatch. He was in Valparaiso at the time, but it was telegraphed to him in cipher, and he expressed himself in reply as much pleased therewith. It now only needs the consent of the allies to place our movement in active operation.

Upon the receipt of the above message I wrote to Mr. Christiancy at Lima, and to Mr. Adams at La Paz. My communications went north on the steamer which left Valparaiso on the 22d instant, that for Mr. Adams going under cover to the Chilian commanding general at Arica, who was instructed from here to forward it to La Paz by messenger.

I have nothing from either Lima or La Paz since I last wrote you on this subject, but am just now in receipt of a telegram from Consul Foote, at Valparaiso, informing me that Mr. Christiancy arrived there yesterday in the Wachusett, and that he is now on his way to Santiago by rail. I doubt if I shall be able to inform you by the mail steamer which takes this communication of the purposes or results of his visit.

A joint dispatch has been received here by the English, French, and Italian ministers from their colleagues in Lima, dated subsequent to the departure of the Wachusett, forwarded by French corvette to Arica, and thence by cable here, announcing the willingness of the Peruvian Government to appoint an ambassador to confer with one from Chili upon the request of the signers of the dispatch. This is in response to communications to the purport of the inclosure of my No. 155. I am assured that this government would prefer the mediation suggested by us, and I judge that time will be given us to secure a response from Peru regarding the same. This dispatch may, however, cause us some embarrassment.

No. 163.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Santiago, Chili, September 2, 1880. (Received October 11.)

SIR: Mr. Christiancy has come and gone. The Wachusett, with him on board, sailed from Valparaiso on the 31st ultimo. I shall not presume to deal with his purposes in coming here. His own explanations thereof will doubtless be more satisfactory to the Department than anything that I might be able to offer. He undoubtedly hoped to further the prospects for peace, but I am not sure that his coming has not had a contrary effect. You can well understand that in the present excited condition of the public mind such an event could not occur without causing much commotion. The wildest of speculations have been indulged in regarding it. The politicians have taken hold of it, and if we are to judge from the tone of the press, what seemed easy ten days since regarding the settlement of terms, may yet present some difficulties. "To Lima!" is the popular cry now. Many influential men insist that a peace without going to Lima would prove an empty one, and I fear that this sentiment may gather sufficient strength to force the government to yield.

Personally, I was exceedingly pleased to meet Mr. Christiancy, and his visit was made as agreeable for him as possible. By the President and cabinet; as well as by other distinguished citizens, he was treated with much consideration. He left Lima before the arrival of my letters in reference to the action of Chili concerning mediation, or your telegrams on the same subject, and he was not, therefore, prepared to say what Peru would do. His impressions were, however, that the mediation already agreed to by Chili would be accepted by the belligerents, and he so told President Pinto. Soon after his return to his post I hope to hear that in this his judgment was correct, in which event the conference would be fixed for as early a day as possible, most likely about the middle of October; and it will probably be held on board an American man-of-war at Arica. This point is satisfactory to Chili, and Mr. Christiancy agrees with me in regarding it as the most suitable place.

Anticipating the assent of the other belligerents, this government has already determined upon the appointment of three ambassadors. Unless you shall instruct otherwise, our three ministers will attend as suggested in my dispatch of May 20. If this dispatch should not be delayed in its transmission, a telegram forwarded soon after its receipt would, I judge, reach me here before my departure for Arica, or such other point as may be determined upon for the conference; but I will arrange for the prompt forwarding of all telegraphic dispatches that may arrive during my absence. Upon the completion of the arrangements for the conference I will telegraph you briefly, giving time and place thereof. Arica is in telegraphic communication with this point, and messages can be sent there direct from Washington when the connecting lines are in order.

Now, in conclusion, I venture to express the hope that during the continuance of the war in this section we shall have no more of these visits from our representatives accredited to other belligerent powers. We have had quite as many already as can prove beneficial to a proper understanding of the purposes of our government, and even more, I regret to say, than the preservation of the good name of our diplomatic service has demanded. My letters to Mr. Christiancy have been frequent, and he has had all needed information regarding the situation here. My communication to him of the 13th of May, of which you have a copy, and which constitutes the initiation of the proposed mediation, has elicited no further response than a mere acknowledgment of its receipt. What he could have expected to accomplish in coming here passes my comprehension.

I have, &c.,

No. 164.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, September 9, 1880. (Received October 22.)

SIR: Responding to your instruction No. 98, I have the honor to inclose an English translation of a note received by me from the minister of foreign relations on the day of its date. You will observe that it is simply an acknowledgment of the receipt of my note to which your instruction refers concerning the course to be observed by Chili in the prosecution of the war in this section, and an assurance that it should be laid before the President. A similar note was received at the European legations, but no further response has been deemed necessary by this government. I am assured, however, that our respective notes have received that consideration which the gravity of the subject of which they treat demanded, and I am led to believe that they have exercised no small influence in the subsequent conduct of the war. In so far as the naval operations are concerned, I have heard of no cause of complaint since about the first of last January. Unfortunately their land forces are not so easily controlled. I judge that the reports which have gone to the world from Peruvian sources regarding the behavior of the Chilian soldiery at Pisagua, Mollendo, Tacna, and Arica are more or less exaggerated; still it is undoubtedly true that they are not wholly without foundation. The common Chilian soldier is a strong and reckless man, paying but little regard to discipline, and, in battle, a stranger, alike, to fear and to instincts of mercy. He is impatient under restraint, and is too apt to turn a deaf ear to commands which do not conform to his liking. This is the one great fault with the Chilian army—its want of respect for the commands of its officers in battle. The authorities here understand that perfectly, and to this knowledge, in a great degree, is due the hesitation of the government in entering upon the Lima campaign. There is not the slightest doubt entertained here as to the ability of the Chilian army to enter Lima, but it is feared by the more considerate ones, that once there, the soldiers might be guilty of excesses which would not redound to the credit of their country. The Chilian peon hates the Peruvian as if by instinct, and his hatred is as bitter as it is natural. To this common feeling add the flame which stories of torpedoes and of hidden mines laid for his destruction necessarily produce, and you will be able to comprehend, perhaps, in a modified degree, the spirit which animates the common Chilian soldier in this war.

Preparations for an extensive campaign continue, and unless peace shall come soon, the government will undoubtedly be driven into the movement against Lima. They hope, however, that while satisfying the popular clamor by the preparations which are making, peace may come through the movement which we have been instrumental in initiating, and that they may be saved from the obloquy which the taking of the Peruvian capital might entail.

The government have informed the European ministers that they cannot entertain any proposition regarding peace until they can be informed of the conclusions reached by the allies touching our proposed mediation. I shall expect to hear from Mr. Christiancy and Mr. Adams on this subject in the course of two or three weeks.

I think I see some slight evidences here of apprehension upon the part of the government of armed intervention by the European powers, to the extent of preventing the Chilian army from entering Lima, if that campaign should be undertaken, but my inquiries among my colleagues have failed to develop anything in justification of this fear, further than can be implied from the uncommon interest in behalf of peace now being manifested by the representatives of Great Britain, France, and Italy.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive the note which you directed to me, dated the 21st instant, calling the attention of my government to the contents of the communications which the minister of war, in the field, sent on the 28th of January and the 3d of February to the chiefs of the army and of the Chilian squadron with regard to the course to be, by them, pursued in their belligerent operations.

To-day I will lay before his excellency, the President of the Republic, the observations that you were pleased to make concerning said communications.

Limiting myself for the present to an acknowledgment of the receipt of your estimable note, I improve with pleasure the occasion to reiterate to you the sentiments of high consideration with which I am,

SIR: Responding to your instruction No. 100, I have the honor herewith to inclose an English translation of the note received by me in February last from the minister of foreign relations regarding an exchange of prisoners with Bolivia, as also a copy of my reply thereto.

My letter upon this subject to the legation in La Paz has not been answered, and no further steps have been taken in the matter either by the Chili Government or by this legation.

REPUBLIC OF CHILI, DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Valparaiso, February 20, 1880.

SIR: The Government of Chili is desirous of ransoming some soldiers which Bolivia has made prisoners in unimportant encounters that have taken place between the scouts of our respective armies.

At present we have many Bolivian prisoners from which we would give the number necessary to ransom those which they have belonging to us.

Convinced of the benevolent sentiments that animate you, my government has believed that perhaps it could count upon your friendly assistance in bringing about an exchange of all the Chilian prisoners which are in Bolivia for a corresponding number of those which we have in Chili.

In case there should be no objection on your part to assist in carrying into effect this proposition, I would venture to request that you should be pleased to solicit in our name the co-operation of your worthy colleague in La Paz.

As soon as a favorable response shall be received from you, I will be careful to send to you the list of Bolivian prisoners that we now have, so that the exchange can be perfected in La Paz.

I improve the occasion, &c.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your esteemed note of the 20th instant, wherein your excellency is pleased to solicit the aid of this legation, as also that of my colleague in La Paz, in securing an exchange of prisoners of war with Bolivia.

Your excellency can rest assured that such aid as it may be in my power to render to your excellency's government in this connection will be most cheerfully given, and I shall avail myself of the first mail which leaves for the north to communicate with the United States legation in La Paz on the subject, pursuant to the suggestion contained in your note.

It is possible, and I fear even probable, that my colleague in La Paz, Judge Pettis, has not yet returned from his home in the United States, whence he went in November last. He expected to return about this time, but I am as yet unadvised of his having reached his post. Nor have I, since his departure ,had any correspondence with his legation, and I am quite ignorant regarding the person in whose hands it has been left. I judge, however, that the legation was placed in charge of some competent person, and that even though my colleague shall not have returned, my communication, upon its arrival in La Paz, will receive proper attention.

With sentiments of the highest consideration, &c.,

No. 167.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, September 17, 1880. (Received November 4.)

SIR: The commotion which was produced by the coming of Mr. Christiancy finally culminated in the formal introduction into the house of deputies of interrogatories to the ministry on the 13th instant, and the subsequent presentation of resolutions expressing a want of confidence in the government. The debate which followed has continued through two sessions, and has been exceedingly acrimonious. I inclose two copies of the Ferrocarril containing the discussion. You will observe that the ministry has found it difficult to convince some of the members of the house that Mr. Christiancy's visit had no official character.

There seemed to be danger at one time that the resolution expressing a want of confidence in the ministry would be adopted, but I now regard that as improbable. The intervening holidays will prevent a further discussion of the subject until the latter part of next week.

The developments are not as yet sufficient to warrant a conclusion as to whether the progress hitherto made in the direction of peace may or may not have been entirely undone by the coming of my Lima colleague, but it is quite evident that the accomplishment of the end desired has been rendered far more problematical.

I trust you will not fail to observe the statements made in the house on the 14th instant by the Hon. Mr. Huneens, of which an English translation is attached to the paper. Mr. H. was formerly minister of foreign relations, and has especially represented the President in several interviews with me on this subject.

I have, &c.,

Statement made to the Chilian chamber of deputies by Mr. Huneens.

In view or the participation, which as a private citizen I have had the honor to take in the matter now occupying the attention of the house, I feel it to be my duty to correct some of the statements made by the Hon. Mr. Rodriguez with regard to the visit of the Hon. Mr. Christiancy, minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the United States at Lima. I feel myself authorized to do so by my distinguished friend, Hon. T. A. Osborn, minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the United States.

I now, therefore, state in the most emphatic and unequivocal manner—

1st. That Mr. Christiancy came to Chili with no mission whatever from Mr. Piérola, and that he has submitted no proposals whatever for peace on behalf of the Government of Peru.

2d. That Mr. Christiancy has not asked for any proposals for peace from our goverment.

3d. That Mr. Christiancy came to Chili simply for the purpose of conferring with Mr. Osborn, in obedience to instructions from his government, with regard to certain questions that have occupied the attention of the Cabinet at Washington.

In view of what may hereafter occur, I ask that the foregoing statement be placed on the minutes.

No. 169.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, September 30, 1880. (Received November 16.)

SIR: I send you by to-day's mail an extra copy of each of the newspapers inclosed with my No. 167, containing a part of the debate in the house of deputies which grew out of the visit of Mr. Christiancy, and also two copies each of three dates of the same publication containing the remainder of the discussion. You will see that on the 25th instant, after a full and explict statement by Mr. Recabárren, the minister of the interior, regarding the purposes of the government in conducting the war, the resolution of censure was withdrawn and the house passed to the order of the day. It will also be noticed that the government stands committed to the country to a vigorous prosecution of the war. This is understood here to mean that a more aggressive policy has been resolved upon, and that unless Peru shall exhibit a disposition to arrive at peace the war is to be prosecuted with all possible energy, to the end that terms may be dictated to her at her capital. The minister, however, did not place the government in a position of direct antagonism with its former attitude regarding our proposed mediation, and I still hope for a good result therefrom.

Mr. Christiancy has telegraphed me by way of Arica that the allies have accepted our proposed mediation, but I have found it necessary to communicate with him further before addressing this government formally on the subject, because of the various conditions which appear to attach to such consent.

In his last message Mr. Christiancy intimates that Peru may possibly withdraw its consent unless Chili shall agree to an armistice. He adds that if the campaign against Lima should be prosecuted during the negotiations our government would be placed in an "ignominious position," and says in effect that the conference would have to be abandoned.

Six weeks ago there would have been little difficulty in obtaining Chili's consent to at least a qualified armistice during the sitting of the conference, but I much doubt if the government will be prepared to agree to this now. The campaign against Lima cannot, however, be undertaken before the middle of November, but of this I could not speak to Mr. Christiancy by telegraph, and have simply advised him that the conference ought to be held as hitherto contemplated. If the allies are sincerely desirous of availing themselves of our suggested movement for the purpose of closing the war, there is abundant time in which to accomplish that result ere the Lima expedition is ready to move.

By what sort of reasoning Mr. Christiancy has reached the conclusion that the prosecution of hostilities, pending negotiations, would tend to render the position of our government "ignominious" I fail to comprehend. An armistice would be desirable, doubtless, but a refusal to agree to it certainly would not bear the construction which my colleague seems disposed to give it.

If our assistance had been solicited by the belligerents there might, perhaps, be some ground for his conclusion, but in the actual situation it seems to me plain that there is none. The opinion here is quite general that the Piérola government will not yield to the demands of Chili until it shall be absolutely driven thereto, and there are some high in official position who regard its so-called consent to mediation as a subterfuge for the purpose of obtaining time. In view of this, you will not be surprised, I am confident, if all efforts to secure an armistice shall prove abortive.

The destruction of Chimbote and other places in Northern Peru may be accepted as an indication of the character of the change in the policy of the government. It is claimed in justification of this expedition that the resources of the Peruvian Government are being derived from the rich sugar plantations north of Callao, and that the destruction of these estates has therefore become a necessity. It is further urged that the men of wealth in Peru must be made to experience some of the horrors of war, to the end that the government may be forced to sue for peace.

I judge that the instructions to Captain Lynch, the commander of the expedition, have been quite explicit in requiring that the property of neutrals should not be molested, and the information which reaches me from the north induces the belief that he has been careful in this regard.

SIR: I inclose two copies of a newspaper containing a discussion in the house of deputies yesterday, concerning the note of the Peruvian minister of foreign relations, of September 14,* to Mr. Christiancy, upon the subject of mediation. You have undoubtedly been furnished with a copy of the note by the legation at Lima, and it is therefore unnecessary that I should here include it.

You have not failed to notice, I judge, that the minister, in the first lines of his note, says that Mr. Christiancy has informed him that he (Mr. Christiancy) had visited Chili for the purpose of proposing to this government the mediation of the United States, and that such tender had been accepted. I cannot doubt that the minister misunderstood Mr. Christiancy, but I beg you to read the remarks of Mr. Balmaceda and Mr. Alemparte in this connection. You will bear in mind that on the very day of the date of the note referred to, the government here, in justifying themselves before Congress, were engaged in asserting that Mr. Christiancy's visit had no official significance. See my No. 167, with inclosure.

In view of the embarrassment which this affair has caused this government, I am more than astonished that I have not been advised that this government has deemed it prudent to proceed no further in the matter of the mediation.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, October 6, 1880.

SIR: Your excellency is aware that on the 6th of August last, I approached the honorable President of the Republic of Chili, for the purpose of learning if the Government of Chili would be disposed to enter into a conference with ministers from the other belligerent republics in the present war with a view of arriving at an honorable peace, under the mediation, in the form of good offices, of the United States. Your excellency was pleased to inform me, in our interview of the 10th of August, that the Government of Chili would accept the good offices of the United States, as suggested, if Peru and Bolivia should upon their part signify their acceptance of the same.

The conditions indicated by your excellency, in the interview referred to, having been complied with, I now have the honor to offer formally to the government of your excellency, the mediation of the Government of the United States to be exercised in the manner proposed.

The form suggested by me in the interview referred to, contemplates the holding of a conference of duly empowered ministers of the three belligerent republics on board an American man-of-war at Arica, in the presence and with the friendly aid and assistance of the representatives of the United States to the belligerent republics.

SIR: I have received your excellency's note under date of yesterday. In it your excellency, after recalling the steps taken for the purpose of ascertaining whether my government was disposed to enter into a conference of peace with the other belligerents, through the mediation of the kindly offices of the United States, and also further recalling the favorable disposition manifested by my government in case Peru and Bolivia should accept on their part a similar suggestion, your excellency notifies me that, this having been done, the time has now arrived to make a formal tender of the mediation of the United States to the Government of Chili, as you now do.

Having laid your excellency's note before the President, he directs me to transmit to your excellency the expression of his gratitude for the great interest which the United States has shown in its endeavors to restore peace between Chili and the allied republics.

My government accepts the formal mediation and kindly offices that your excellency offers on behalf of the United States, and also further accepts the suggestions made by your excellency as to the manner of carrying it into effect.

It is nevertheless my duty here again to repeat, in order to avoid all ambiguity or doubt, that this acceptation does not imply a suspension of hostilities.

You therein report the visit of Mr. Christiancy to Santiago, on board the Wachusett, and the steps taken by him and you in favor of bringing about a conference at Arica, in the interests of an honorable termination of the present disastrous war.

Dispatches subsequently received, through the Navy Department, from the commanding officer of the Wachusett, under date of September 18, indicate the partial success, at least, of your and Mr. Christiancy's efforts to this laudable end, and these reports are further confirmed by a telegraphic dispatch received from you on the 12th, in the following words:

No. 173.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN CHILI, ON BOARD THE UNITED STATES SHIP LACKAWANNA,
In the bay of Arica,
October 28, 1880. (Received December 6.)

SIR: On the 9th instant, as I was about to take the steamer for this place, I telegraphed you from Valparaiso that fact. My reason for not being more explicit in reference to the meeting of the conference was that I had received a telegraphic message from Judge Christiancy announcing that Peru had determined that a change in the place of holding the same was necessary. I had already, as you are aware, formally invited the Chilian Government to send its ministers to Arica, and when I consulted them regarding a change of place as demanded by Peru I found them determined to insist upon the point already named. I informed Judge Christiancy by telegraph of this fact, and on receiving his reply urging me, notwithstanding this difficulty, to come to Arica with the Chilian ministers, took passage on the mail steamer for this place. Upon my arrival, on the 17th instant, I went on board the United States ship Lackawanna anchored in the bay, where I found Ministers Christiancy and Adams. The Peruvian ministers were still at Mollendo, but they were finally prevailed upon to extend their voyage to Arica, and on the 22d the conference was opened on board the Lackawanna.

At the first session Chili presented, through her ministers, a memorandum* indicating the basis upon which she would consent to terminate the war. It is unnecessary that I should here include a copy of this paper, as it will be found with the official proceedings of the conference. For the present purpose it is sufficient to state that, among other conditions, it demanded from Peru the cession of the province of Tarapacá.

The allied ministers took the memorandum with them for consideration; and in the conference, which was held on the 25th instant, Mr. Arenas, in behalf of Peru, replied at some length, in the course of which he said that the demand which had been made concerning Tarapacá presented an insurmountable obstacle to the conclusion of a peace. The Chilian ministers replied that their instructions made this demand necessary, and that it would be useless to talk of peace upon any other basis. This practically put an end to the conference. The allies proposed arbitration, it is true, but, in view of the situation, it could hardly have been expected that the suggestion would meet with a favorable reception.

As you know from my dispatches, the only basis upon which Chili was disposed to negotiate involved the cession by Peru of Tarapacá, and my fear latterly has been that the government might even be forced to recede from its position in this respect. When Mr. Christiancy was in Santiago he was quite confident that Peru would be found ready to conclude a peace upon this basis, and he so told President Pinto. It was with some surprise, therefore, that I listened to the emphatic declaration of Mr. Arenas that this condition presented an "insurmountable obstacle" to a happy termination of the negotiations. Every effort was made to induce the Peruvian ministers to present a counter-proposition, in the hope that finally an acceptable basis might be reached; but without avail. They saw fit to rest with the declaration already made, and with this, as before stated, the negotiations were practically ended.

The unhappy termination of these attempts is deeply to be deplored, the more so in that it leaves no ground to hope for peace until either Peru or Chili shall acknowledge its defeat and sue for terms. This, at least, is the present aspect of the situation as it appears to me.

I have telegraphed you to-day as follows, to wit:

EVARTS, Washington:

Conference closed without result.

OSBORN.

Preparations for the expedition to Lima are being carried forward with all possible haste, and I judge that ere the receipt of this the Chilian army will have landed in the vicinity of Callao.

I shall leave here to-morrow on the mail steamer for Santiago, and upon reaching my post shall probably have some further observations to make concerning our efforts, and the effect thereof. I can see nothing, at present, to warrant an apprehension of armed intervention by the European powers, but I will be able, perhaps, to express myself more intelligently upon this point from Santiago.

Very respectfully, &c.,

Santiago, November 11, 1880.

In a separate note I acquaint you with the result of a conference held at Arica by reason of the mediation which the Government of the United States of North America was pleased to offer to the belligerents.

Although the result of those conferences has not borne out the noble object which the Government of the United States had in view, the sentiment of sincere gratitude which its fraternal and elevated policy has awakened in the Government and the people of Chili is none the less lively.

I must likewise add that its noble policy has been faithfully and ably interpreted by the Hon. Mr. Osborn in all this negotiation, and that the delicate tact, rectitude of views, and elevated spirit of which he has given unmistakable proof, have strengthened the confidence and esteem with which from the first he has inspired this government and country.

You will take an early opportunity of signifying these sentiments to the Government of the United States, leaving a copy of this dispatch if any suggestion be made in that sense.

May God guard you.

[Translation.]

Confidential, No. 29.] REPUBLIC OF CHILI,
MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
November 22, 1880.

SIR: In a separate note I acquaint you with the result of the conference of Arica, which took place through the medium of the friendly co-operation of the Government of the United States.

This result cannot have been satisfactory, I am convinced, to that government, which had desired, as that of Chili desired, that its intervention in this delicate matter should have been accompanied by the most complete results.

For this reason I consider it necessary to set forth to you, in all frankness, the causes which induced the Government of Chili to accept the good offices of the United States, in the conviction that its noble efforts would not be barren of result.

My government very well realizes the important part which the policy of the United States justly plays in the international movements of the whole world. But before accepting its high mediation in the affairs of the Pacific, it was thought proper that the necessary precautions should be taken, in order to feel assured that its good offices would reach the desired result. With this purpose in view, my government was careful to express, with all frankness, that it could not for its part arrive at a peace without the cession by Peru and Bolivia of the territories which extend to the south of Camarones as an equitable compensation for the enormous expenses and sacrifices which have been demanded of it by the present war.

This same declaration was made by his excellency the President of the Republic, to Mr. Christiancy, in the presence of Mr. Osborn, when the former came from Lima, toward the end of August last. His excellency the President stated moreover to Mr. Christiancy, on that occasion, that his demand in this respect was absolute and final, so that it would be futile to take any steps in the direction of realizing the projected conference suggested by the Government of the United States without first obtaining the assurance that the allied governments would accept the prior condition proposed.

Mr. Christiancy, who came from Lima, and who, it was natural to suppose, would be impressed by the views of the Peruvian Government, declares in the most unmistakable and positive manner that he was persuaded that the Government of Peru would agree to the cession of territory which Chili demanded, and that therefore the conference would yield the peaceful results which the United States aimed at.

Although Mr. Christiancy was not accredited to my government, he did not for that reason cease to be a representative of the United States, in whose affirmations faith should be reposed, in view especially of the great importance of the affair which gave rise to them.

In namimg its plenipotentiaries, my government confided in the assurances given by Mr. Christiancy, and cherished well-founded hope that the conference would give a happy result.

You are already aware that Peru refused absolutely any cession of territory, and that the result of the conference did not correspond to the assurances of Mr. Christiancy.

My government considers that it could not better respond to the fraternal spirit of which the United States have given it such proofs than by declaring with sincerity, as it now does, that the failure of this conference is in no wise to be imputed to any action on the part of Chili.

I desire that you will seek a fitting occasion to give to the Government of the United States confidential knowledge of this dispatch.

May God guard you.

Confidential No. 30.] REPUBLIC OF CHILI,
MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, November 22, 1880.

SIR: Referring to the dispatch of this date, No. 29, I think it opportune to make mention of other facts connected with the strange attitude assumed by Mr. Christiancy during the preliminary negotiations which preceded the holding of the conference of Arica.

You know that in our country, as in Peru and Bolivia, the national sentiment is extremely susceptible, and is profoundly affected by any act or demonstration which is capable of being regarded as a disregard, even though involuntary, of the considerations due to the national dignity.

Knowing these sentiments, the Government of the United States endeavored with great delicacy to learn privately, and through the medium of its respective diplomatic agents, what would be the disposition of the belligerents respecting the acceptance of the mediation of the United States.

The spirit which led it to proceed in this manner was most obvious; on the one hand, a desire to be assured of the success of its conciliatory attempts, and, on the other hand, to find itself in a condition to make simultaneously to the belligerents the formal offer of its mediation. In this way it perfectly safe-guarded the natural delicacy of the three countries.

In the high character of mediator and common friend which the United States proposed to assume, it became an object of especial attention to treat the belligerents with identical consideration. It was therefore indispensable that the necessary precautions should be taken so that no one of them should appear as taking the first step toward asking or seeking for peace.

Mr. Osborn seconded most faithfully, in our judgment, the noble policy of his government. The 5th of August last, he began by inquiring privately, in an interview, what would be the disposition of my government with respect to the mediation which the United States proposed to offer.

The reply given on the 10th of the same month informs Mr. Osborn that Chili would have no objection to accepting it, provided that it had the assurances of equal acceptance on the part of the allies.

Two months later, that is to say, on the 6th of October, Mr. Osborn, for the first time, offered to my government, as you may see by the accompanying copy No. 1, the formal mediation of the United States, and on the 7th, as appears in copy No. 2, he received the reply in which the Government of Chili informed him that his offer of mediation was accepted on our part.

Meanwhile, in the time which elapsed between the conversation held with Mr. Osborn, in the early part of August, and the formal offer of meditation which was made in the beginning of October, Mr. Christiancy thought it proper to come from Lima to Santiago, where he remained several days, toward the end of August, in order to be able to return in safety to that capital. The unexpected appearance of Mr. Christiancy in Chili could not fail, however, to attract attention, causing the very general impression that the sudden voyage of the American minister was intimately related to the question of mediation.

The disquietude which was occasioned expressed itself in Congress, wherein my government was interpolated touching this matter, about the middle of September.

The government responded, stating what had theretofore occurred in the premises, that is to say, that there did not exist any formal proposal of meditation, since there had merely been exchanged with the minister of the United States, Mr. Osborn, certain views in a private form concerning the projected office of mediation.

A few days later the journals of Lima published a note from the foreign minister of Peru, dated the 14th September, and addressed to Mr. Christiancy. In this note occurred the following:

> Informed by you concerning your voyage to Santiago de Chili, to which place you had gone with the object of proposing to the government of that republic the mediation of the United States of America, in order to negotiate a peace with Peru and Bolivia, a mediation which had been accepted by Chili, in virtue whereof you proposed it to my government, the latter resolved, after conferring with the minister plenipotentiary of the republic of Bolivia, to accept the offered mediation, &c.

It is seen, therefore, by the paragraph I have quoted, that at the same time that my government declared, toward the middle of September, in the chamber of deputies, that up to that time the mediation in question had not been formally accepted, nor even officially offered, Mr. Christiancy was affirming, in his turn, to the Government of Peru, that he had come to our country for the purpose of offering it to my government, and that in view of the acceptance given by this government, he made a like offer to the government of that republic.

The affirmations made by my government before one of the branches of the legislative body, and the affirmations of Mr. Christiancy to the Government of Peru, are altogether irreconcilable.

It does not appertain to me to qualify herein the motives which Mr. Christiancy may have obeyed in making such a declaration. My purpose is simply limited to setting upon record that the affirmations of my government rested faithfully upon the truth.

Mr. Christiancy did not present to my government credentials authorizing him to act either in respect of the projected mediation or in respect of any negotiation whatever. He was, therefore, in our country simply as a distinguished guest, and in no wise as the authorized organ of the Government. If Mr. Christiancy had made, as he affirms, the offer of mediation, my government would have found itself under the painful necessity of rejecting such offer, because it did not conform to the usual practices between two nations; neither would it have been natural for the Government of the United States which, with such delicate tact, had put forth its conciliatory efforts, to have set aside its official representative in Chili, Mr. Osborn, in order to confide the continuation of this delicate business to a simple visitor, worthy of all respect, but lacking towards us the representative character.

These well founded considerations led my government to think that perhaps the note of the foreign minister of Peru might not faithfully express the ideas of Mr. Christiancy, and it has awaited until now, but in vain, a correction on the part of that high functionary, which would re-establish the truth of the facts.

Subsequently there came to the hands of my government a note which the same Mr. Christiancy deemed it proper to address to Mr. Lynch, chief of the Chilian expedition operating upon the north of Peru, and that note has confirmed, to a certain extent, the ideas which the minister of Peru attributes to Mr. Christiancy with respect to the form in which the mediation was offered. I inclose herewith, in copies designated as numbers 3, 4, and 5, the note of the minister of Peru to which I have made reference, and also the dispatches exchanged between Mr. Christiancy and Mr. Lynch. It is not for the present a part of my purpose to take note of the proceeding employed by the minister of the United States in addressing himself to a military employé of Chili, for the purpose of making representations to him, which, from the high source from which they emanated, might induce the chief of our forces to deviate from the instructions of his government. My purpose at this time is simply to inform you with precision of the various steps which preceded the conference of Arica.

You will take an opportunity to express these facts to the Government of the United States in confidential form.

May God guard you.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Chili, October 6, 1880.

SIR: Your excellency is aware that on the 6th of August last I approached the honorable President of the Republic of Chili with a view of learning whether the Government of Chili was disposed to enter into a conference with the ministers of the other belligerent republics in the present war, in order to reach an honorable peace under the mediation in the shape of good offices of the United States. Your excellency was pleased to inform me, in our interview of the 10th of August, that the government of Chili would accept the good offices of the United States in the suggested form, if Peru and Bolivia signified on their part their acceptance of this idea.

The conditions indicated by your excellency in this interview having been complied with, I now have the honor to offer formally to the government of your excellency the mediation of the Government of the United States, in order that it may be exercised in the proposed manner.

The form which I suggested in the interview alluded to had in view the celebration of a conference of the ministers duly authorized of the three belligerent republics on board of an American vessel of war, at Arica, in the presence and with the friendly aid and assistance of the representatives of the United States near the belligerent government.

With sentiments of high consideration I have the honor to be, sir, your excellency's most respectful and obedient servant,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, October 7, 1880.

SIR: I have received the note which you were pleased to address to me under date of yesterday. After recalling therein the steps you have taken with a view to ascertaining if my government were disposed to enter upon the peace conference with the other belligerents under the mediation in the form of good offices of the United States, and recalling, also, the favorable disposition shown by my government provided that those of Peru and Bolivia should accept on their part a like suggestion, you inform me that this condition having been already complied with, the time has come to offer formally to the Government of Chili, as you now do, the mediation of the United States.

His Excellency the President of the Republic, to whose knowledge I have brought your dispatch, has charged me to convey to you the expression of his gratitude for the noble interest with which the Government of the United States endeavors to bring about the restoration of peace between Chili and the allied republics.

My government accepts the mediation in the form of good offices which you offer to me in the name of the United States, likewise the proceeding, which you suggest to carry it into effect.

I must before all, repeat here, in order to avoid doubts and ambiguities, that this acceptance does not involve the suspension of all hostilities.

I improve this opportunity to renew to you the sentiments of high consideration with which I have the honor to subscribe myself.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS AND WORSHIP,
Lima, September 14, 1880.

Mr. MINISTER: Informed by your excellency respecting your voyage to Santiago de Chili, to which place you went for the purpose of proposing to the government of that republic the mediation of the United States of America, in order to negotiate peace with Peru and Bolivia, which mediation had been accepted by Chili, and in virtue of which you proposed the same to my government, the latter decided, after conferring with the minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Bolivia, to accept the offered mediation solely in deference to the Government of the United States, and notwithstanding that the motives of the war declared by Chili, which took Peru by surprise, and the manner in which it has been conducted from the first had convinced us how far Chili was from the path of moderation and justice, the sole path in which peace is possible, as I had the honor to say to you in a verbal conference on this business.

The acts which the Chilian forces have, notwithstanding, done at more than 100 leagues from our army, and from any objective military point, acts of pillage, incendiarism, devastation, and all manner of outrages against private property of natives and foreigners, especially after having accepted the mediation of the government of your excellency, if not compatible with the consideration which is due to the friendly mediator, cannot but confirm that presumption, awakening a spirit of indignation difficult to control. My government confines itself to expressing that sentiment, leaving to that of your excellency and to your excellency yourself the due appreciation of such conduct. My government thinks that if the love of peace and the consideration which it feels for the government and people of the United States can decide it, notwithstanding the evident justice of its cause and its complete confidence in the final result of the war, and the injuries and losses sustained, to enter upon negotiations for peace, it is natural that such motives should be entirely destroyed by the actual and melancholy evidence that we are contending with those who in such manner violate the laws of civilization and the respect which cultured people owe to themselves.

It is pleasing to me to avail myself of this opportunity to offer to your excellency my considerations of especial esteem.

*Mr. Christiancy to the commander of the Chilian forces.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, September 13, 1880.

SIR: I have just arrived from Santiago, where, in company with the American Minister, Mr. Osborn, I had a full and free conference with the government of Chili, which has accepted the mediation of the United States, in order to negotiate peace with Peru and Bolivia. I am now authorized to say that Peru accepts such mediation and that the negotiations for peace will be immediately undertaken. When I conferred with the government of Chili I was not authorized to say that Peru would accept the mediation of the United States, but now I am authorized to say that Peru accepts it and that the ambassadors of all the belligerents will meet for this purpose in the early days of the coming month of October.

I do not interfere, nor can I pretend to interfere, with the instructions which you may have from your government concerning the steps which you have been ordered to take, but I hope that you will appreciate my representations, and those of the government which I represent, which is equally the friend of all the belligerents, if I suggest to you that, in so far as your orders permit, it would be prudent and would contribute to obtain a speedy peace and avoid all destruction and causes of irritation which may not be rendered obligatory by the orders you have; and I permit myself to add that there is a very marked sentiment, as I know, among the ministers of the foreign governments, both here and in Santiago, against the destruction of purely private property which is not demanded by the military necessity of attacking the armed forces of the enemy and against accepting contributions from them, and especially because such destructions may be committed or such contributions imposed upon the private property which is known to belong to the citizens of friendly and neutral nations, and from which proceedings, as you will readily comprehend, may arise many complications and complaints. The government of Chili will be immediately informed that Peru has accepted the friendly mediation of the United States, and of its readiness to enter upon negotiation upon such auspices.

If I had been able, when I was in Santiago, to assure the government of Chili of the readiness of Peru to enter upon negotiations in which Chili should take part, I would feel inclined to believe that if the Chilian expedition had been about to depart it would have been under orders somewhat modified and less severe than those which you now probably have, but I cannot ask you to adopt my opinion, and recognize entirely the fact that you must act in view of your own judgment of the circumstances and as the orders of your government demand.

Permit me to conclude by expressing to your excellency the respect and high consideration with which I subscribe myself your excellency's friend and obedient servant,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

Mr. Lynch to Mr. Christiancy.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE CHILIAN DIVISION IN THE NORTH OF PERU,
On board the Itata, September 17, 1880.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your polite notes of the 13th and 14th instant, in which your excellency is pleased to bring to my knowledge the laudable efforts which have been made towards the belligerent governments for the purpose of bringing about an honorable peace between them, through the medium of the mediation of the Government of the United States, of which your excellency is the worthy representative at Lima.

Your excellency, in making known to me what has been done to that end, and what is hoped for from the good offices (of the United States) has been pleased to indicate to me the conduct, which in your judgment, I should follow in the military operations which my government has confided to me, in view of the good will with which the belligerent governments have accepted the mediation of that of your excellency.

It would have been very gratifying to me, Mr. Minister, to accept your manner of thinking if I had not been informed to-day by the commanding officer of our squadron, that the government of Peru is continuing its operations against the vessels of the Chilian navy.

The repetition of such insidious attempts on the part of that government, at the time when your excellency assures me of the desire it expresses to negotiate for peace, convinces me that its purpose is not genuine.

For this reason I see no well-founded motive for suspending the military operations which have been confided to me in the absence of a special instruction from my government.

So far as concerns respect for the property of neutrals which, your excellency is pleased to recommend to me in the notes, which I have the honor to answer, your excellency may rest assured that I will proceed in conformity with the prescriptions of international law.

In conclusion, I beg your excellency to accept the high esteem with which I subscribe myself your obedient servant,

PATRICIO LYNCH.

No. 108.

Mr. Osborn to Mr. Evarts.

No. 181.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, November 23, 1880. (Received January 3, 1881.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a circular note addressed by this government to the diplomatic representatives in Santiago, explanatory of Chili's purposes in the war in which she is engaged, as also an English translation thereof.

The government evidently fears that the discussion in the Arica conference may have left an impression that in exacting Tarapacá as a condition for peace, Chili has proclaimed the right of conquest, and the minister's note seems to be directed mainly to the removal of any such belief. It is insisted, as you will observe, that the territory mentioned was demanded as indemnity for damages sustained by Chili because of the war-damages which, it is claimed, Peru is powerless to liquidate in any other way.

The minister also touches upon the proposition made by the allies in the conference to submit the questions in dispute to the arbitration of the United States, justifying the action of his government upon the ground that the results of the war have given to Chili certain rights which cannot well be determined in the manner proposed. As I have heretofore written to you, my judgment is that the proposition for arbitration was not made with the expectation that it would be seriously entertained. Had the reverse been true, I assume that it would have been submitted in some practicable form, rather than in the intangible shape in which we find it.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

[Inclosure 1, in No. 181.—Translation.]

Chilian circular to the foreign representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, November 10, 1880.

SIR: At the commencement of the war into which Chili was provoked by the injustice of Peru and Bolivia, my government made haste to lay before the friendly powers the all-powerful reasons that compelled her to seek in war satisfaction for her grossly offended honor and seriously imperiled interests, ends which, notwithstanding Chili's repeated efforts, it had been impossible to attain by conciliatory measures.

The absence of all military organization consequent upon years of peace; the habits of the people of Chili, devoted to peaceful toil and industry; the financial crisis that then weighed upon the country, the wholly unarmed condition of the republic, which had reached the point even of disbanding the national guard, her sale at public auction of a number of her war vessels; will demonstrate to your excellency's government how distant from Chili was the thought of her tranquillity being interrupted, how sincere was her love of peace.

The republic of Chili would never have abandoned her peaceful attitude, had it not been for the continued violations of her most sacred treaty obligations on the part of Bolivia; the discovery of the existence of a secret compact against her integrity, entered into between Peru and Bolivia, at a time when the outward relations of these powers with Chili were of the most friendly character, and finally the outrages committed against her citizens, all of which compelled her to resort to arms in vindication of her rights. Involved thus in a war against her will, and after having exhausted all peaceful means, she found herself compelled to accept it, as a last resort, and she now relies to the end upon the justice of her cause and the unfailing zeal of her people.

The hopes entertained by Chili have not been disappointed by the course of events; since the declaration of war her navy has annihilated the maritime power of Peru, and now holds her principal seaports under blockade. Her armies, in numerous engagements, have everywhere overcome her enemies; and she is now the mistress of all the Bolivian coast, and a very considerable portion of that of Peru. An uninterrupted series of defeats have made it impossible for the allied forces to recuperate their losses, and rendered them powerless to resist our attacks. In the face of events already consummated, and the stern reality of what has already occurred, the attempts made by them to conceal the truth or misrepresent facts are futile.

Under this condition of affairs, so unquestionably in favor of Chili, the Government of the United States, through its representatives near the three republics, tendered their good offices as mediator for the re-establishment of peace. The Government of Chili, true to its traditions and sincere in its international policy of loyal friendship with all nations, with a firm resolution that she would interpose no obstacle toward securing peace upon a firm and lasting basis, accepted the offer of the great Republic of the North, notwithstanding her repeated successes against the allied powers.

Mediation having been accepted by Peru and Bolivia, it was also accepted by Chili, and for this purpose a conference was held at Arica. The mode and result of this meeting your excellency will find by a perusal of the copies of the documents I have the honor to herewith transmit.

By the protocol at the first meeting of the conference, a memorandum was submitted of the conditions that Chili deemed essential for the attainment of peace, which, as I will proceed to explain to your excellency, were the only ones that could have permanently and equitably put an end to the war.

In view of the situation of the belligerents, the series of victories obtained by Chili, both on land and sea; the enormous expenditure of blood and treasure that the war had cost the country; the blind tenacity with which the enemy persisted in carrying it on, thereby uselessly increasing the expense and injury; the outrages committed on our citizens whose property was confiscated and they expelled from the country; the obstacles thrown in the way of the development of our industries and commerce; in view, I repeat, of these antecedents, it was not reasonable to suppose that Chili would appear at the conference of Arica with other than a firm resolution to insist upon an indemnity that should, in part at least, compensate for so many and so great sacrifices on her part.

But two courses presented themselves that could make the attempt at an understanding and peace a success. One, the surrender of the territory according to the first clause of the memorandum submitted to the plenipotentiaries of the allies, as indemnity for the expenses and damages of the war, or the exaction of a stipulated sum of money upon the same grounds, Chili holding the territory now in her possession as security and until the final payment of such indemnity.

The adoption of the latter course found an insuperable obstacle in the deplorable condition of the finances of both Bolivia and Peru. For years past the embarrassed condition of the allied powers has been well known. Crushed by the weight of an enormous debt, without credit abroad, and, what is still worse, without order or stability at home, they had totally ignored their obligations. Unable to meet the interest on their debt, the fact of the bonds of Peru appreciating in value upon the occupancy of her territory by Chili, will show the point of insolvency she had reached in the estimation of Europe. How, then, would it have been possible for Chili to obtain from such powers the payment of the indemnity to which she was justly entitled?

An arrangement by which Chili should hold the territory occupied by her armies as security for the payment of the expenses of the war by means of the income derived from the same, was wholly inadmissible. The holding of this territory would necessarily involve the military occupation of it by the conquering power, and this could not be done without a heavy outlay to be paid by the allies. On any other terms the result, as far as regarded Chili, would be illusive. Such an arrangement never could have put an end to the war; however moderate the sum agreed upon as indemnity might be, it, increased by interest and the charges of a military occupation, would very soon place the sum beyond the power of the debtors to pay, while the irregular condition of affairs in the territory, by reason of the coexisting authority of Peru and Bolivia on the one side, and the forces of Chili on the other, would be productive of serious conflicts that could not long delay in again resulting in war, thus defeating the prime purpose that Chili has in view, the attainment of a solid and lasting peace.

The security being thus inadequate, Chili had no other resource but to demand the surrender of the territory as the only means of securing indemnity for her sacrifices and expenses. The government, in insisting on this stipulation in its instructions to its plenipotentiaries, did not simply seek an extension of its frontier. The faithful exponent of the feelings of its people, it adopted the only means that the depressed condition of the finances of the allies rendered it possible for them to grant; one that circumstances had imposed, and which they were powerless to change.

The allied governments will no doubt endeavor to make it appear, as did their plenipotentiaires at the conference, that Chili maintains the right of conquest.

The truth, however, will prevail in spite of all that may be said. The fact, clear and indisputable, alone remains, and that is, that Chili is entitled to indemnity for the expenditures and sacrifices incurred by her in the war, and that the allied governments have not the means of satisfying them.

The surrender of the territory furthermore involved on the part of the successful power a recognition of the mortgages and incumbrances created upon it by Peru to her foreign creditors.

The Republic of Chili possesses an extensive and fertile soil whereon her people may toil in peace. She has always lived in harmony, devoted to her own internal improvements. She has ever given proofs of her desire to seek a peaceful solution of all international questions. She has always been ready to defend the integrity and independence of her sister republics, when threatened. She has been the champion of Peru herself, and never could she have suspected that her demand that Bolivia should live up to her treaty obligations would have been the cause of war. The Republic of Chili, with such antecedents, never appeared at the Arica conference for the purpose of maintaining the principle of the right of conquest. She appeared there solely for the purpose of obtaining indemnity for the expenses of the war, and the assurance of a solid and lasting peace in the future. Such was her right and the natural consequence of the justice of her cause, confirmed by the successes of her armies. The powers that forced her into an unjust war and that still insist on carrying it on, notwithstanding their reverses, are the ones responsible for the sacrifices and damages of which they were the cause. Chili under these circumstances commits no more act of conquest than does a creditor commit an act of despoliation when he seeks payment of the debt due him through the real estate of his debtor who has nothing else with which to discharge his obligation.

The demand of Chili is, furthermore, founded on other considerations not less worthy of notice. The territory belonging to the allied powers, lying south of the Camarones Valley, consists for the most part of desert lands with a very small native population. The greater part of its occupants are foreigners, of which the Chilians are the most numerous. It is they who are the principal owners and workers of the country. It is their capital and enterprise that have given value and importance to those hitherto barren wastes. The peculiar topographical conditions of this territory, the fact of its being at so great a distance from the seat of its own government, while its commerce and traffic largely depended on Chilians, made the character of the surrender demanded, as far as national susceptibilities were concerned, much less obnoxious than may have been the case in other instances of the annexation of neighboring territories. National susceptibilities, as is well known, do not exist in that locality, and this would have gone very far toward facilitating an easy assimilation of its elements, tending to the development of its wealth and prosperity.

Chili seeks that compensation to which she is justly entitled; she seeks a guarantee of peace for the future. In assuring these important ends, she proposes as a basis of arrangement a means that is not now and never has been ignored among civilized powers. Her frank and open demands should not be viewed with suspicion, nor should they inspire the other portions of the American continent with any feelings of uneasiness.

The other conditions demanded by Chili are the natural sequences of the first condition. They are in perfect harmony with the obvious and rightful considerations emanating from the subject.

The war has not only entailed enormous sacrifices of treasure and of blood upon Chili as a nation, but it has also been productive of similar sacrifices to her commerce and industries, and to her private citizens who were business residents of the territory of the allied powers from whence they were forcibly expelled after being despoiled of their real estate, their capital, and their personal property. The second and third stipulations of the memorandum provide for the indemnification of such injured parties. Their future, after the manner in which they were treated, cannot be a matter of indifference to my government.

The fourth stipulation is open to no objection whatever. It simply provides for the delivery to Chili of a transport that was the property of the republic.

The fifth becomes a matter of absolute necessity, when we take it into consideration that the war grew out of a secret treaty, and that the incentive to the treaty of alliance now sought to be brought about between Peru and Bolivia, as stated by these governments themselves, was to more effectually hostilize Chili. Such a treaty would be a standing menace to the peace that Chili so earnestly desires.

The sixth stipulation, with reference to the holding of certain territory as a guarantee for the fulfillment of the other conditions imposed on the allied powers, is absolutely necessary.

The seventh and last becomes important, in order to give to the peace sought to be obtained that stability which the interests of the belligerents themselves, as well as the other powers of the Pacific, demand. If the northern frontier of Chili should be established at the Camarones Valley, and the port of Arica thereafter fortified and converted into an impregnable fortress, it would be a constant source of danger to Chili, obliging her also to fortify her own frontier. In either case peace would always be in jeopardy, and this may be avoided by making the said port for all time simply and exclusively a commercial port.

Furthermore, it is known that when the boundaries of Bolivia were arranged, she was given a geographical position inimical to the logical development of her resources. It is also known that the port of Arica is the most suitable and best adapted to the commercial requirements of Bolivia. This fact would render its fortification still more dangerous and improper.

Before concluding the present communication I deem it proper to notice two imporant points submitted to the Arica conference, viz, the proposition of the plenipoentiaries of the allied powers to bring the war to a close through the arbitration of he power then acting as mediator, and the interpretation given by his excellency

Mr. Baptista, the Bolivian plenipotentiary, to the secret treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, so mysteriously entered into between Peru and Bolivia in 1873, and which has been the cause of the lengthened struggle in which we now find ourselves involved.

Unquestionably the method most in harmony with the interests of humanity, the one best calculated to preserve friendly international relations, is, in cases of conflict, to submit to the arbitration of a third power, which might impartially and without prejudice decide as to which side was right; but this method has its appropriate time for application; unfortunately, the time at which it was suggested by the plenipotentiaries of the allied powers deprived it completely of its applicability. When diplomacy had exhausted all its resources and war appeared to be inevitable, Chili proposed arbitration to Bolivia and it was peremptorily declined. War was the consequence, and your excellency is aware of the results and sufferings that have followed. Chili, through her efforts, has obtained decisive advantages over her adversaries, and has by reason of the war become invested with clear and important rights. What point, therefore, would the arbitrator be called upon to decide? The question of rights is one no longer open to discussion; it is now simply a question of accepting or declining through war what has already been accomplished by war.

Success has its obligations, and they increase in the ratio of the sacrifices and the risks incurred in obtaining it. These obligations are still further increased when dealing with an enemy who, although defeated by land and sea, tenaciously holds out in the struggle when resistance is vain.

Bolivia rejected arbitration when it was offered by Chili; Peru became her ally with a full knowledge of all the facts, and it is now both logical and natural that she should accept the consequences of a war that she might have prevented, but did not choose to prevent. If such was not the case, if it should be held that a power is obliged to suspend hostilities at the request of its antagonist, when the antagonist had provoked the war and been unsuccessful in its issues, war would cease to be a right. In the midst of the train of evils that it entails it would fail to achieve the only benefit to be derived from it, that of compelling the vanquished to repair the injury they had caused, and to respect in the future the rights of others in accordance with international treaties. But for these considerations Chili would have accepted the proposed arbitration with full confidence in the impartiality of the arbitrator.

With regard to the interpretation of the secret treaty of 1873 given by his excellency Mr. Baptista at the conference, I will take occasion to say that the circumstances under which it was negotiated, and the means adopted to give it effect, show a purpose directly the opposite of the one sought to be attributed to it, viz, that of strengthening the fraternity and union of the republics of America. In no other light can explanation be given for the secrecy that was observed with regard to it for more than six years; for the irregular manner in which it was passed by the congresses of Peru and Bolivia; the denial of its existence by the former of these powers when interrogated by Chili with regard to its existence; and, finally, the exclusion of Chili from it when Chili at the same time was the ally of the powers that were conspiring against her. The treaty was a measure directed against Chili, and my government so demonstrated at the commencement of the war.

The foregoing statement I trust will convince the sober judgment of your excellency's government that Chili took part in the conference with a sincere desire of putting an end to the war; that the conditions submitted by her plenipotentiaries were the only ones that could be productive of a lasting and equitable peace; that her conditions were neither exaggerated nor onerous under the circumstances in which the belligerents are now placed, and that whatever may be the consequences of the continuance of the war, the allies, through their persistence in refusing to accede to the just demands of Chili, are alone responsible for it.

My government, sir, profoundly regrets that the Arica conference has been barren of results, and that the noble efforts of the mediating power in its endeavor to re-establish peace have been sterile, for all of which efforts Chili is sincerely grateful.

With the request that your excellency will be pleased to make this statement known to your government, I have to beg you will accept the assurance of my distinguished consideration, and remain your most, &c.,

MELQUIADES VALDERRAMA.

No. 182.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, November 30, 1880. (Received January 21.)

SIR: On the 21st instant, I received the following cablegram:

WASHINGTON, November 19.

OSBORN, Minister, Santiago, Chili:

You are authorized to unite with your colleagues in pressing upon Chili the adoption of the measures agreed upon in a diplomatic conference at Lima for securing the lives and property of neutrals when Lima is attacked. This authority is to be used only in case these measures are approved by Christiancy and yourself as within neutral policy and this concurrent representation seems to you useful. You are also authorized to join in asking a direct answer from Chili, if in your judgment the requirement is justified by the situation. Telegraph your action.

EVARTS,
Secretary, Washington.

A few brief interviews with my colleagues touching the details of the measures adopted at the Lima diplomatic conference, and the steps hitherto taken, having in view their acceptance by this government, served to impress me with the belief that any movement now by this legation in the direction indicated in your dispatch would be exceedingly impolitic, and this belief was strengthened to conviction by the informal conversation which I subsequently had with the minister of foreign relations, Mr. Valderrama.

As you know, the measures referred to provide for the protection of all private property, neutral and otherwise, in Lima, and determine the manner in which the Chilian army may bombard, occupy, and police the city. This programme was submitted to the consideration of the Chili cabinet early in October by the European representatives. In response, this government declared that it was its purpose to protect as far as possible the interests of neutrals in Lima, but maintained, in justification of a refusal to adopt unqualifiedly the measures proposed, that such action might tend to seriously embarrass the army in its legitimate operations. With this answer, it seems, the European governments were not satisfied; hence this renewed effort in the direction indicated.

I have had frequent conversations with Minister Valderrama concerning the protection of lives and property of neutrals in Lima in case that city should be attacked, and on the 24th instant, in an interview with him, I intimated a desire to know what measures had been adopted to that end. He was quite unreserved in his answer, asserting that it was the sincere desire of his government that neutral interests should be fully protected, but justified the refusal to adopt the measures proposed by my colleagues upon the ground heretofore stated; that is, that the army might thereby become seriously crippled in its proper operations against the enemy. He informed me, however, that, with a view of affording the protection desired, the general in command had been directed to confer with the dean of the diplomatic corps at Lima, and, in so far as the same could be done without interfering with the legitimate operations of the army, to adopt his suggestions to that end. An English translation of the note of Minister Valderrama, repeating the assurances given me in conversation, will be found inclosed.

In addition to what is said in the minister's note, I may add that I have known for some time that the government was desirous of avoiding a scandal growing out of the operations at Lima, and that precautions were being taken to that end. The minister of war is with the army in the field, as is also Mr. Altamirano, the intendente of Valparaiso, who has gone north as secretary for the general-in-chief. These gentlemen are men of high standing, and I am assured that the chief reason for their attendance upon the army is the solicitude of the government upon this subject.

On the 26th instant I telegraphed you as follows:

EVARTS, Washington:

Regard pressure of Lima measures useless and impolitic, Government adopts stringent measures for protection of neutrals in Lima, but rejects European pressure.

OSBORN.

I am credibly informed that the Lima measures were not pressed upon this government by the European representatives with much earnestness; but, be that as it may, the response to their efforts was substantially the same as that received by me.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

REPUBLIC OF CHILI, MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, November 25, 1880.

SIR: Referring to the conference that I had yesterday with you, and in which you expressed a desire to know if my government had taken any measures for the purposes of protecting, in as far as may be possible, the persons and interests of foreigners located in Lima and Callao, in case hostilities against said cities should be undertaken, I now have the honor to repeat to you what, in that respect, I expressed to you verbally.

My government feels a deep interest in that the persons and property of foreigners should remain as far as possible exempt from all damage in the future operations that it may be necessary to undertake against those cities, and to this end has recommended very especially to the chief of our forces that he should respect these persons and properties. In order that this protection should be more efficacious, my government has directed that the chief of our forces should hear all the suggestions that the dean of the diplomatic corps in Lima should be pleased to make to him in this regard, and to accept them in so far as they should not be opposed to or should not embarrass the legitimate operations of our army. My government believes that on the field of actual operations the Chilian commander, upon the representations of the dean of the diplomatic corps, will be the better able to protect the important interests of neutrals, which the government ardently desires may be protected in the military operations which our army has been directed to carry out.

No. 115.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 27, 1880.

SIR: My attention has been called to the following passage of your remarks at the conference held at Arica, Peru, on the 15th of October last, as reported in the second protocol of those conferences:

"His excellency Mr. Osborn remarked that it seemed proper to him, as well as to his colleagues, to place upon record that the Government of the United States does not seek the position of arbiter in this question. A strict compliance with the duties inherent to that position would involve much trouble and great labor, and, while he could not doubt that his government would accept the position if properly requested to do so, it was nevertheless proper that it be understood that its representatives did not court that distinction.

As it is not quite clear what the meaning and scope of your remark on that occasion was, I will thank you for explanation upon the subject. There was no impropriety in your making it clear to the representatives of the belligerent states that this government had no desire to unduly urge its arbitration upon them. If, however, it was your purpose to convey the impression that we would not cheerfully assume any labor and trouble incident to arbitration in the interest of peace and the service of justice, you have not correctly appreciated the views and wishes of this government. It is the sincere desire of the President to see an honorable and lasting peace secured among the South American republics now engaged in war, and he will shrink from no effort or responsibility which can properly tend to the accomplishment of such a desirable result.

In order to remove a possibly wrong impression which your language may have made upon the representatives of the belligerent powers, you will read this instruction to the minister for foreign affairs of Chili; and I will instruct Mr. Christiancy and Mr. Adams to read a copy of it to the ministers for foreign affairs of Peru and Bolivia, respectively.

No. 187.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, January 3, 1881. (Received February 24.)

SIR: In the circular note which minister Valderrama addressed to the diplomatic corps on the 10th of November last, a copy and translation of which accompanied my No. 181, is found the following sentence:

> The cession (meaning the cession of Tarapacá by Peru), carried with it, moreover, the obligation on the part of the victorious nation of accepting as its own all the hypothecated bonds given by the Peruvian Government to its foreign creditors.

The guano beds in the Tarapacá district, as is well known, have been mortgaged by Peru to secure the payment of a large part of her public debt, and the expression here quoted was very generally accepted as a formal recognition of these obligations in the event of a change in the sovereignty of the district. Subsequent discussion in the newspapers and in the two houses of Congress, however, apparently developed the fact that the country was not prepared to accept this doctrine as its policy, and the minister has felt himself called upon to explain in another note, a copy of which I herewith inclose, with English translation.

It will be observed that the interpretation which had so very generally been accepted was entirely erroneous, and that the minister does not desire to be understood as having committed his government to the payment of any part of the Peruvian debt or the recognition of any of its mortgages, but that all claims in the district referred to are to be settled in accordance with the principles of international law.

If the influences which have driven minister Valderrama into writing the inclosed note shall continue in the ascendency, I fear that Peruvian mortgage bonds are likely to remain a very precarious investment.

I am not aware that any of these mortgage securities are held by American citizens. The loan for which they were issued was raised in Europe, principally in Great Britain and France.

Mr. Valderrama to Mr. Osborn.

REPUBLIC OF CHILI, MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, December 24, 1880.

SIR: On the 10th of November ultimo I had the honor of addressing you informing you of the result of the conference held on board the Lackawanna in the bay of Arica, in the last days of October.

In view of the instructions given to our plenipotentiaries in the event of certain contingencies arising in connection with the conference, I then stated that the ceding of the territory claimed by Chili would have implied on the part of Chili a recognition of the mortgages executed by Peru to her foreign creditors. This expression has not been properly understood, as appears from the interpellations directed to the government in both houses of Congress.

By some, without taking into consideration the special circumstances of the case, the circular of the 10th of November was understood to be an absolute definition of the rights of creditors in the nature of an assertion of a principle; such an interpretation of it is not correct. The statement referred to is intimately connected with the instructions given to our plenipotentiaries, and both refer to the occurrences of certain contingencies that never took place.

It is known that the conference at Arica was productive of no result, and that matters continued in the same condition they were before the said conference was held. This statement thus becomes merely an expression of a fact which might have occurred had the allies accepted all the conditions with which it was connected. It might also have been a result of certain compensations or advantages provided for in the instructions, but it embraces no recognition of a right as has been supposed by some.

It was not intended in the circular alluded to, to define the rights of creditors. Its scope was confined to certain facts that had already occurred and others that might have grown out of the Arica conference if certain circumstances then in view had taken place. The failure of the negotiations left matters in the same condition in which it found them, and consequently the rights alleged by certain parties with regard to the Tarapacá district will be settled according to the precepts of international law. This is the line of conduct which the government of Chili has observed from the beginning, and in which it has the purpose of continuing.

With this explanation of the true meaning of the statement which has been so imperfectly understood, I avail myself of the opportunity of offering to you the sentiments of high consideration with which I am, &c.,

SIR: Referring to your instruction No. 108, conveying information of the convention concluded between the representatives of Chili and the United States of Colombia, at Bogata, in September last, for the preservation of peace between those republics, and directing me as to my duties in the premises, I have the honor herewith to inclose a copy, with English translation, of a note received by me from the minister of foreign relations, together with a copy of my reply.

You will observe that the minister, after informing me of the execution of the convention referred to, says that it meets with the approval of his government, and will be presented to the National Congress for its action. He adds a request to be informed whether the designation of the President of the United States to act as arbitrator in certain contingencies mentioned in the convention will prove acceptable to the Government of the United States.

My reply, as you will see, is an assurance that the President will deem himself privileged in being permitted to respond to the flattering trust reposed in him, if his services should be required.

REPUBLIC OF CHILI,
DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Santiago, December 23, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that on the 3d of September last a convention "ad referendum" was entered into at the city of Bogota by the minister of foreign relations of Colombia and the chargé d'affaires of Chili near that republic, copy of which accompanies the present, by the terms of which both countries agree to submit to arbitration the decision of all questions that may arise between them and which it may be found to be impossible to decide by diplomacy.

My government has no hesitancy in accepting the principle of arbitration thus established, and will submit the convention to the National Congress.

With regard to the designation of his excellency the President of the United States of America as umpire in the cases specified in Article II, my government hopes that it will not prove unacceptable to your excellency's government, and that in it your government will see a reciprocation of the many and strong proofs of friendly feeling that Chili has received from it.

Notwithstanding these marks of confidence, I am directed by his excellency the President of the Republic, in bringing this subject to your notice, to inquire whether the Government of the United States will give a favorable consideration to the selection which has been made of the President of the Union for the cases referred to.

I avail myself of the occasion to renew the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of the 23d ultimo, inclosing a copy of the convention entered into on the 3d of September last "ad referendum" between the Republic of Chili and that of Colombia, providing for the settlement by arbitration of all such questions as may arise between the two governments which it may be found impossible to arrange through diplomatic intercourse, designating at the same time the President of the United States as umpire, and inquiring whether the Government of the United States would lend favorable consideration to the selection therein made of its President as umpire for the cases provided for by the convention referred to.

In reply I have to say that I can best answer your inquiry by transcribing the text of a communication on this subject received from my government under date of October 13, and which is as follows:

"That should occasion for arbitration arise under the treaty, the President will deem himself privileged in being able to respond to the flattering trust reposed in him, and evincing the friendship of the people and Government of the United States for both republics."

I may add that my government experiences the liveliest satisfaction at the course proposed by your excellency's government and that of the Republic of Colombia, regarding it as a concurrence in a great principle successfully inaugurated and put in practice by the Government of the United States.

SIR: The information which the Department gleans from the press reports that the Chilian forces have taken Lima and Callao, and that the Peruvian forces and government have fallen back into the interior.

Under these circumstances, of which I have as yet no confirmation from yourself and Mr. Christiancy, it is naturally to be inferred that the time has come when the Peruvian Government would not refuse to treat for peace upon any supportable basis, and that it would turn to the good offices or mediation of this government, with hope, if not expectancy, of an end to the war being reached.

I have, to-day, instructed Mr. Christiancy to press upon the Government of Peru, and upon such Chilian authorities as he may have access to, the earnest desire of this government to bring about a peace without delay and upon reasonable and honorable terms, compatible with the true welfare of all the belligerents, so as to be lasting. I have directed him to urge the desire of this government with all that pressure which, under the circumstances, may appear to him to be admissible and proper to the gravity of the occasion.

Your own urgent efforts will be exerted in the same direction.

No. 195.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, February 24, 1881. (Received April 5.)

SIR: Referring to your instruction No. 115, wherein you quote from remarks made by me at the Arica conference, touching the suggestions there made concerning the submission of the questions in dispute to the President of the United States as arbiter, and in which you express an apprehension that possibly I may not have correctly interpreted the views of the Government of the United States in that regard, I have to say that I have read your instruction to the minister of foreign relations, as therein directed, and am assured by him that his government has not been misled, in the least, by the remarks quoted by you from the protocol.

For nearly two years this government has known of the earnest desire of the President of the United States to see an honorable termination of the unfortunate war in this section, and of his willingness to contribute in every proper manner to the accomplishment of that result. This assurance in the precise sense of your instruction, if not in its exact language, has been given not once only, but repeatedly, until there has been left no room for doubt upon that subject.

The remarks quoted, to be correctly appreciated, should be read in connection with the discussion which was then going on in the conference, and in the light of surrounding facts. They were not intended to qualify or change, in the slightest degree, the views of the Government of the United States as hitherto made known to the several belligerents. Their purpose was to cover the single question then being discussed, and I am not informed that either of the belligerents understood them in any other sense.

As you well know, since the Chilians succeeded in getting possession of the province of Tarapacá this government has not been willing to listen to suggestions regarding peace which did not involve a cession of such province by Peru. The State Department contains many dispatches from me to this purport, and I judge, the allies were well informed on this point. It is impossible that they should have remained ignorant of the fact that the condition of public sentiment here was such as to preclude the possibility of a peace upon any other basis. When Mr. Christiancy was here, prior to the conference of Arica, President Pinto told him emphatically that our mediation would come to naught unless Peru was ready to make this concession. I assume that the Piérola government was informed of this by Mr. C., upon his return to Lima, and prior to the acceptance by Peru of our mediation; but, be that as it may, I am positively assured that President Piérola was made acquainted with the facts in this regard by the European representatives in Lima. That they could not have been ignorant in Peru on this point is evidenced by the fact that Mr. Christiancy felt himself warranted in saying to President Pinto that he was confident that the demand made by Chili would be conceded.

With this understanding, then, our mediation was accepted, and the conference convened at Arica in October. The ministers who went from Chili were instructed to demand, among other things, Tarapacá. The sentiment of the country was a unit upon this point, and the government could not have done less and stood.

In the presence of these facts you will, perhaps, be able to comprehend with what surprise and mortification I listened to the reply of the allies in the second conference, wherein they announced that the very condition which was irrevocable presented an "insurmountable obstacle" to the conclusion of a peace. It was after this announcement of the conclusion reached by the Peruvian minsters, that Mr. Baptista, of Bolivia, following an assurance that he and his colleague were quite in accord with the representatives from Peru, suggested that perhaps the difficulty might be solved by leaving the "remaining questions" to arbitration by the United States. The allies knew perfectly well that the "remaining questions" were comparatively nothing in the settlement of the difficulty. They understood then, as the Peruvian Government at least had understood before our mediation was accepted, that the unbending demand of Chili would continue to be the cession of Tarapacá, and that peace was impossible unless that point should be yielded. In view of all this, how hollow was the proposition touching arbitration; how insincere.

It will not be forgotten that circumstances conspired to make our mediation exceedingly unpopular in Chili. For present purposes it will be sufficient to refer to this fact generally without calling attention to the causes therefor. So strong was the sentiment in opposition to the movement immediately preceding the holding of the conference that I am confident the government would have gladly retraced its steps in that matter if it could have honorably done so. The country was exceedingly sensitive upon the subject, and there was very great danger that the government would fall. All this I knew perfectly well, perhaps better than my colleagues. I felt the full responsibility of my position, and endeavored to so discharge my duty as to leave the United States Government blameless, let what might be the result of the movement. With this knowledge, and this determination, the remarks which you quote were made, and now, in the light of subsequent events, I do not hesitate to say that if a different course had been pursued by us—if we had given to the proposition submitted regarding arbitration a quasi approval—American influence here would have been very seriously crippled, if not entirely destroyed. As it was, the United States Government came out of the movement standing better here than it had ever stood before.

Trusting that this explanation may prove satisfactory,

I am, &c.,

No. 115.

Mr. Osborn to Mr. Blaine.

No. 198.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, March 23, 1881. (Received May 4.)

SIR: I have deemed it quite unnecessary to burden the archives of the State Department with the scattered information which has from time to time reached me from Peru since the occupation of Lima by the Chilian forces, as you have doubtless been placed in possession of all needed knowledge of events there by Minister Christiancy. Lima is but little farther from New York, in the matter of mail communication, than it is from Santiago, and you are, I judge, made acquainted with incidents there transpiring almost as soon as I am.

The negotiations regarding peace have, on the part of Chili, been intrusted to Messrs. Vergara and Altamirano, two of the ministers who participated in the Arica conference, and from what I learn I conclude that these gentlemen find their task by no means an easy one. While the war is practically at an end, yet serious difficulties appear to stand in the way of peace negotiations. Whether these difficulties might not in a measure have been avoided presents a question which I am not prepared to discuss, nor am I sufficiently informed to warrant an expression of opinion as to the real source of the blame, if blame there is. The fact is, there are two pretended governments in Peru, that of Piérola and that headed by Calderon.

The Chilian ministers, as you know, have emphatically declined to enter into negotiations with Piérola, alleging as a reason, as I understand, that his government is without the necessary strength. It is whispered, and perhaps truly, that other influences contributed to this determination, among which I may mention what is termed here an insulting and untruthful insinuation by Piérola in one of his recent official papers to the effect that the perfidy attached to the premature commencement of the battle of Miraflores, on the 15th of January, was chargeable to the Chilian army. It will be remembered that on the morning of the 15th, through the friendly efforts of the diplomatic corps in Lima, a qualified armistice was arranged between the two armies, which was to continue until midnight, but that notwithstanding at about two o'clock in the afternoon fire was opened and the bloody battle of Miraflores followed. It is no secret here that in this engagement the Chilian army narrowly escaped a serious disaster, and the government, the army, and the people, are alike severe in their denunciations of Piérola for what they term his treachery in this matter.

The government of Calderon has been accepted by several of the Peruvian provinces, but there still remains a considerable portion of the country which has not acknowledged its authority. I am induced to believe, however, that President Pinto hopes that it will have acquired ere long sufficient strength to warrant this government in entering into negotiations with it. Mr. Altamirano is on his way down the coast now, and will reach Santiago in a few days. He comes, I infer, to confer with the government regarding the situation in Peru, and perhaps, to receive final instructions touching the terms to be exacted in a treaty of peace.

There is every reason why Chili should conclude a peace at the earliest possible day, and I think the government so looks upon it. What terms are to be insisted upon I do not know, but judge they will be quite as severe as Peru, in its impoverished condition, can possible comply with. In this regard, however, I see evidences here of a modification of public sentiment, and from this I expect much.

I need scarcely assure you that my efforts shall continue to be exerted in facilitating the restoration of peace. This, your instructions, as well as my sense of duty, would require; but I find an additional incentive in my great desire to avail myself of the leave of absence granted me by the State Department, and so long held in abeyance because of the war. Since the receipt of instructions No. 119, which came to hand by the last mail, I have had a friendly conversation with Minister Valderama concerning the negotiations at Lima, and after the arrival of Mr. Altamirano I expect to see him again, when I may have something worth communicating. The information upon which the instruction above mentioned was based seems to have been somewhat faulty in that it indicated that President Pierola, with his army, had retired to the interior. It is reported here, and believed, that the Peruvian army was entirely dispersed, and that Pierola took refuge in the mountains surrounded by a few followers only.

About 6,000 of the volunteer troops have been returned to Chili and mustered out of the service. General Baquedano, the commander-in-chief, accompanied them, and they were received with universal rejoicing.

I inclose an English translation of General Baquedano's report of events preceding the occupation of Lima by the Chilian army.*

SIR: In my No. 198, in speaking of the prospects of peace, I informed you that Mr. Altamirano, one of the ministers authorized to treat with Peru, was on his way to Chili. Since his arrival he has had extended interviews with the government regarding the situation in Lima, and as a result I have good reason for believing that the President's hopes touching the government of Calderon have been very seriously weakened. The impression seems to be gaining ground that the demoralization prevailing in Peru is so great as to prevent the establishment, at present, of any government with sufficient solidity to warrant Chili in negotiating with it. If this should become the view of the government, as seems probable, the indications are that the policy for the future would involve the removal to Chili of all valuables belonging to the Government of Peru, the destruction of all means of defense, and the withdrawal of the Chilian forces to Arica. From this point, itis inferred, they would watch with interest the movements of the factions in Peru in their struggles for the ascendency. Minister Vergara has been sent for, and is expected in a few days, when it is understood a definite course is to be determined upon.

If the policy which I have outlined should be adopted, all talk regarding a formal peace would be mere speculation.

I conclude that the agents of the European powers were not dissatisfied with the answer which they received. They probably regard the present unsettled state of affairs in Peru as presenting a serious obstacle to negotiations, and are, I judge, not disappointed that they should be excused, by the action of this government, from entering upon the performance of a work which would seem to have so little promise of a happy result.

ESTEEMED SIR AND FRIEND: The New York papers are publishing a rumor that it is possible that Chili may establish a protectorate over Peru, because that country cannot form a government of its own, and because many sensible people are asking for such a protectorate.

I am sorry that I cannot call and speak with Mr. Blaine personally on this subject. No. 205.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, May 7, 1881. (Received June 7.)

SIR: In my No. 201, of date April 5th, regarding the war in this section, I mentioned the fact that the minister of war, Mr. Vergara, who had been with the army at Lima, had been sent for, and was then on his way to Chili. Since his arrival the government has labored to reach a conclusion touching the course to be pursued with Peru, and to that end numerous and extended discussions among the ministers and prominent citizens of the republic who had been invited to participate, have taken place. Three plans or propositions were discussed: First, that spoken of by me in my No. 201, involving the withdrawal of the army to Arica; second, the occupation of the entire Peruvian coast by the Chilian forces, and its government by Chilian authorities; and third, the strengthening of the government of Calderon and the negotiation of a peace therewith. The propriety of entering into negotiations with Pierola was not even dignified with a consideration. After much labor the government reached the conclusion that the last proposition afforded the easiest way out of their complications, and it has been determined to send to Peru, in charge of the negotiations, Mr. Godoy, who in times past represented Chili in Washington. Mr. G. is well qualified for the delicate post which he is called upon to fill. He occupied the position of minister to Peru for several years immediately preceding the opening of hostilities, and is thoroughly informed of that country and its people, and of the causes which brought about the present war. In conversation with me yesterday, he expressed the belief that three or four months would serve to bring the difficulties to a conclusion, and it is to be hoped that the result may prove him to be not over-sanguine.

The ministry has freely counseled with me regarding the difficulties of the situation, and, in view of their previous determination to have nothing to do with Pierola, I cannot but applaud the result of their deliberation. To vacate the country now would be to turn it over to anarchy, and to attempt to occupy the entire coast would in time involve both countries in ruin. The most feasible way to peace is, in my opinion, the one resolved upon. In fact it is the only one which offers any reasonable hope of a solution of the difficulties during the present generation.

I have endeavored to impress upon the authorities here, and not without, I judge, some measure of success, the propriety of their affording the government of Calderon greater freedom of action than it has hitherto enjoyed. I have urged upon them that if it is their purpose to strengthen and dignify the new government, and place it in a position to claim recognition at home and abroad, they should give it possession of the capital freed from the embarrassments of Chilian military rule, and should enable it to raise revenue for its proper support. It will be remembered that the new government has been confined to a small village in the neighborhood of Lima, which was exempted from the operation of martial law, while the capital has been occupied by the Chilian military authorities; and it will also be borne in mind that the custom-house at Callao, almost the only source from which revenue can be readily raised, has remained in possession of the Chilians.

This government will unquestionably insist upon the relinquishment by Peru of the province of Tarapacá, and unless the Peruvian authorities shall be found ready to concede this, the attempt to make peace will fail. It is probable, also, that Chili will demand the province of Moquegua, which includes the towns of Arica, Tacna, and Moquegua; but I incline to the belief that they will not insist upon this to the extent of endangering the negotiations. They will doubtless move cautiously, however, taking good care to see that they are to be sustained by the country; and as the public expectation has been raised to a most extravagant point, their way may be beset by serious difficulties.

I regard it as quite probable that the terms of the treaty may provide for the maintenance of Chilian garrisons at Callao and Arica until some minor conditions shall be complied with. And it is well perhaps for the interests of those who are concerned in the preservation of order there that the term of this occupation should not be limited to too brief a period.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

No. 120.

Mr. Blaine to Mr. Kilpatrick.

No. 2.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 15, 1881.

SIR: The unfortunate condition of the relations between Chili and Peru makes the mission upon the duties of which you are now entering one of grave responsibility and great delicacy. Difficult as would be any intervention of the United States under ordinary circumstances, our position is further embarrassed by the failure of the conference at Arica, undertaken at our suggestion. It is evident from the protocols of that conference that Chili was prepared to dictate and not to discuss terms of peace, and that the arbitration of the United States upon any questions of difference with the allied powers of Peru and Bolivia was not acceptable and would not be accepted by the Chilian Government. Since that time the war has closed in the complete success of Chili, and in what can scarcely be considered less than the conquest of Peru and Bolivia.

This government cannot therefore anticipate that the offer of friendly intervention in the settlement of the very serious questions now pending would be agreeable to the Government of Chili. It would scarcely comport with self-respect that such an offer should be refused, and it would be of no benefit to Peru and Bolivia that it should be offered and declined. But I am sure the Chilian Government will appreciate the natural and deep interest which the United States feels in the termination of a condition so calamitous in its consequences to the best interests of all the South American republics. It should also know that if at any time the interposition of the good offices of this government can contribute to the restoration of friendly relations between the belligerent powers, they will, upon proper intimation, be promptly offered.

While, therefore, no instructions are given you to tender officially any advice to the Government of Chili which is unsought, you will, on such opportunity as may occur, govern your conduct and representations by the considerations to which I shall now call your attention.

Without entering upon any discussion as to the causes of the late war between Chili on the one side and Peru and Bolivia on the other, this government recognizes the right which the successful conduct of that war has conferred upon Chili; and, in doing so, I will not undertake to estimate the extent to which the Chilian Government has the right to carry its calculations of the indemnities to which it is entitled, nor the security for the future which its interests may seem to require. But if the Chilian Government, as its representatives have declared, seeks only a guarantee of future peace, it would seem natural that Peru and Bolivia should be allowed to offer such indemnity and guarantee before the annexation of territory, which is the right of conquest, is insisted upon. If these powers fail to offer what is a reasonably sufficient indemnity and guarantee, then it becomes a fair subject of consideration whether such territory may not be exacted as the necessary price of peace.

But at the conclusion of a war avowedly not of conquest, but for the solution of differences which diplomacy had failed to settle, to make the acquisition of territory a sine qua non of peace is calculated to cast suspicions on the professions with which war was originally declared. It may very well be that at the termination of such a contest the changed condition and relation of all the parties to it may make readjustment of boundaries or territorial changes wise as well as necessary; but this, where the war is not one of conquest, should be the result of negotiation and not the absolute preliminary condition on which alone the victor consents to negotiate. At this day, when the right of the people to govern themselves, the fundamental basis of republican institutions, is so universally recognized, there is nothing more difficult or more dangerous than the forced transfer of territory, carrying with it an indignant and hostile population, and nothing but a necessity proven before the world can justify it. It is not a case in which the power desiring the territory can be accepted as a safe or impartial judge.

While the United States Government does not pretend to express an opinion whether or not such an annexation of territory is a necessary consequence of this war, it believes that it would be more honorable to the Chilian Government, more conducive to the security of a permanent peace, and more in consonance with those principles which are professed by all the republics of America, that such territorial changes should be avoided as far as possible; that they should never be the result of mere force, but, if necessary, should be decided and tempered by full and equal discussion between all the powers whose people and whose national interests are involved.

At the present moment, the compieteness of the victory of Chili seems to render such a diplomatic discussion impossible. The result of the conflict has been not only the defeat of the allied armies, but the dissolution of all responsible government in Peru. Its soil is occupied, the collection of its revenues transferred to the conquerors, and its executive, legislative, and judicial functions in abeyance. It can neither enforce order within nor assure peace without.

An effort, and apparently a very earnest and honest one, has been made to create a provisional government, which shall gradually restore order and the reign of law. But it is obvious that for such a government to succeed in obtaining the confidence either of its own people or foreign powers, it must be allowed a freedom and force of action which cannot be exercised while Chili holds absolute possession and governs by military authority. This government, therefore, has been glad to learn from its minister in Chili, whom you succeed, that the Chilian authorities have decided to give their support to the efforts of Señor Calderon to establish on a steady footing a provisional government in Peru.

You will, as far as you can do so with propriety and without officious intrusion, approve and encourage this disposition on the part of the Chilian Government, and this Department will be exceedingly gratified if your influence as the representative of the United States shall be instrumental in inducing the Government of Chili to give its aid and support to the restoration of regular, constitutional government in Peru, and to postpone the final settlement of all questions of territorial annexation to the diplomatic negotiations which can then be resumed with the certainty of a just, friendly, and satisfactory conclusion.

In any representation which you may make, you will say that the hope of the United States is that the negotiations for peace shall be conducted, and the final settlement between the two countries determined, without either side invoking the aid or intervention of any European power.

The Government of the United States seeks only to perform the part of a friend to all the parties in this unhappy conflict between South American republics, and it will regret to be compelled to consider how far that feeling might be affected, and a more active interposition forced upon it, by any attempted complication of this question with European politics.

If at any time you shall judge it expedient and advantageous to read this dispatch to the minister of foreign affairs, you are authorized to do so. The decision on this point is left to your discretion.

I am, &c.,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

No. 121.

Mr. Kilpatrick to Mr. Blaine.

No. 3.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, August 15, 1881. (Received September 22.)

SIR: The considerations and instructions contained in your dispatch No. 2, dated June 15, 1881, relating to the course Chili should pursue in the final settlement of peace with Peru, have received my earnest attention.

You say in your dispatch that—

> The Department will be exceedingly gratified if your influence as the representative of the United States shall be instrumental in inducing the Government of Chili to give its aid and support to the restoration of regular constitutional government in Peru, and to postpone the final settlement of all questions of territorial annexation to the diplomatic negotiations, which can then be resumed with the certainty of a just, friendly, and satisfactory conclusion.

If I understand you aright this is the full intent and purport of your dispatch.

Taking this for granted, I have the honor to report that, so far as the assurances of public men can be relied upon, your instructions have been complied with, your ideas of final terms of peace accepted, not only by the present administration at Santiago, but, still better, by Señor Santa Maria, the President elect, whose administration will have begun when you receive this note.

I beg your patient attention to the somewhat lengthy explanation I am compelled to make of my action in the matter.

As soon as I received your instructions I made inquiries to ascertain the real intention of the Government of Chili regarding peace with Peru. For a time I was completely misled; it seemed as if the government had no plan, but would leave the whole matter of final settlement to the incoming administration. In this I was mistaken, as were the public men of Chili with whom I conversed, outside the President and his cabinet. I discovered later on that the President was alarmed at the views you advanced, delicately brought to his attention, and in all probability would not be inclined to accept them. I at once became satisfied that the President and his cabinet held not only other views, but were contemplating absolute peace with the Government of Señor Calderon. I therefore did not deem it wise to acquaint the Secretary of State and the President with the full purport of your dispatch. I adopted what I thought to be a wiser course; I called upon Señor Louis Aldunate, the first friend of the President elect, a gentleman of great ability, who, I have reason to know, will occupy the first position in the cabinet of President-elect Santa Maria. I read him your dispatch, and at the same time informed him of my belief regarding the intention of President Pinto. After a full discussion of each separate point, and explanations of what I believed to be the result of misinformation on your part regarding "annexation of hostile territory," (to which I will refer again) your views were substantially accepted as wise and just. Señor Aldunate immediately acquainted President-elect Santa Maria with the contents of your note, and both have assured me—

> That not one foot of Peruvian territory will be exacted by force unless all efforts of diplomatic negotiations shall fail, and that in no case can Chili treat finally with the Government of Señor Calderon until it shall appear that his government is respected and obeyed throughout Peru, which does not obtain at this moment. That no doubt President Pinto would like to celebrate the last days of his administration by a proclamation of peace with Peru, with the Government of Calderon, a government with out a single element that constitutes a real government, and that would fall at once but for Chilian protection.

I was invited to attend Congress the following day, when the government would be interpolated regarding its plans and purposes. I went, found the House crowded with people, and, amid great excitement, heard the cabinet of President Pinto questioned and worried by Señor Lira, the first orator of Chili. I intended to send you translations of the speeches in this debate, but am too unwell to attempt it. I have been confined to my bed the greater portion of the time since my arrival in Chili. This debate developed the fact that President Pinto was contemplating peace with the Government of Calderon—peace which, from the nature of the debate, I was satisfied, must of necessity include territorial annexation. Intimate friends of the administration not only confirmed this belief, but convinced me further that President Pinto was determined to accomplish his purpose; that he yet had time, and that the Government of Calderon was in no condition to refuse any conditions Chili might impose. How to prevent this without giving offense to President Pinto I could not satisfactorily answer. I had gained the incoming administration; this was not sufficient. I determined finally to approach the administration, and change its purpose if possible. I sent for Señor Aldunate and Señor George Huneens, the solicitor for the government whose name you will find frequently mentioned in the paper relating to the Arica conference, and asked them to arrange for me a meeting with the secretary of state and secretary of war, the dominant members of the President's cabinet.

After some delay this was agreed upon, and a conference was held at my house last night between Señor Valderrama, secretary of state, Señor Vergara, secretary of war, Aldunate, and Huneens. The conference lasted from 7 p. m. till one in the morning. I am too ill to give you a full account of the meeting; the result is all I can forward at this time.

Your dispatch was read and fully considered, and its advice and suggestions pressed upon the secretary of state. He finally replied. "The ideas indicated by Secretary Blaine are in direct conflict with those held by the Government of Chili, and if we abandon our policy it is out of respect for the opinion of the administration at Washington. You may therefore say to your government, that every effort would be given by Chili to strengthen the Government of President Calderon, giving to it the most perfect freedom of action, considering the Chilian occupation. That no question of territorial annexation would be touched until a constitutional government could be established in Peru, acknowledged and respected by the people, with full powers to enter into diplomatic negotiations for peace. That no territory would be exacted unless Chili failed to secure ample and just indemnification in other and satisfactory ways, as also ample security for the future, and that in no case would Chili exact territory save when Chilian enterprise and Chilian capital had developed the deserts, and where to-day nine-tenths of the people were Chilians; and finally that Chili would never consent to submit her rights gained in battle to the arbitration of any European power." This embraces, I think, all the important points contained in your dispatch; and if so, then I trust I have, fulfilled my instructions.

The character of the territory, its people, &c., that Chili may finally be compelled to demand, I will speak of in my next communication. One other matter and I have done. The secretary of state has just placed in my hands the following telegram, dated Lima, August 16:

> Hurlbut, the United States minister, has notified Calderon that the United States will under no circumstances permit annexation of territory to Chili; he has also repeated this statement to outside parties. It is now the subject of conversation here, complicates and endangers our occupation.
> Commandant in Chief.

If this be true, which I cannot believe, it will not only create bad feeling here in Chili, but compromise my action. Certainly it is not in conformity with my instructions, for you distinctly say Peru and Bolivia should be allowed to offer such indemnity and guarantee before the annexation of territory, which is the right of conquest, is insisted upon." Again, you say, "If these fail to offer what is a reasonable, sufficient indemnity and guarantee, then it becomes a fair subject of consideration whether such territory may not be exacted as the necessary price of peace." In no way can the letter or spirit of your dispatch be tortured into saying "The United States will not permit in any case annexation of territory to Chili." General Hurlbut has not sent me the Department cipher, or I would telegraph him, that he may know that he has been misunderstood or misinterpreted, and in time correct false impressions. If my mission is a delicate one, his is still more so, for he has two governments to deal with, the Chilian Government, under Lynch, and the provincial government of Calderon. I have done what I could to satisfy the secretary of state that there must be some mistake; that you would not send one class of instructions to me and another to our minister at Lima.

Very, &c.,

J. KILPATRICK.

No. 8.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, October 14, 1881. (Received November 18.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose copies of Señor Balmaceda's note of the 8th instant, and my reply of same date.

In a previous communication I called your attention to the great disquiet caused by the tenor of General Hurlbut's remarks when presented to Señor Garcia Calderon. This was soon largely increased by telegrams from persons in high position in Buenos Ayres, stating, in the most positive terms, my government had determined to prevent any annexation of Peruvian territory, and to oblige Chili to accept an indemnity in money or its equivalent. It was further added to by the general's note to Señor Garcia Calderon, and by the reports of his general and private conversation, in which he apparently confirmed the position assumed to have been taken by my government; and, lastly, by the terms of his memorandum to Admiral Lynch.

In replying to Señor Balmaceda, I deemed the time had arrived for me, as far as my strength would permit, to take advantage of the authority given in my instructions, and to make clear to the Government of Chili the entire uniformity in the instructions to both legations, and to establish beyond a doubt that my government holds fast to the policy adopted at the commencement of the war. I have ample assurances that my note has given great satisfaction.

Regretting the unfortunate state of my health will not, for the moment, allow a more exhaustive statement of affairs, and trusting my action will meet your approval,

I am, &c.,

J. KILPATRICK.

UNITED STATES LEGATION,
Santiago, October 8, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your excellency's note of this date, in which you call my attention to the fact that the daily papers of Valparaiso and of this capital have given publicity to a memorandum sent by my colleague in Lima, the honorable Mr. Hurlbut, to Rear-Admiral Lynch, commander of the Chilian forces in the capital of Peru. Your excellency is surprised at the publicity given to a confidential document "of little importance, considering the form and circumstances under which the same was produced." Your excellency therefore considers it convenient to direct a note to this legation "with the view of establishing the good faith and sincerity of the relations so happily cultivated by our respective governments."

Although, as your excellency is aware, I have been for some weeks past, and still am, seriously unwell, recognizing as I do the serious consequences, complications, and misunderstandings that might possibly arise, consequent from the unwise publicity of the memorandum of Mr. Hurlbut to Rear-Admiral Lynch, and the spirit thereof, at least so far as may be judged from the document as published, the circumstances oblige me, despite the warnings of my medical advisers, to accede without delay to the wishes expressed by your excellency, and replying, although perhaps not in so definite a manner as, owing to the occasion, I should desire.

In the first place allow me to assure your excellency in most unequivocal manner the Government of Chili has no reason for disquietude, either as respects the intention or the attitude that my government may assume as to the war on the Pacific coast. The Government of the United States has not at any time interfered officiously in the public affairs of other countries, not even when its own interests have been compromised, and much less would it do so when the interests involved are those of friendly nations respecting whom there can be no motive inducing it to partiality.

I had read the memorandum of Mr. Hurlbut, as also the speech at his reception by President Garcia Calderon, both articles having been forwarded to me from Lima some time since, and I at once communicated with my government regarding the same. The first of said documents cannot be considered as having either official or diplomatic character, as the author himself says in the note of which your excellency has sent me a copy.

The instructions given me by my government are, undoubtedly, the same as those given Mr. Hurlbut, and it may be said in truth that they have none of the spirit predominating in the document to which your excellency alludes. The instructions of the Secretary of State, Hon. Mr. Blaine, contain nothing of doubtful meaning, he having such decided confidence in the intelligence, justice, and generosity of the Government of Chili that he authorized me to make them known to his excellency the President, or his minister, should I at any time consider it convenient to communicate them.

In order that no room for doubt may exist in your excellency's mind as to the position of my government in regard to the conditions of peace between Chili and Peru, and its determination to abstain from taking any part in the matter, I have no hesitation in subjoining a copy of a paragraph of said instructions which reads as follows:

"Since the suspension of the Arica conferences the war has ended in a complete success for Chili, and in what may be considered as little less than the conquest of Peru. This government cannot undertake to suppose that the offer of a friendly intervention in questions still pending would be agreeable to the Government of Chili. But I am sure the Government of Chili will appreciate the natural and profound interest taken by the United States in the ending of a situation so calamitous in its results to the best interests of the South American republics. The Government of Chili must also know that if at any time the interposition of the good offices of this government will contribute to the re-establishment of friendly relations, they (the United States) will promptly offer it whenever it manifests such wish."

It is further added in these instructions that in all conversation with persons of your excellency's government on this subject I am to observe established international law, and that under no condition whatever am I to offer unsought advice to the Government of Chili.

Again, in speaking of the provisional government of Señor Garcia Calderon, which the administration at Washington hoped to have seen established, my instructions are to encourage the same only to the extent that it may be done in a dignified and neutral way by a plenipotentiary, without officious interposition.

I think these extracts of the instructions given me by my government will be sufficient to convince your excellency that there exists, no intention on the part of my government of interfering arbitrarily in the conflict existing on the Pacific coast, and that its acts and conduct are those of a friendly nation desirous of proceeding in the most delicate manner.

I trust, therefore, that your excellency's government will continue its full confidence in the long and well-established policy of the United States, whose friendship has lasted so many years and has never been more sincere than at the present moment.

With the considerations of the highest regards and esteem,

I am, &c.,

J. KILPATRICK.

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, October 24, 1881.

SIR: To-morrow, or the day after, I shall have the pleasure to call on you in order to deliver two autograph letters from the President of Chili.

In the mean time I allow myself to inclose some articles published in some of the newspapers, which will let you know the political course which Minister Hurlbut has been pursuing in Peru.

The New York Herald published the letter written by Mr. Hurlbut to Garcia i Garcia, Piérola's only minister, in which he decisively declares that Peru will never yield any portion of her territory to Chili.

Other paper, cut out from the National Republican of this city, contains a communication relating to the clandestine or fraudulent emission of bank-notes emitted by Garcia Calderon, and which compelled General Lynch to act in the manner that I spoke of in our last intercourse.

The third article, published in the New York Evening Post, is very sensibly written, and in which Mr. Hurlbut's diplomatic conduct is very accurately criticised.

I have also a copy in Spanish of the letter addressed by Minister Hurlbut to General Lynch, after the occupation of the fiscal office of Garcia Calderon. This letter is written more or less in the same sense as that addressed to Garcia y Garcia.

With sentiments of my highest consideration, I am your obedient servant,

M. MARTINEZ.

[Extract from New York Herald.]

GENERAL HURLBUT'S LETTER.

The following is a translation from the Spanish of the original letter written in English by General Hurlbut, the United States minister here, to Don Aurelio Garcia y Garcia, secretary-general of Don Nicolas de Piérola. The letter was intended to be private, and, indeed, is only from one gentleman to another; but the government here found it so pleasing and so much to the point, that its publicity in Lima to-day is owing to such partiality. When Mr. Hurlbut penned the communication he never thought it would see the light in Lima. To say that it has caused a sensation would be to underrate the truth, and the truth contained in it cannot be controverted:

LIMA, September 12, 1881.

To AURELIO GARCIA Y GARCIA, Esq.,
Ayacucho:

SIR: I have the honor to own receipt of your letter dated August 28 last. In answer allow me to observe that I hardly consider it proper to discuss the internal affairs of Peru, if not replying to some formal and proper invitation to do so. But since yours gives me an opportunity to express to you particularly my frank opinion, I shall so proceed, and at the same time employing all the kindness possible. It is an accepted fact that ours is a republic, governed by a constitution which is regarded as the supreme law. Mr. Piérola took possession of the reins of power and arrogated to himself an authority not recognized by that constitution; these were acts in themselves revolutionary and contrary to the true obedience required by law. The violent and compulsory manner by which that revolution was effected stamped the act itself as being a crime against liberty. The dictatorship was nothing but an autocratic and despotic tyranny, not only in its plan, but in its name and actions. While it lasted the constitutional government of Peru was overwhelmed by the will of one man, which replaced the laws and the regimen of the constitution. The people of Peru, in the midst of the perplexities of a war of invasion, accepted this autocracy, believing that victory was to be achieved under its banners.

Foreign nations acknowledged this power as a government de facto, but never gave their approval to either its origin or the system followed. Instead of victory, the dictatorship brought as a result terrible defeats, and the Dictator fled from the capital. The people of Peru have not had since that moment an opportunity to freely express ther will and sympathy. According to the constitution, the National Assembly—the minister refers to that of Ayacucho—has no right to exist, and its resolutions or laws have no more legal weight than the opinions expressed by a similar number of simple citizens. Therefore the confirmation of the full and autocratic faculties given to the ex-dictator, under his new title of President, confer no further validity in the eyes of the law to his authority and pretensions.

I am obliged, for this reason, and to my regret, to say to you that the last decrees issued in Ayacucho, regarding the persons and property of those citizens who decline to recognize Mr. Piérola are inhuman and barbarous, and serve to place the government employing such measures beyond the pale of the law. (Mr. Hurlbut refers to a wholesale decree of confiscation and death issued by Piérola, but which has not yet caused any great alarm among his opponents.) These violent decrees are, according to my way of thinking, conclusive proofs that the government of which you form a part is only supported by force, and not by the weight of public opinion. A strong government, resting or based on public opinion and sovereign will, never appeals to such cruel means of devastation. Such methods oblige civilized governments to regard with reprobation the authorities employing them. I think I have said all that I think is my duty respecting the government presided over by Mr. Piérola. The administration of Mr. Garcia Calderon does not pretend to be perfectly regular in its formation. It is provisional, that is, a transitory means of exercising governmental functions until such time as the nation may act directly and without pressure. It is supported by Congress, a national Congress recognized by the constitution, and it is the embodiment of an effort toward the re-establishment in this country of a properly organized and constitutional government. You are mistaken in stating that this government of Mr. Garcia Calderon meets with Chilian sympathy; it desires peace, as does the entire country, but without sacrificing national honor, nor will it cede territory to obtain that peace. The Chilian authorities are in communication with both parties, and even you have written to Admiral Lynch. Chili desires and asks for the territory of Tarapacá, and will recognize the party ceding it. The cabinet of Garcia Calderon will not consent to this cession; it remains to be seen if Mr. Piérola will do so. Meanwhile, under the regimen inaugurated in Ayacucho and put in practice by the prefects, Peruvians are to-day more deadly enemies to themselves than are the Chilians, and the efforts of those friendly to Peru are paralyzed on account of these internal dissensions. When the United States asks Chili why she cannot make peace, the answer is that no one can be found in Peru to treat with.

Is it not better to put an end to this state of affairs, and for all true Peruvians to unite under one chief, whose authority would be acknowledged and protected by all parties and factions, in order to save the country from its imminent ruin, to establish peace, and restore the proper and pacific supremacy of the constitution and the law?

I have the honor, &c.,

S. A. HURLBUT.

No. 124.

Mr. Martinez to Mr. Blaine.

[Translation.]

The envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Chili has the honor to present his respects to his excellency the Secretary of State, and to inclose herewith, pursuant to the request his excellency was pleased to make, a copy of the confidential dispatch of the minister for foreign affairs of Chili, dated the 12th of September last.

WASHINGTON, October 27, 1881.

[Inclosure.—Translation.]

Mr. Valderrama to Mr. Martinez.

Confidential.] SANTIAGO, September 12, 1881.

By dispatches which were in due season addressed to you by Don Joaquin Godoy from Lima you will have been informed of the very uncircumspect conduct of the minister of the United States recently accredited to the provisional government of Señor Garcia Calderon.

From the time of his arrival at Lima Mr. Hurlburt has omitted no signs of decided partiality in favor of Peru, giving it to be understood that the Government of the United States would resist any arrangement which Chili might endeavor to effect with that republic, and which might involve the cession of any part of its territory.

These ideas, which obtained a footing among the public men of Peru, acquired still greater persistence after the address delivered by the American minister on the public occasion of presenting his credentials to the provisional President. From that moment Mr. Garcia Calderon, the members of his cabinet, and all persons who had any influence whatever upon the public opinion, deemed themselves encouraged by the words and demonstrations of the representative of the United States, believing that they saw therein the expression of the policy which the Cabinet at Washington proposed to adopt.

Our plenipotentiary, Mr. Godoy, carefully observed the reaction which was brought about in the Peruvian mind by the conduct of Mr. Hurlbut. To the negotiations which have been initiated in a conciliatory and accommodating spirit before the arrival of the American minister, there succeeded after his arrival a sudden and unlooked-for change, the explanation of which can only be attributed to the influence, directly or indirectly, produced by the attitude of the representative of the United States. In this state of affairs our plenipotentiary deemed it proper to suspend the negotiations already set on foot, and went to Chili to confer with my government.

Being desirous of inquiring if the conduct of Mr. Hurlbut responded to a political plan of his government, I held a conference with Mr. Kilpatrick, who expressed himself dissatisfied with the manner in which his colleague in Lima had begun his diplomatic mission. Mr. Kilpatrick did not hesitate to affirm that Mr. Hurlbut did not faithfully represent the policy of abstention and neutrality of his government. In order to relieve my government of all unfounded apprehension in this respect, he made me acquainted with the dispatch which contained his own instructions, adding that the instructions given his colleage at Lima, who was appointed at the same time, could not but be in entire conformity with his own.

In those instructions, and in the part thereof which refers to the war between Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, the Government of the United States shows itself in entire conformity with its previous policy. It exhibits the intention of not interfering in the solution of the war, except in the case of its good offices being solicited by all the belligerents. As respects the cession of a part of the Peruvian territory, the Government of the United States expresses no surprise whatever that such should appear among the conditions of peace. It observes, in passing, that it would be expedient if the territorial cession should not comprise cities whose inhahitants are exclusively Peruvians, and should not desire to choose the citizenship of our country. But this last appears rather a friendly reflection than as an exigency of American policy.

Meanwhile it is not possible to ignore the fact that the presence of Mr. Hurlbut in Lima has been in a high degree prejudicial to the conclusion of arrangements for peace. I have ground to believe that he continues to place at the service of the purposes of the provisional government all the influence which can be given by the representative character he holds.

As late as yesterday I learned, in a confidential way, but one entirely trustworthy, that he has sent a telegram to Mr. Kilpatrick, in Santiago, begging him to forward it to his colleague at Buenos Ayres. In this telegram Mr. Hurlbut seconded, doubtless, the plans of Mr. Garcia Calderon, and asks his colleague in Buenos Ayres that he should represent to the Argentine cabinet the urgent necessity of accrediting, without loss of time, a representative at Lima. There are reasons to think that the government of Señor Garcia Calderon would welcome the presence of an Argentine minister in Peru, in order to seek therefrom mild or effective aid against us.

These considerations, to which you will give all the importance which they themselves possess, induce me to charge you to endeavor to see the Secretary of State, in order to let him see, in a confidential and delicate way, the manner in which Mr. Hurlbut is interpreting his policy in Peru. You will endeavor, also, with the greatest discretion, to obtain from the American Government some act or declaration which will tend to destroy the bad impression caused by the conduct of their representative in Lima, to avoid in future that he shall continue to create difficulties foreign to his official character, and contrary to the ever friendly and loyal policy of the United States.

May God guard you.

Mr. Martinez to Mr. Blaine.

LEGACION DE CHILE,
Washington, October 28, 1881.

SIR: Yesterday when I read to you Admiral Lynch's letter I made you remark that this gentleman said that he was going to take possession of the offices belonging to Garcia Calderon without giving previous knowledge of this act to anybody, in order that the important papers might not be hidden. But I have just had another letter from Mr. Lynch, telling me that he thought it more prudent to let Mr. Garcia Calderon himself know about what he was going to do. He assures me that that gentleman consulted Minister Hurlbut and some of the senators and deputies, and consequently addressed to Mr. Lynch a very original and eccentric letter. This same letter has been published in the Lima papers, and now I have it in my possession. Lynch answered it immediately.

Garcia Calderon and his friends spoke about the American fleet meeting at Callao. In fact, Mr. Hurlbut called the admiral-in-chief, who thought that there had been an insurrection in Lima, occasioned by the withdrawal of the Chilian troops. He was greatly surprised at finding everything in peace. The American admiral does perfect justice to the Chilians.

Seeing General Lynch that Garcia Calderon persisted in giving himself Presidential airs, although he had no offices nor territory to rule, thought that this queer conduct arose from that fiscal emission of bank-notes that I have mentioned to you; so that the Chilian chief had to issue a decree to put a stop to that affair.

I make these explanations, so that you might see that Mr. Lynch's conduct has been perfectly correct.

I am, sir, yours, obedient,

M. MARTINEZ.

No. 13.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 22, 1881.

SIR: Your dispatch, No. 8, conveying a copy of your reply to Señor Balmaseda has been received. The communication to which it was a reply should have accompanied it, in order that the Department could properly judge of your answer.

Your letter is not approved by the Department. You had had ample opportunity, and, as you have before stated, availed yourself of it, to make known to the Government of Chili the scope of your instructions, and to give it abundant assurance of the friendly feeling of your own government.

If the conduct of Mr. Hurlbut in Peru had given sufficient ground of complaint to the Chilian Government, that complaint should have been made in Washington. Mr. Hurlbut's presentation speech to President Calderon, his memorandum to Admiral Lynch, his letter to Garcia, and telegraphic reports from Buenos Ayres, were not subjects upon which you were called to pass judgment, nor upon which you should have been interrogated by the Chilian Government. Nothing in your conduct or language had excited its apprehensions, and no explanation was due or could have been expected from you, of the language or conduct of your colleague in Peru. I should have been glad if it had occurred to you to call the attention of the secretary for foreign affairs to the impropriety of such a communication, and, in referring to the fact, that your instructions, which you were authorized to communicate to him, gave all the assurance which he could either desire or ask, of the friendly disposition of the United States, I should have much preferred that you had furnished him with a copy of those instructions instead of submitting a paraphrase which does not fully represent their spirit and meaning.

Indeed, I find it difficult to understand how the Chilian Government could have been under any misapprehension as to the disposition or purpose of the United States, when the instructions both to yourself and to Mr. Hurlbut had, in fact, been already frankly communicated; the former, according to your dispatch No. 3, to the outgoing administration, and the latter by this Department to Mr. Martinez, the representative of the present government. It is still more difficult to understand the abolition of the Calderon Government and the arrest of the President himself, in the face of your assurance in your dispatch No. 3, where you quote the following as having been addressed to you by Señor Valderrama, viz:

> You are therefore authorized to say to your government that every effort would be given by Chili to strengthen the government of President Calderon, giving to it the most perfect freedom of action, considering the Chilian occupation. That no question of territorial annexation would be touched until a constitutional government could be established in Peru, acknowledged and respected by the people, with full powers to enter into diplomatic negotiations for peace.

And it would only have been natural if you had asked, for the information of your government, if not for your own, for what reasons and by what means the Calderon government had, as Señor Balmaseda informed you, "come to an end."

The President has learned with great regret of the arrest and removal of President Calderon, but in the present state of his information will not undertake to appreciate its significance. He hopes that he will, when the facts are better known, be relieved from the painful impression that it was intended as a rebuke to the friendly disposition of the United States. The present condition of affairs, the difficulty of prompt communication with the legations of Peru and Chili, and the unfortunate notoriety of the differences between your colleague in Peru and yourself, have, in the judgment of the President, rendered a special mission necessary. You will inform the Chilian Government that a special envoy will be immediately sent, and you will assure that government that he will come in the spirit of impartial friendship, anxious to learn that recent occurrences have not been intended to disturb the long-continued and friendly relations existing between us; and instructed by the President to lay before the Chilian Government frankly, but with a scrupulous consideration for the rights and interests of that government, the views which he holds upon the deplorable condition of affairs in South America, a condition now fast assuming proportions which make its settlement a matter of deep concern to all the republics of the continent. The President cannot but anticipate that this step, suggested by the most friendly interest and justified by our existing relations, will be properly appreciated by the Chilian Government; and he sincerely hopes that no action of that government will tend further to complicate existing difficulties before the arrival of the minister.

I am, &c.,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Mr. Martinez to Mr. Blaine.

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, November 26, 1881.

SIR: Yielding to the purpose of communicating to the Department of State the actual course of events that occur on the Pacific coast, I shall briefly refer to the authentic intelligences that I have had by the last mail.

Several of the military chiefs in Arequipa, availing themselves of the absence of Piérola and Colonel Solar, declared themselves in favor of the late provisional government of Garcia Calderon, giving the three following reasons for so doing.

1st. That Piérola's tyranny was absolutely intolerable. That the country could not carry on the war with Chili, and that the United States had offered their intervention, in order to obtain an agreement of peace that did not comprise territorial cession. Certainly those patriots did not explain how Peru could otherwise answer the claims of Chili.

Some time afterwards Rear Admiral Montero, who had been for some months past inactive on the Cajamarca mountains, accepted the irregular and unconstitutional offer for the vice-presidency of the republic. In his letter of acceptance, dated last October 23, he made declarations which are absolutely necessary that your excellency should hear of, to know on what illusions the Peruvian leaders found their politics, and also to know the role the American legation is made to assume in all those affairs.

The philosphy arising from the facts that I am going to state, is that, while these illusions and hopes are being kept up, peace will be impossible.

Montero says:

> The noble officiousness of the Government of the United States, manifested in the documents which have successively been published, even the definite declarations comprised in the letter written at the request of the notables of Lima by the honorable minister plenipotentiary from Washington (letter which nobody has seen) which has completely changed the situation, and consequently its proper resolution.

He adds, that he has officially communicated his resolution to the representative of the United States, in a dispatch directed on the same date. He finally states that "his noble wishes of increasing the elements to defend his country are greatly gratified"! and concludes, assuring that "he redoubles his activity to multiply the necessary elements in order to be always ready for its support, till he sees the final issue of the diplomatic affairs with Chili"!

If, as it is said, Garcia Calderon has been imprisoned because he insisted upon sneering the decree of the Chilian general within the limits of the Chilian forces, it is probable that Montero will represent the provisional government, and I beg your excellency to remark that this chief assures he has forces, and that he is desirous to have more to continue their armed resistance against Chili.

The protest of all these chiefs against a territorial cession is established on the chimerical intervention of the United States, warranted by Minister Hurlbut, to whom Montero has addressed himself as his immediate superior.

Your excellency's deep penetration will judge in the same way that I do, I allow so to express myself, this queer and anomalous situation. All that is extraordinary and unexpected in the affairs of Peru will very often, I have no doubt, call your excellency's attention, and will too often explain that providence did not endow that country with any logic.

I have some reasons to believe that in some information sent from Lima to the Department of State they insist on saying that the indemnification which Chili pretends to ask exceeds the limits of justice, and that the authorities in Lima have acted very cruelly towards the Peruvians.

Both informations, if they are known to your excellency, are entirely erroneous.

As to the indemnification, I will only say that those who think exaggerated the claims of Chili, entitled as it is by the perfect right of its actual situation, are under a mistake, for they are moderate and equitable, as it will probably be demonstrated as international courtesy when the time comes to make them practicable. Those who think otherwise do not, either out of dislike, or want of knowledge in the matter, being for the rest no judges to give their opinions in businesses that do not concern them.

As for the second information, the want of truth is but too plain. If any good quality is to be precisely acknowledged in the Chilians, it is that of not being sanguinary. It can be assured that in the space of eight years not more than three or four capital executions ever occur in Chili.

When the Chilian army occupied Lima the general in chief invited the Peruvian tribunals to continue in their functions, and they absolutely refused. It was necessary to establish a military tribunal, ruled under martial law, to maintain the public peace.

In a country greatly demoralized and given up to anarchy, like Peru, it was necessary to give examples of rigor, and nevertheless there have been but few condemned to death, and those for acts of unheard of cruelty.

Meanwhile the society in Lima rests quietly under the auspices of peace and order guaranteed by the Chilians.

I shall continue to communicate to your excellency my informations, and, in doing so this time, I renew my sentiments of highest consideration.

M. MARTINEZ.

No. 16.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 30, 1881.

SIR: You have already been made acquainted by my No. 13, of the 22d instant, with the determination of this government to send a special mission to South America for the purpose of adjusting whatever questions growing out of the contest between Chili and Peru and Bolivia may affect the relation of the United States to the three belligerent powers, or conduce to the restoration of good understanding among them.

I have now to inform you that William Henry Trescot, esquire, of South Carolina, has been commissioned as special envoy, with the rank of minister plenipotentiary, to the republics of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, and will forthwith set out upon his mission.

The commission which Mr. Trescot receives will not supersede the ordinary duties of yourself and your colleagues at Lima and La Paz; but all communications and negotiations connected with the settlement of the pending difficulties between Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, so far as this government may deem it judicious to take action, will be transferred to Mr. Trescot's charge.

Under the instructions which have been given to Mr. Trescot, he will place himself in direct communication with the several governments to which he is thus specially accredited. It is, however, expected that he will learn from you and your colleagues the exact condition of existing political relations, and receive such suggestions as your recent experience may enable you to submit for his consideration. The action he may take, however, must be decided upon his own responsibility, and in the exercise of his independent authority.

Mr. Trescot will be accompanied on this important mission by the Third Assistant Secretary of State. As it may be necessary to consult the representatives of the United States in Chili, Peru, and Bolivia at the same time, or to conduct a simultaneous negotiation with those governments, Mr. Trescot is empowered by the President of the United States to authorize Mr. Walker Blaine to represent the United States at any point where this necessity may occur.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Mr. Blaine to Mr. Trescot.

No. 1.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 30, 1881.

SIR: You will receive herewith your commission as special envoy with the rank of minister plenipotentiary to the republics of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia. This commission will not supersede the ordinary duties of the ministers plenipotentiary and resident now accredited to those governments. But, as they will be duly informed, all communications and negotiations connected with the settlement of the pending difficulties between Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, so far as this government may deem it judicious to take action, will be transferred to your charge. Under the instructions which will be furnished, you will place yourself in direct communication with those governments; but it is expected, as I am sure you would desire, that you should learn from the United States ministers now there the exact condition of existing political relations, and that you will give due regard to such suggestions as their recent experience enables them to submit to your consideration. Whatever action, however, you may take, must be decided upon your own responsibility, and will be in the exercise of your independent authority.

After full consideration of your suggestion that it may be necessary to conduct the same negotiation at more than one point, the President has directed the Third Assistant Secretary of State to accompany you. Should the occasion which you anticipate arise, you are authorized to give Mr. Blaine the necessary instructions; his official rank in the department, and his detail for special service on this mission, being sufficient to authorize him, without a formal commission, to execute your instructions.

Your expenses, and those of the Third Assistant Secretary who accompanies you going and returning, and such as are incidental to your residence in South America and the mission upon which you are sent, will be allowed by this Department, in the confidence that with due regard to the proprieties of your position and the duties with which you are charged, these expenses will be reasonably and carefully regulated.

You will receive herewith an advance of two thousand dollars ($2,000), which will be charged to your expense account.

In the final settlement of your account for expenses, you will be required to furnish this Department with a certificate that the amounts charged have been actually expended for that purpose.

You are authorized to expend for clerical services, while engaged upon the special mission, a sum not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500), for which you will return the proper vouchers.

Your compensation for the special mission is hereby fixed at ten thousand dollars ($10,000), upon which an allowance not to exceed $1,000 will be made to you forthwith, to be charged to your compensation account.

You are also authorized to draw upon the Secretary of State from time to time, against your compensation allowance, in sums not to exceed one thousand dollars monthly, commencing from January 1, 1882, provided the total amount of such drafts shall not exceed five thousand dollars, leaving the remainder to be adjusted at the close of your mission.

I am, &c.,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

No. 131.

Mr. Blaine to Mr. Walker Blaine.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 30, 1881.

SIR: You are aware that the President has deemed it proper to send a special mission to Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, and that the honorable William Henry Trescot, of South Carolina, has been appointed special envoy.

As it is probable that the contemplated negotiations will have to be conducted at the same time at different points, you will, by direction of the President of the United States, be attached to this mission, on special service, with your official rank as Third Assistant Secretary of State. Mr. Trescot is authorized to empower you to represent the government in any of the countries named, should the necessity occur, under such instructions as he shall give you, and he is directed, in case of his own absence, to place the mission under your charge during such absence.

While with Mr. Trescot, you will render such assistance in the discharge of his duties as he may require.

As you are already a salaried officer of the United States, no compensation can be given you beyond the repayment of your proper and necessary expenses, for which you will render an account, with such vouchers as may be obtainable, such account to be audited by the Secretary of State.

You will, in the course of your special service, communicate freely with the Department, by telegraph and in cipher, when practicable and requisite; and you will from time to time receive such instructions as may be necessary.

The Secretary of the Navy has directed the commanders of our national vessels on the South American Pacific coast to assist Mr. Trescot's movements and yours in all possible ways. To this end, a vessel of war will await your arrival at Panama.

Trusting that the success of this mission will meet the confident expectations of the President and of this Department,

I am, sir, &c.,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

No. 132.

Mr. Blaine to Mr. Trescot.

No. 2.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 1, 1881.

SIR: While the circumstances under which the President has deemed it proper to charge you with a special mission to the republics of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, render it necessary that very much must be confided to your own discretion, it is desirable that you should be placed in full possession of his views as to the general line of conduct which you will be expected to pursue.

For this purpose it is not necessary at present to go further back in the history of the unfortunate relations between Chili on the one hand and Peru and Bolivia on the other, than the time when the defeat of General Piérola, his abandonment of the capital and the coast and their occupation by the Chilian army seemed to have put an end to all responsible native government in Peru. Lima having been surrendered on the 19th January, 1881, Piérola driven across the mountains, the Chilian military occupation consolidated, and the Chilian Government refusing to recognize Piérola as representing the Government of Peru, it became absolutely necessary that some government should be established, if Peru was not to remain simply a military district of Chili.

On February 25, 1881, Mr. Christiancy, the United States minister at Lima, wrote this Department as follows:

> A movement has, therefore, been initiated among some of the leading citizens of Lima and Callao, and encouraged by the Chilian authorities, to establish a new government in opposition to that of Piérola [who is still at Tacna or Yareja].

From this date to April 13, 1881, Mr. Christiancy kept the Department informed of the probabilities of the establishment of the Calderon government, so called from the name of the eminent Peruvian statesman who had been chosen as President. On that date he wrote:

> In my own private opinion, however, if the provisional government had come up without any appearance of support from the Chilian authorities, it would have had many elements of popularity and would probably have succeeded in obtaining the acquiescence of the people. This new government realizes the importance of an early peace with Chili, the necessity of which must be recognized by every thoughtful man; while that of Piérola professes to intend to carry on the war; but it has no means for the purpose at present, and my own opinion is that any effort to do so will end in still greater calamities to Peru.

On May 23, the same minister, in a postscript to his dispatch of the 17th, says:

> Since writing the above it has become still more probable that the threat of "indefinite occupation" was intended only to drive the Peruvians into the support of the provisional government, as two days ago they allowed the government to send seventy-five soldiers to Tacna, Oroyo, &c., to control that part of the country, so as to allow the members of Congress to come to Lima; and it now begins to look as if Calderon might secure a quorum (two-thirds) of the Congress. If he does succeed, it will be some evidence that Peru acquiesces in that government. And if he gets the two-thirds of the members, I think I shall recognize the provisional government, or that of the Congress and the President they may elect, unless in the mean time I shall receive other instructions.

On the 9th of May, 1881, instructions had been sent to him from the Department, which crossed this dispatch, in which he was told:

> If the Calderon government is supported by the character and intelligence of Peru, and is really endeavoring to restore constitutional government with a view both to order within and negotiation with Chili for peace, you may recognize it as the existing provisional government, and render what aid you can by advice and good offices to that end.

Acting under these instructions, although with some expressed doubt as to the probable permanence of its existence, Mr. Christiancy, on the 26th of June, 1881, formally recognized the Calderon government. It is clear that this recognition was not an unfriendly intervention as far as the wishes and interests of Chili were concerned, for under date of May 7, 1881, two days before these instructions of the 9th were sent to Mr. Christiancy, Mr. Osborn, the United States minister to Chili, wrote from Santiago as follows:

In my 201, of date April 5, regarding the war in this section, I mentioned the fact that the minister of war, Mr. Vergara, who had been with the army at Lima, had been sent for, and was then on his way to Chili. Since his arrival the government has labored to reach a conclusion touching the course to be pursued with Peru, and to that end numerous and extended discussions among the ministers and prominent citizens of the republic, who had been invited to participate, have taken place. Three plans or propositions were discussed: First, that spoken of by me in my No. 201, involving the withdrawal of the army to Arica; second, the occupation of the entire Peruvian coast by the Chilian forces, and its government by Chilian authorities; and third, the strengthening of the government of Calderon, and the negotiation of a peace therewith. The propriety of entering into negotiations with Piérola was not even dignified with a consideration. After much labor the government reached the conclusion that the last proposition afforded the easiest way out of their complications, and it has been determined to send to Peru, in charge of the negotiations, Mr. Godoy. * * * The ministry has freely counseled with me regarding the difficulties of the situation, and in view of their previous determination to have nothing to do with Piérola, I cannot but applaud the result of their deliberations. To vacate the country now would be to turn it over to anarchy, and to attempt to occupy the entire coast would, in time, involve both countries in ruin. The most feasible way to peace is, in my opinion, the one resolved upon. In fact it is the only one which offers any reasonable hope of a solution of the difficulties during the present generation.

In giving the support of recognition to the Calderon government, therefore, so far was this government from doing what could be considered an unfriendly act to Chili, that it was, in fact, giving its aid to the very policy which Chili avowed, and which, in the opinion of competent judges, was the only method of reasonable solution.

And this conclusion of the government was strengthened and confirmed by the information which was transmitted to the Department by General Kilpatrick, the United States Minister to Chili. General Kilpatrick was appointed after the recognition of the Calderon government, and was furnished with instructions to which I have already referred.

In his dispatch No. 3, under date August 15, 1881, he says:

I have the honor to report that, so far as the assurance of public men can be relied upon, your instructions have been complied with; your ideas of final peace accepted, not only by the present administration at Santiago, but still better of Señor Santa Maria, the President elect, whose administration will have begun when you receive this note.

General Kilpatrick then proceeds to give a detailed account of a lengthy interview with the leading and most influential members of the Chilian Government, in which he quotes the following as the final assurances given to him by the Chilian secretary of state:

You may therefore say to your government that every effort would be given by Chili to strengthen the government of President Calderon, giving to it the most perfect freedom of action, considering the Chilian occupation. That no question of Chilian annexation would be touched until a constitutional government could be established in Peru, acknowledged and respected by the people, with full powers to enter into diplomatic negotiation for peace. That no territory would be exacted unless Chili failed to secure ample and just indemnification in other and satisfactory ways, as also ample security for the future; and that in no case would Chili exact territory save where Chilian enterprise and Chilian capital had developed the desert and where to-day nine-tenths of the people were Chilian.

But after this recognition, made in entire good faith to both parties, three things followed:

1. The presence of a United States minister at Lima accredited to the Calderon government, and the reception in Washington of a minister from that government, gave it, unquestionably, increased strength and confidence.

2. The adherents of Piérola, realizing the necessity of peace and the existence of a stable government to negotiate it, gradually abandoned the forlorn hope of continued resistance, and gave their adhesion to the Calderon government.

3. The Congress which assembled within the neutral zone set apart for that purpose by the Chilian authorities, and which was further allowed by the Chilian government to provide for the military impositions by the use of the national credit, and thus recognized as the representative of the Peruvian people, authorized President Calderon to negotiate a peace, but upon the condition that no territory should be ceded.

As soon as these facts indicated the possibility of a real and independent vitality in the constitution of the Calderon government the Chilian military authorities issued an order forbidding any exercise of its functions within the territory occupied by the Chilian army—that is, within the entire territory west of the mountains, including the capital and ports of Peru.

Unable to understand this sudden and, giving due regard to the professions of Chili, this unaccountable change of policy, this government instructed its minister at Lima to continue to recognize the Calderon government until more complete information would enable it to send further instructions. If our present information is correct, immediately upon the receipt of this communication they arrested President Calderon, and thus, as far as was in their power, extinguished his government. The President does not now insist upon the inference which this action would warrant. He hopes that there is some explanation which will relieve him from the painful impression that it was taken in resentful reply to the continued recognition of the Calderon government by the United States. If, unfortunately, he should be mistaken, and such a motive be avowed, your duty will be a brief one. You will say to the Chilian Government that the President considers such a proceeding as an intentional and unwarranted offense, and that you will communicate such an avowal to the Government of the United States, with the assurance that it will be regarded by the government as an act of such unfriendly import as to require the immediate suspension of all diplomatic intercourse. You will inform me immediately of the happening of such a contingency and instructions will be sent you.

But I do not anticipate such an occurrence. From the information before the Department, of which you are possessed, it is more probable that this course will be explained by an allegation that the conduct and language of the United States minister in Peru had encouraged the Calderon government to such resistance of the wishes of Chili as to render the negotiation of a satisfactory treaty of peace with the Calderon government impossible. Any explanation which relieves this action of the Chilian Government of the character of an intentional offense will be received by you to that extent, provided it does not require as a condition precedent the disavowal of Mr. Hurlbut. Whatever may be my opinion as to the discretion of all that may have been said or done by Mr. Hurlbut, it is impossible for me to recognize the right of the Chilian Government to take such action without submitting to the consideration of this government any cause of complaint which it was prepared to allege against the proceedings of the representative of the United States. The Chilian Government was in possession of the instructions sent to that minister, as well as those to his colleague at Santiago. There was no pretense that the conduct of General Kilpatrick was anything but friendly. Chili was represented here by a minister who enjoyed the confidence of his government, and nothing can justify the assumption that the United States was acting a double part in its relations to the two countries. If the conduct of the United States minister seemed inconsistent with what Chili had every reason to know was the friendly intention of the United States, a courteous representation through the Chilian minister here would have enabled this government promptly to correct or confirm him. You are not therefore authorized to make to the Chilian Government any explanation of the conduct of General Hurlbut, if that government, not having afforded us the opportunity of accepting or disavowing his conduct, insists upon making its interpretation of his proceedings the justification of its recent action.

It is hoped, however, that you will be able, by communication, at once firm and temperate, to avoid these embarrassments. If you should fortunately reach the ground where frank, mutual, explanation can be made without the sacrifice of that respect which every government owes to itself, you will then be at liberty, conforming your explanation to the recent instruction to Mr. Hurlbut, with a copy of which you are furnished, to show to the Government of Chili how much both his words and acts have been misconceived.

It is difficult for me to say now how far an explanation would be satisfactory to the President which was not accompanied by the restoration or recognition of the Calderon government. The objects which he has at heart are, first, to prevent the misery, confusion, and bloodshed which the present relations between Chili and Peru seem only too certain to renew; and, second, to take care that in any friendly attempt to reach this desirable end the Government of the United States is treated with the respectful consideration to which its disinterested purpose, its legitimate influence, and its established position entitle it. The President feels in this matter neither irritation nor resentment. He regrets that Chili seems to have misconceived both the spirit and intention of the Government of the United States, and thinks her conduct has been inconsiderate. He will gladly learn that a calmer and wiser judgment directs her counsels, and asks in no exacting spirit the correction of what were perhaps natural misunderstandings. So he would be satisfied with the manifestation of a sincere purpose on the part of Chili to aid Peru, either in restoring the present provisional government or establishing in its place one which will be allowed the proper freedom of action necessary to restore internal order and to conduct a real negotiation to some substantial result.

Should the Chilian Government, while disclaiming any intention of offense, maintain its right to settle its difficulties with Peru without the friendly intervention of other powers, and refuse to allow the formation of any government in Peru which does not pledge its consent to the cession of Peruvian territory, it will be your duty, in language as strong as is consistent with the respect due an independent power, to express the disappointment and dissatisfaction felt by the United States at such a deplorable policy.

You will say that this government recognizes without reserve the right of Chili to adequate indemnity for the cost of the war, and a sufficient guarantee that it will not again be subjected to hostile demonstration from Peru; and further, that if Peru is unable or unwilling to furnish such indemnity, the right of conquest has put it in the power of Chili to supply them, and the reasonable exercise of that right, however much its necessity may be regretted, is not ground of legitimate complaint on the part of other powers. But this government feels that the exercise of the right of absolute conquest is dangerous to the best interests of all the republics of this continent; that from it are certain to spring other wars and political disturbances; and that it imposes, even upon the conqueror, burdens which are scarcely compensated by the apparent increase of strength which it gives. This government also holds that between two independent nations, hostilities do not, from the mere existence of war, confer the right of conquest until the failure to furnish the indemnity and guarantee which can be rightfully demanded.

The United States maintains, therefore, that Peru has the right to demand that an opportunity should be allowed her to find such indemnity and guarantee. Nor can this government admit that a cession of territory can be properly exacted far exceeding in value the amplest estimate of a reasonable indemnity.

Already, by force of its occupation, the Chilian Government has collected great sums from Peru; and it has been openly and officially asserted in the Chilian Congress that these military impositions have furnished a surplus beyond the cost of maintaining its armies in that occupation. The annexation of Tarapacá, which, under proper administration, would produce annually a sum sufficient to pay a large indemnity, seems to us to be not consistent with the execution of justice.

The practical prohibition of the formation of a stable government in Peru, and the absolute appropriation of its most valuable territory, is simply the extinction of a State which has formed part of the system of republics on this continent, honorable in the traditions and illustrations of its past history, and rich in the resources for future progress. The United States, with which Peru has for many years maintained the most cordial relations, has the right to feel and express a deep interest in its distressed condition; and while with equal friendliness to Chili, we will not interpose to deprive her of the fair advantages of military success, nor put any obstacle to the attainment of future security, we cannot regard with unconcern the destruction of Peruvian nationality. If our good offices are rejected, and this policy of the absorption of an independent state be persisted in, this government will consider itself discharged from any further obligation to be influenced in its action by the position which Chili has assumed, and will hold itself free to appeal to the other republics of this continent to join it in an effort to avert consequences which cannot be confined to Chili and Peru, but which threaten with extremest danger the political institutions, the peaceful progress, and the liberal civilization of all America.

If, however, none of these embarrassing obstacles supervene, and Chili receives in a friendly spirit the representations of the United States, it will be your purpose—

First. To concert such measures as will enable Peru to establish a regular government, and initiate negotiation.

Second. To induce Chili to consent to such negotiation without cession of territory as a condition precedent.

Third. To impress upon Chili that in such negotiation she ought to allow Peru a fair opportunity to provide for a reasonable indemnity; and, in this connection, to let it be understood that the United States would consider the imposition of an extravagant indemnity, so as to make the cession of territory necessary in satisfaction, as more than is justified by the actual cost of the war, and as a solution threatening renewed difficulty between the two countries.

As it is probable that some time will elapse before the completion of all the arrangements necessary for a final negotiation, this government would suggest a temporary convention, which, recognizing the spirit of our present friendly representation, would bring Peru and Chili into amicable conference and provide for a meeting of plenipotentiaries to negotiate a permanent treaty of peace.

If negotiation be assured, the ability of Peru to furnish the indemnity will be a matter of direct interest. Upon this subject we have no information upon which definite instructions can now be based. While you will carefully abstain from any interposition in this connection, you will examine and report to this Department promptly any plans which may be suggested.

You will not indicate any wish that the Government of the United States should act as umpire in the adjudications between the contending powers. Should an invitation to that effect be extended, you will communicate by telegraph for instructions. The single and simple desire of this government is to see a just and honorable peace at the earliest day practicable, and if any other American government can more effectively aid in producing this auspicious result, the United States will cordially sustain it and lend such co-operation as the circumstances may demand.

I am, &c.,

No. 9.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago, Chili, December 2, 1881. (Received January 4, 1882.)

SIR: Had I been able, I would, at the time the Government of Chili determined to arrest and suspend the functions of the government of Calderon, have given you the reasons as they are placed in my possession by the Secretary of State, and everything done to preserve good faith as to promises made me here on the part of the government. But for four months I have been very ill; for the last two months at the point of death, unable even to write my own name. I am now just able to sit up, and for your information and on behalf of the honor and good faith of Chili I make this brief statement.

Chili guaranteed through me to demand no annexation of territory from Peru as an absolute condition of peace. This was done at your request. She agreed to demand no territory if security for future peace and safe and satisfactory indemnification could be secured otherwise, and in no case to annex territory save where a large majority of the actual residents were citizens of Chili and foreigners. She agreed to build up and strengthen the government of Calderon if possible, and if possible to make it respectable, constitutional, stable, a government with which she could treat for peace. These pledges were made in good faith and would have been fulfilled; but our new minister at Lima arrived. Whether true or false, he has the reputation of having impressed the Government of Calderon and the people of Peru with the idea that the Government of the United States would not permit annexation of Peruvian territory to Chili under any circumstances. This was published and talked of. He, himself, emphasized this in his letter to the government of Piérola. He sent messages to the Argentine Republic urging them to send a minister at once to check the power of Chili. The whole conduct of Calderon, befriended and sustained by Chili, changed; and he is openly accused now by the Government of Chili of having without authority flooded the country with his own paper currency, of having gathered and collected arms, and of having organized secret forces, and finally of having placed himself in communication with the belligerent forces of Piérola, Montero, and Sola, and the Government of Bolivia, still in open arms against Chili, now threatening her outposts, and cutting, from time to time, her lines of communication. And so far had he succeeded that the department of Arequipa had proclaimed for him, and a promise made on the part of our own minister at Lima, to said belligerents, that the Government of the United States would forcibly resist the disintegration of Peru and had determined to maintain and sustain the government of President Calderon.

These are the facts as given to me by the administration here to justify them in the course they have pursued. The arrival of your messenger with special and unknown instructions is beginning to create an excitement here and a resentment against the United States that will not be easily calmed. Chili has looked upon our country as its greatest friend; has been willing to make many sacrifices to comply with your requests; but now, in view of the course pursued at Lima, the threatening claims of some great Peruvian company professing to be backed by the Department at Washington, of which I send you a copy marked A, is creating an alarm and excitement here such as has never existed in Chili. I should like to give you details, but I am unable from extreme weakness to dictate another sentence.

Yours truly,

J. KILPATRICK.

THE PERUVIAN COMPANY,
10 Spruce Street, New York, October 19, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith official printed copies of communications on behalf of this company to the minister of Peru and Chili at Washington.

Duplicates of these inclosures were filed in the Department of State on the 11th instant, and the originals were personally delivered by * * * our counsel at Washington, on the 13th.

I place the copies in your hands, of course, without comment, and only for your early information. I have reason to suppose that you will receive instructions concerning the interests involved at an early day.

It may be proper to add that this company is now fully organized, with a capital of $250,000,000; that it includes the best legal, diplomatic, and money resources of the United States; that the title upon which it relies is approved unanimously by a large staff of eminent counsel, and that it has unqualified assurance of ample governmental backing. It has called for the property, and you may safely rely that it has at command every means of enforcing that call. I send you a recent copy of the Times, which does but reflect the average public sentiment here. All the papers (preliminary) in the case I sent to your address in this city before you sailed.

We are prepared to treat Chili fairly, even liberally, but only on condition that she recognizes, our superior rights. If she raises an issue she will simply get nothing. Right must rule.

Your obedient servant,

JACOB R. SHIPHERD.

SIR: It is not impossible that before the close of the special mission, instructions for which have been already furnished you, it may be deemed advisable that at its close you should return to the United States by way of the Argentine Confederation and Brazil.

Positive instructions may be sent you to this effect before your mission closes, but atpresent my purpose is to advise you of such possible contingency, and to add that if at the close of the special mission you should decide that a return home by the way of Buenos Ayres and Rio de Janeiro was advisable, you are hereby authorized without waiting for such instructions to return home by that way.

Should you do so, you will in your communications with the representatives of the Governments of Brazil and the Argentine Confederation impress upon them the advantages which would result from a full and frank conference between all the republics of North and South America. By the time you can reach these points the opinions of this government on this subject will have been formally submitted to them, and you will have the opportunity to enforce these views and to direct their attention to the importance of the proposed congress.

If you will telegraph the probable time of your arrival at Buenos Ayres, a vessel of the United States will meet you at that place.

Mr. Martinez to Mr. Blaine.

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, December 5, 1881. (Received Dec. 5.)

SIR: I intend to go on with the agreeable task of letting you know which are the last authentic news from the Pacific coast, as they are generally made public in a way calculated to mislead.

Your excellency has already been made acquainted with the decree issued by the Chilian general, Patricio Lynch, prohibiting Dr. Garcia Calderon from exercising any act of jurisdiction within the territory occupied by the Chilian forces, but by no means out of that territory.

Indeed there was a political and military misdeed in the fact of the commander of an invading army allowing the so-called provisional President, whose incapacity and unwillingness to make the peace were well known, to continue as a government in face of his foe. You will please to allow me to state again to your excellency that Chili never recognized Garcia Calderon as the provisional President, and that had she made such a recognition it would have been outlawed when that gentleman made up his mind to reject the terms of peace my government proposed to him.

In spite of the above-named decree, Garcia Calderon went on assuming to himself the functions of President of the government, but being his attitude apparently obnoxious, the Chilian general did not deem it proper to take any measure against him, and I warn your excellency that the ground for the General Lynch to act as I have just stated was the recognition of Garcia Calderon as provisional President, made by the United States purposely to lead way to an arrangement of peace.

But it happened Mr. Galvez to address in those days a circular to the diplomatic and consular corps in paper bearing the official seal, dated in Lima, and issued in such a condition as every public document is intended to have, and stating that it was expected to make peace with no dissatisfaction for the national dignity; that is to say, with no territorial compensation. Mr. Galvez was Mr. Garcia Calderon's secretary of state.

Being this an open and daring violation of the Chilian commander's decree, he was compelled to take such a measure as to put in prison the so-called provisional President and his secretary of state.

The measure was executed most quietly. Mr. Garcia Calderon intimates he wanted to hold a private interview with General Lynch, so he walked along about fourteen blocks and not the slightest sign of resistance was noticeable in the crowd.

The prisoners were taken, surrounded with the best treatment, to the iron-clad Almiranti Cockrane, and in Pisco they were transferred to the frigate Chili.

Meanwhile the Peruvian general, Montero, being out of the reach of the Chilian forces, has accepted the vice-presidency of the republic, and notwithstanding being the offering of the vice-presidency and its acceptation irregular acts, the Chilians, keeping faith to their resolution of not interfering with the internal politics in Peru, had opposed no resistance whatever to Montero.

A Peruvian committee started from Lima to meet Montero, and contrive he should go as far as Chimbote, so that he may try to capitulate some terms of peace which my government might agree to.

This incident shows the possibility of the conflict to be arranged as far as the Peruvians will not content themselves with the deceitful expectations of a foreign interference.

The ex-dictator, Piérola remains in Ayacucho with an army 1,700 strong. His general secretary, Garcia ì Garcia, issued under the date of the 23d October a circular addressed to the chiefs and governors in the republic, bitterly criticising Mr. Hurlbut's letter, which your excellency has already been acquainted with.

The Chieftain Caceres is, with an army stronger than that of Piérola, not very far from Lima, and keeps a reserved attitude, he does not declare himself in anybody's favor, but apparently he is obeying his former chief, Piéroła.

Such is without any comment the condition of affairs in Peru.

It would be not unsuitable for your excellency to become acquainted with a somewhat painful incident. Garcia Calderon intended to send to Arequipa one of his brothers, as a commissioner, and asked permission for him to be allowed to land at Mollendo which is now a blockaded port. He was not permitted to do it. Then the said commissioner got by stealth a passport from the Chilian colonel, Valdivieso, telling him he purposed to go from Lima to a near place. Having the passport been given by Valdivieso, Garcia Calderon's brother, wrote down on it that it was good to go to Mollendo. This was not enough for his purposes, being it necessary to get permission from the general headquarters to reach a blockaded port, he did not ask for it; but the United States man-of-war Alaska was about to sail off to Mollendo, and everybody asserts on her board went the commissioner of Garcia Calderon, taking with him correspondence and money to the rebels in Arequipa. Though

I cannot state the fact officially, it appears to me to bear the characteristics of the truth.

As for Bolivia is concerned, all that is now known is that General Campero has driven as far as four or five days' march from Tarapacá, having under his command an army about 4,500 strong.

The Chilian authorities are now under notice not to allow themselves to be surprised.

It is to be derived from the precedents informations that the enemies of Chili are again armed and unwilling to make peace, repeatedly proposed to long ago. They consider a term as indecorous, notwithstanding it has been agreed with by many nations superior to them, and Chili is not to be responsible for such a denying, nor she can be ascribed to the delaying of a status quo, the lasting of which is not her fault.

Accept, sir, &c.,

M. MARTINEZ.

No. 83.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Valparaiso, December 9, 1881. (Received Jan. 12, 1882.)

SIR: I learn that some arrangement has just been entered into by the Chilian Government, but not yet made public, securing to the holders of Peruvian bonds one-half the proceeds of the guano now in the possession of Chili. This, as I am informed, has been formally approved by the representatives of England, France, and Germany; but I do not understand that any guarantee is attached to it.

If I had the power I should at once see the minister of foreign relations and demand information.

On Saturday last I telegraphed to you the information of the death of General Kilpatrick, but have had no reply.

Montero's letter openly thanking General Hurlbut for the promised intervention of the United States has created an intense excitement.

It seems to me that with less haste more progress might have been made. This country need not have been agitated and alarmed by this imprudent zeal, and our influence, which has for years been paramount here, need not have been destroyed.

The senate and house of deputies have been in secret session for days in the discussion of these questions. The leading senator of the party opposed to the government said to me:

> We are a unit. The United States may crush a sister republic if she can afford to do so; but she shall not intimidate and dictate to us; we will die hard, and we will make use of every resource which God and nature have given us.

And, knowing as I do the temper of the people, I believe this to be the universal sentiment.

I may say, incidentally, that confidence in the good faith of the United States has been shaken by the reports and "official communications" of the so-called Peruvian company which have been, imprudently, it seems to me, shown to the minister of foreign relations.

I have written what I have from a sense of duty, and I believe that you will appreciate the motive, informal though it may be.

No. 4.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 16, 1881.

SIR: Some erroneous statements, now being circulated in a portion of the American press, may reach Santiago and create an injurious impression in the minds of the Chilian Government; and I write you this instruction from excess of caution, in order that no enduring harm may result.

The erroneous statements in the press to which I especially refer are those which represent this government as in some way giving encouragement to the Cochet claim against Peru, which, being acknowledged, should enable the United States to pay an indemnity to Chili and then practically own Peru, either directly or through an association of American citizens.

This is the extreme statement, and it has many shadings and variations.

You will take prompt and special care to anticipate any evil that might result from these rumors being circulated by a disavowal and denial of them in whole and in any part.

The only claim for which this Department has instructed our minister at Lima to use his good offices is that known as the Landreau claim, and this to the extent only of insisting that Mr. Landreau should be permitted to have an authoritative investigation of his claim by the Peruvian Government, and that if found to be good and valid it should be provided for in any treaty with Chili which might affect the property to which it attaches.

The law officer of the Department of State, as long ago as 1874, made an exhaustive report on this claim, and recommended that this government should interpose its good offices in behalf thereof.

On the 20th of July, 1874, my predecessor, Mr. Secretary Fish, instructed our minister at Lima to use his good offices with the Peruvian authorities in behalf of Mr. John C. Landreau, "with a view of securing from that government a speedy investigation and adjustment of his claim."

On the 20th day of February, 1880, the House of Representatives of the last Congress unanimously passed the following resolution:

That the petition of John C. Landreau, the report made thereon by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the accompanying papers be transmitted to the Executive Department, with the request that the President take such steps as, in his opinion, may be proper, and in accordance with international law to secure to the said John C. Landreau a final settlement and adjustment of his claim against the Government of Peru; and that, if in his opinion it is proper to do so, the President invite the Government of France to co-operate with the United States in this behalf.

I inclose herewith, for your further information, copies of my instructions to Mr. Hurlbut on this subject. It gives me pleasure to say in this connection, that Mr. Hurlbut's action in regard to both the Landreau and Cochet claims has been marked by entire prudence and discretion.

While disabusing the mind of the Chilian Government of any impression that the United States meditates intervention on behalf of private claims, beyond the use of its good offices, you will say that justice seems to demand that Landreau should have an opportunity to be heard in support of his claim before a tribunal in Peru competent to decide it, and that, if decided in his favor, a treaty of peace which might cede territory to Chili should not be made in disregard of any rights which Mr. Landreau may be found, after an impartial judicial investigation, to possess.

Further than this the Department of State has not felt authorized to go, and I must express the hope that the governments of Peru and Chili, to both of which you are accredited, will recognize the moderation and justice of the request made by this government.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, December 28, 1881. (Received Dec. 31.)

SIR: The last steamer from Aspinwall brought the following authentic news:

Señor Ligardo Montero issued a proclamation at Cajamarca, on the 15th of November, stating that he assumes the Presidency of Peru and enforcing the continuance of the state of active war against Chili. According to that proclamation, the capital of the republic was to be the inland town of Cajamarca.

Meanwhile Señor Andres A. Cáseres, the chieftain of the guerilla bands stationed at Chosica, was proclaimed President by his troops. He also issued a proclamation, under the date of the 24th of November, in which he acknowledges the country to be in a state of anarchy; resigns, for the present, the Presidency, till the people may freely elect a President; and retains, meanwhile, the political and military government of the central provinces.

Señor Cáseres says also that the state of war is vigorously maintained, and that he hopes the Peruvians will at last vanquish their foe. Señor Cáseres does not declare whom he judges to be chief of the nation, but he confines himself to disowning the authority of Piérola.

As to the rest, the old personal political parties of the country are entirely disorganized, disrupted, and in a state of anarchy. I think it to be highly important for your excellency to be acquainted with these facts that may lead you to fully appreciate the condition of affairs in South America.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 28th ultimo, giving me your views as to the present condition of Peru, derived from your latest intelligence. I need not inform you that it has been read with the most lively interest.

I was much gratified yesterday with the assurances which you gave me, in our personal interview, that your government, in the arrest and imprisonment of Calderon, was in no way instigated by an unfriendly feeling towards the United States. If you feel yourself at liberty to renew that assurance in writing I shall be still further and greatly gratified by your doing so. Such a communication, written in the friendly spirit which marked your verbal communications, will tend to promote that friendly feeling which is so desirable among American republics.

No. 143.

Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Trescot.

No. 6.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 9, 1882.

SIR: Since you received your instructions on your departure as special envoy to Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, I have sent you by cable two instructions. As I have not heard of your having received them, and to make their purport more intelligible than the brevity of a telegram would permit, I send this, stating the proper construction of your original instructions, somewhat modifying them, and indicating how they are to be executed.

The President wishes in no manner to dictate or make any authoritative utterance to either Peru or Chili as to the merits of the controversy existing between those republics, as to what indemnity should be asked or given, as to a change of boundaries, or as to the personnel of the Government of Peru. The President recognizes Peru and Chili to be independent republics, to which he has no right or inclination to dictate.

Were the United States to assume an attitude of dictation towards the South American republics, even for the purpose of preventing war, the greatest of evils, or to preserve the autonomy of nations, it must be prepared by army and navy to enforce its mandate, and to this end tax our people for the exclusive benefit of foreign nations.

The President's policy with the South American republics and other foreign nations is that expressed in the immortal address of Washington, with which you are entirely familiar. What the President does seek to do, is to extend the kindly offices of the United States impartially to both Peru and Chili, whose hostile attitude to each other he seriously laments; and he considers himself fortunate in having one so competent as yourself to bring the powers of reason and persuasion to bear in seeking the termination of the unhappy controversy; and you will consider as revoked that portion of your original instruction which directs you on the contingency therein stated as follows:

> You will say to the Chilian Government that the President considers such a proceeding as an intentional and unwarranted offense, and that you will communicate such an avowal to the Government of the United States with the assurance that it will be regarded by the government as an act of such unfriendly import as to require the immediate suspension of all diplomatic intercourse. You will inform me immediately of the happening of such a contingency, and instructions will be sent to you.

Believing that a prolific cause of contention between nations is an irritability which is too readily offended, the President prefers that he shall himself determine after report has been made to him whether there is or is not cause for offense.

It is also the President's wish that you do not visit (although indicated in your original instruction you should do so), as the envoy of this government, the Atlantic republics after leaving Chili.

The United States is at peace with all the nations of the earth, and the President wishes hereafter to determine whether it will conduce to that general peace, which he would cherish and promote, for this government to enter into negotiations and consultation for the promotion of peace with selected friendly nationalities without extending a like confidence to other peoples with whom the United States is on equally friendly terms.

If such partial confidence would create jealousy and ill-will, peace, the object sought by such consultation, would not be promoted.

The principles controlling the relations of the republics of this hemisphere with each other and with other nationalities may, on investigation, be found to be so well established that little would be gained at this time by reopening a subject which is not novel. The President at all events prefers time for deliberation.

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, January 10, 1882. (Received January 11.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform your excellency of the latest news received by this legation through the Pacific mail.

The fact that Rear-Admiral Montero has deserted from the ranks of his former chief, the dictator Piérola, is fully confirmed. Montero has accepted the vice presidency of Peru, which was offered to him by several gentlemen of Lima, called notables. He needed no other investment to call himself the "constitutional president."

As this expression has been lately used in a very extraordinary sense, so that many of the journals of the United States have unconsciously made use of it, I deem it necessary to acquaint your excellency with its meaning.

The last constitutional president of Peru, that is to say, elected by the people according to the constitution, was General Mariano Ygnacio Prado, whose term came to an end long ago. Those who have succeeded him in exercising the supreme power have been as constitutional as the emperors of the lower empire who had themselves proclaimed by their troops. They are called constitutional Presidents, because, after having irregularly assumed the supreme power, they enforce one of the many constitutions which Peru has given to herself since its independence.

As your excellency can easily perceive, that is an abuse of the term which tends to pervert every idea of regular government.

Notwithstanding this, Mr. Hurlbut gave to the provisional government of Garcia Calderon the name of constitutional, and revolutionary to that of Piérola.

These pernicious errors ought to give way to a correct and suitable knowledge of persons and things.

Montero issued at Cajamarca, a town situated in the northern mountains of Peru, a circular under the date of 28th of October, 1881, addressed to the governors, stating that he was armed against the invaders, and that he hoped to effect a happy solution of the pending questions by virtue of the effective mediation of the United States Government.

The same chief circulated extensively the strangest document to which it is possible to refer in the history of diplomacy. This was a letter or manifest addressed by General Hurlbut to the so-called notables of Lima, which your excellency is acquainted with, but a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

The same Mr. Montero wrote to his former chief under date of November 22, 1881, a letter explaining to him the grounds of his desertion, Meanwhile, Mr. Nicholas Piérola gave up his nominal position, by issuing a decree and a proclamation under the date of November 28, 1881.

According to the latest news, the troops under Montero do not amount to more than 1,500 or 1,600 men, poorly armed and equipped.

As your excellency can see, that is but a sad comedy.

The so-called provisional president, Señor Francisco Garcia Calderon, is at present in the town of Quillota, in the province of Valparaiso, Chili.

Caceres, the chief of the Monteneros, is in Chosica, a short distance from Lima He has not declared himself in any way, and we have every reason to believe that he will act on his own account and at his own risk, and will presently recognize the proclamation made to him by his own army, which does not exceed three thousand or three thousand five hundred men. The existence of this leader is virtually dependent on the will of the Chilian general-in-chief, who can annihilate him when ever he chooses to attack him.

As regards Mr. Piérola, he is at present in Lima, the report of his having sailed for Europe having proved incorrect. He is living tranquilly, as a private citizen, under the security afforded by the protection of the Chilian army of occupation.

It is clearly evident that whenever the Chilian army shall abandon the Peruvian capital anarchy will begin its disastrous work, and for this this the Peruvians alone are responsible.

My government had an army in readiness to proceed to Arequipa, in order to clear the situation, and thus facilitate the securing of peace; but it has lately desisted from this purpose because it felt that the purely local results to be secured would not correspond to the sacrifices which a new campaign involved.

An expedition, however, is ready to march to Janja, and will put an end to its occupation by Cáceres. This will only leave Rear-Admiral Montero in the north of Peru. He is without prestige, without arms, without resources, and with no other territory over which to exercise his authority than that on which he treads.

If the sensible people still remaining in Peru do not see that the time has arrived to accept the conditions which Chili, with perfect justice, demands, they will bring upon their country all the consequences of that obstinate and incomprehensible resistance. I do not believe that there is in the history of the world, an instance of a country which, being so impotent to defend itself, showed itself so blindly stubborn in enduring the laws of war. Everything which in any way tends to strengthen that resistance is, and will be, contrary to the principles which govern human affairs.

General Lynch, seeing that all the branches of municipal revenues were in complete disorder and that their management was irregular, ordered the appointment of a supervisor, a measure which degraded the municipals, who, in consequence, threatened to resign their posts. The journals have indeed published the fact that the alcalde Canevaro, and other municipals, had resigned, but we are not aware that such is the case.

The Bolivian general, Campero, is at the head of a small army, and threatens to invade Tarapacá, but I assure your excellency, with an assurance based upon many and incontestable reasons, that that threat cannot possibly be realized. There is not the remotest fear that a drop of blood will be shed on that side.

With sentiments of the highest consideration,

M. MARTINEZ.

[Translation of inclosure with Mr. Martinez's note of January 10, 1882.]

The following communication has been addressed by the North American minister to the notables of Lima:

GENTLEMEN: At your request I make the following declarations:

1. The United States of America are strongly in favor of the cessation of hostilities between Chili and Peru, and the speedy restoration of peace.

2. They are decidedly opposed to any dismemberment of the territory of Peru, except with the free and full consent of this nation.

3. They are of the opinion that Chili, as the result of the war, has acquired the right of indemnification for the expenses of the war, and that Peru cannot refuse its payment.

The Government of Chili knows that these are the views of the United States, but the divisions which exist in Peru paralyze the good effects (offices?) of the United States and afford a pretext to Chili for eluding action by the latter in conformity with our desires, and for prolonging the state of war and the military occupation of Peru. Chili says: "We also desire peace, but there is here no one competent to treat to that end." This statement is unfortunately true. For such a condition of affairs, the only remedy is to be found in Peru itself. Union under whomsoever may be chosen will dispel the pretext of Chili, and will give to the United States an advantage which they need, and of which they will be able to take advantage. Nothing else, in my judgment, will save Peru from indefinite military occupation by Chili. Peru must herself effect her own salvation through the sacrifice of personal conditions (ambitions?) on the altar of the country's redemption.

LEGATION OF CHILI IN THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 10, 1882. (Received January 10.)

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your excellency's note of the 7th instant, whereby you were pleased to request me to furnish to you, in writing, the explanations which I had the honor to give you on the occasion of our conference which was held on the 5th instant, in reference to the circumstances which preceded or accompanied the arrest of Don Francisco Garcia Calderon, at Lima, and the bearing which that act might have upon the very friendly and cordial relations which happily exist between your excellency's government and mine.

I thank your excellency for the opportunity which you have thus afforded me to contribute, by means of a plain and unvarnished statement, towards drawing still closer the bonds of sincere friendship which unite our respective countries.

I have already taken occasion, verbally, to furnish the explanations which I now have the pleasure to put in writing, three times to Mr. Blaine, your excellency's honorable predecessor, and once to your excellency. Both Mr. Blaine and your excellency were fully satisfied, and I did not think it necessary to reduce said explanations to writing, because it did not appear to me that the Secretaries of State had attached serious importance to a hypothesis which, in my humble opinion, had no foundation worthy of consideration. Nevertheless, in the memorandum which I had the honor to address to the Department of State on the 21st of November last, I explained all the circumstances relative to the ephemeral government of Garcia Calderon, and stated the incontestable reasons that had existed for its abolition, which reasons are altogether unconnected with the fact of the recognition of that government by that of your excellency.

I must, moreover, remind your excellency that during our interview I called your attention to a very significant incident, which was that a fortnight before the arrest of Garcia Calderon at Lima, I read to the Hon. Mr. Blaine, in the presence of Mr. Hitt, his First Assistant Secretary, a letter addressed to me by Rear-Admiral Lynch, in which the latter stated that if Mr. Garcia Calderon did not yield obedience to the order issued by him (Lynch), forbidding him to perform jurisdictional acts within the lines of the Chilian occupation, he should be obliged to put him under arrest. Admiral Lynch could not know when or how Mr. Garcia Calderon would disobey that order, and when I communicated the contents of the aforesaid note to Mr. Blaine (which I did as an evidence of the most perfect frankness and of the fullest confidence in the sincerity of the friendship of the United States for Chili), I considered the event in question as being a future and contingent one which would probably never come to pass.

After the repeated and terrible disasters which Peru had suffered, it seemed that none but a man of very high intellectual and moral qualities could unite the scattered elements of order existing in the country, in order to treat for peace. Peru has always had military governments, which are better respected in countries in which public order stands on no solid foundation; and when the attempt was made to establish a civil government there, it was found impossible to advance beyond the initiatory steps.

Chili has never desired to interfere in the domestic politics of her enemy; she has, nevertheless, not failed to study with the deepest interest the character and qualities of the men who have taken, or who might be called to take, a prominent part in public affairs, and who seemed capable of rising to the height which the situation demanded, of holding the reins of government with a firm hand, and of inducing their fellow citizens to take the only course reserved for them by the laws of war. It was natural, too, that sensible men in Peru should think of seeking and finding the man whom the situation demanded, in order that they might place the destinies of their country in his hands.

Mr. Garcia Calderon was mentioned, although it was said for him that his character lacked most of the qualities which the circumstances required; that he was not fit to govern, that he was deficient in courage, and that he had no following upon which he could really rely. It was, however, added that he was unstained by peculation or extortion; that he had the reputation of being an excellent lawyer, and that his elevation to power would meet with no serious opposition.

My government had no reason to express an opinion with regard to the choice of the person who was to be placed at the head of affairs in Peru. It appeared to it sufficient that Mr. Garcia Calderon enjoyed a good reputation for honesty, and it decided to lend him a certain amount of co-operation and support, in order to furnish him the means and the opportunity to establish his authority.

The Chilian plenipotentiaries at Lima informed the future President of Peru what were the conditions of peace, and he accepted them as relatively good, and promised to labor with a view to making them the basis of a treaty.

Chili did not recognize, nor was she willing solemnly to recognize, Garcia Calderon's government for many reasons. When he asked that his government might be formally recognized, so that he might be enabled to gain some ascendancy in public opinion, this was refused, on the ground that his government did not yet possess any condition of solidity, respectability, or independence.

In fact, the manner in which that provisional President rose to power could not have been more irregular and anomalous than it was, and the position in which he was placed, as regarded his own country and the army of occupation, was still more extraordinary and exceptional. He exercised no jurisdiction save within the limits of the territory which was under the control of the Chilian authorities, and he was under the wing and the moral and material protection of the army of occupation. He might at any time have been arrested by any police officer.

Your excellency knows that a government of that kind could not be recognized by that of Chili, which needed, in order to be able to treat, to have a respectable and respected government to treat with, and one that was able really to pledge the faith of its nation.

Your excellency's government, undoubtedly, had more liberty of action than did mine, because it did not need to enter into any ulterior negotiations with the Peruvian Government, and was consequently able to act with greater freedom in contributing to give Garcia Calderon the moral prestige and authority of which he stood in need.

Under such auspices, Garcia Calderon began to act in violation of all his previous promises, and was guilty of a series of acts subversive of the legitimate rights and interests of Chili, so that he rendered himself absolutely unworthy of any toleration or indulgence on the part of my government.

In the memorandum of November 21, to which I refer, I mentioned four or five of the principal acts which, with evident reason, caused that gentleman to lose the favor of the Chilian Government. In order to avoid repetitions, which would make this communication too long, I will simply refer to what I said in that paper, which I had the honor to transmit to your excellency immediately after your elevation to the high position which you now occupy.

Mr. Garcia Calderon having been guilty of these offenses, and having openly declared that he would not treat on the basis proposed by Chili, the doom of his government was irrevocably sealed.

In the steps subsequently taken by the Government of Chili, that government paid no attention to the proceedings of General Hurlbut, upon which the provisional president of Peru said that he based his reactionary conduct, but acted exclusively in accordance with its own rights.

The fact is that my government never believed that General Hurlbut was faithfully interpreting the lofty, considerate, and friendly policy of the United States Government.

The first step taken by General Lynch (who had been duly authorized to do so) was to deprive Garcia Calderon of the arms which, trusting to his honor, he had lent him. Subsequently, when that gentleman's attitude became more dangerous, he was dispossessed of the bureaus which he had organized and was peremptorily ordered to perform no governmental or jurisdictional act within the lines of the Chilian occupation. Still later, when he intentionally violated this order, he was arrested and sent to Chili, but was treated with every courtesy and attention.

The American General Scott acted, under similar circumstances, in the same manner in Mexico.

Even if the provisional government had been recognized by all friendly powers, Chili would have had to act as she did, not only for the maintenance of her rights, but from a sense of her own dignity and self-respect. And even if Chili had recognized that government, that circumstance would not have rendered it inviolable, and she would still have been obliged to act precisely as she did.

Consequently I can and do assure your excellency, in the most formal and solemn manner, that my government had not the most remote intention or the slightest purpose to impair, in any way, the state of friendship and cordiality which previously to those events, during the same and subsequently, has existed, and which it has always desired should exist, between it and the Government of the United States.

I likewise had the honor to remark to your excellency, in our interview of the 5th instant, that certain financial schemes had thrown difficulties in the way of the conclusion of peace with Peru, and that while those schemes remained on the carpet it would be difficult to reach the desired solution. I may now add that the parties interested in those operations are endeavoring, both through the public press and such other means as they find available, to predispose the United States against Chili, and that they spare no pains to present the most natural and logical events of my government in a wrong light.

I avail myself, &c.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 16, 1882.

SIR: In acknowledging the receipt of your excellency's note of the 10th instant, permit me to convey to you my gratification in receiving your assurance that the Government of Chili, in its attitude toward the Calderon Government in Peru and in its treatment of President Calderon, had no intention or purpose to impair in any way the state of friendship and cordiality which has always existed between it and the Government of the United States, and which it is the sincere wish of this government may be perpetual.

Accept, sir, &c.,

LEGATION OF CHILI,
Washington, January 18, 1882. (Received January 21.)

SIR: I continue the agreeable task of communicating to you the news brought by the last mail.

The rumor current after the arrival of the last mail, to the effect that the municipal authorities had been discharged from their duties in Lima, had proved correct. The general-in-chief of the Chilian army felt himself obliged to take this measure because the municipality wished to act with absolute independence of the executive authority, which was in every way impossible, and also because the management of the municipal funds was in every way improper. On the other hand, the municipality failed to make the necessary expenses for the police, and security, and cleanliness of the city, notwithstanding the fact that they had more than sufficient resources for it.

These circumstances induced the general-in-chief of the army of occupation to name a superintendent of the municipality; and since the mayor (alcalde) refused to recognize the measure, the rear-admiral was forced to issue a decree with the date of 7th of December, declaring that the functions of the municipality had ceased, and that Señor Adolfo Guerrero was nominated as political chief of the department of Lima.

This measure was indispensable, and for considerations which had no right to exist, had not been taken beforehand because it was impossible to maintain a system whose political and local administration obeyed principles, interests, and regulations completely independent and opposite.

At present there are in Peru four supreme chiefs: General Montero in the north; General Cáceres in the center; Colonel Latorre in Arequipa, Puno, and Cuzco; and another, Colonel Pacheco Cespedes, in Moquegua, none of whom recognizes the other as superior.

A manuscript of a letter said to have been sent by General Hurlbut to the guerrilla chief Cáceres has been very widely circulated in Lima. In Lima the authenticity of this document was not doubted, and Mr. Hurlbut took no steps to deny it. Your excellency will permit me to inclose a copy of this strange document, which has been published in the press of Panama. I received a manuscript copy, with the assurance that it was authentic.

I take pleasure, &c.,

M. MARTINEZ.

[Inclosure in note from Mr. Martinez, of January 18, 1882.—Translation.]

Mr. Hurlbut to General Cáceres.

DEAR SIR: I did not, for weighty reasons, answer your letter by the same person who brought it to me.

The United States have already recognized the constitutional government, first in the person of Dr. Don Francisco Garcia Calderon, and afterwards in that of the Vice-President, Rear Admiral Montero.

It is, consequently, evident that it is impossible for it to recognize any other government.

The plan of a junta appears to me to be altogether impracticable in fact and inadmissable in theory. A government under this form would, in my judgment, only lead to disagreement and discord, and instead of assuring unity of action, would involve uncertainties and hesitations.

I am anxious to see the speediest disappearance of all parties, and that all Peruvians may be united for the maintenance of a constitutional règime. This would demand sacrifices on the part of some, but all good causes are strengthened precisely in this way—by sacrifices.

Within ten days or two weeks there will reach this city special commissioners sent out by the United States. It is of the highest importance to say to them that all Peru is at last united in the sole aim of saving the country.

I see no other way by which you can add additional lustre to your high reputation, nor by which you can render such good service to the cause of the independence of Peru.

I am, &c.,

S. A. HURLBUT.

[Confidential.]

No. 311.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Lima, Peru, February 19, 1879. (Received March 17.)

SIR: As we have no minister at Bolivia, and a serious, that is now an open, rupture having risen between that country and Chili (partly referred to in my dispatch No. 304, of 10th instant), and which is very probable will involve this republic, I have thought it necessary to inform the department of the events that have taken place and the causes to date.

The district or province of Atacame is a desert, or at least a greater part that borders on the Pacific Ocean in Bolivia, bounded on the south by the parallel line of the twenty-fourth degree of latitude, a line that was agreed upon with Chili in a treaty of limits celebrated between the two countries August 6, 1874, the Bolivians agreeing to pay the Chilians half of the export duties collected on all minerals exported from Atacame. By a protocol to the above treaty, made in July, 1875, the agreement in relation to duties collected on metals was rescinded, but remained on guano. Previous to this treaty many rights and franchises were ceded by Malgarejo, one of the Presidents of Bolivia, but the Bolivians claim that those cessions were never confirmed by any legislative sanction.

The province of Atacame is very productive of nitrate and, in many parts, of borax. The desert extends from the coast about 70 miles eastward to the Andean range of mountains, which are rich in metals—copper, silver, and gold. Antofagasta, about latitude 23° 40′ south, is the port from whence are exported the products of the nitrate fields. The nitrate works, the railroad from the port to manufactories, the moles at the port, all are owned and built by Chilian and some English capitalists.

According to the treaty of 1874 with Chili, every facility was given to induce the Chilians to invest their capital in these works, and by Article IV it was stipulated.

> The duties of exportation imposed on minerals from the zone referred to in the previous articles shall not be increased to more than actually paid at present; nor the persons, industries, or capital of Chilians shall be subject to contributions or taxes of any kind other than those existing. The clause in this article shall remain in force for the term of twenty-five years.

By a law passed in the Bolivian Congress February 14, and decreed the 23d, 1878, it was ordered that all nitrate exported from Antofagasta should pay ten cents per quintal as contribution. It was not put into force at the time, remaining in abeyance. The nitrate company and the Chilian minister at La Paz interposed to prevent, if possible, the carrying out of the law; the company, on the ground that their rights, legally acquired, were attacked; the minister, in defense of an existing international treaty. Matters remained in this state, when, on the 8th of November last, the Chilian government, through its minister at La Paz, informed the Government of Bolivia that if the law of contribution was put into force Chili would declare the treaty of limits of 1874 annulled, and would throw the responsibility on Bolivia.

The Government of Bolivia answered that there was no room for such a measure, as the tax was imposed on an association or company. The result was that an order was given to the authorities of Antofagasta for the immediate collection from the nitrate company of the sum of $90,848.15, being the amount calculated on export of nitrate from the date of the decree of the 14th of February; this order was given on the 17th of December; on the 18th the Chilian minister, in a note to the Bolivian Government, that on receiving the note ordering the tax to be collected, he, in the name of his government, declared the treaty of 1874 abrogated.

On the 26th of December the Bolivian Government answered the Chilian minister saying that the course taken by the Chilian Government was to be regretted; that it was justified in its procedure, and reminding the minister that according to article 2 of the treaty there was always a chance in such cases for arbitration.

It appears that Bolivia held off, and would have left the question to be regulated by Congress on its meeting, or by arbitration; but the action of Chili, in its note of the 8th of November, aroused the feelings of the Bolivians, and caused the order for the carrying out of the decree.

Various rumors reached Peru that a rupture would take place but were not generally credited, all doubts were removed a short time since when it was known that Chili had ordered some vessels of war to carry troops to Antofagasta, to land, seize the port, railroad, and the nitrate works. From information received by telegraph, it appears that a fleet of Chilian vessels arrived at the port on the 14th instant, disembarked fifteen hundred troops and have taken possession of the place; the fleet consisted of the iron-clad Admiral Cochrane, the Blanco Encalada, and the O. Hoggins. It is said that these vessels carried arms and ammunition for two thousand more men that could be armed in Bolivian territory as a great majority of inhabitants of the nitrate district are Chilians.

On the 16th instant Señor Reyes Ortiz, minister of foreign affairs of Bolivia, now acting as a special envoy, arrived at this capital, it is said by the press, to ask permission for the privilege to pass Bolivian troops through Peruvian territory, from Lake Titicaca to Mollendo, a port some 400 miles north of Antofagasta.

It is certain that the arrival of this envoy has caused quite a sensation; it is thought that the object of his mission is to induce Peru to take part with Bolivia.

I have heard on various occasions that there existed a secret treaty for an alliance, offensive, and defensive, between the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, and Peru, against Chili; by making inquiries I have learned from trustworthy sources that a treaty as above was made and signed July 3, 1873, and is still in force.

Foreigners residing in Peru will notice that there exists great antagonism against Chili; while apparently friendly as two sisters and neighboring republics of the same origin, there is a deep feeling of antipathy between them. It is difficult to give a cause for these sentiments; the Peruvians say that Chili is overbearing and rejoices at any ill fortune that may overtake her neighbors. I believe this feeling of ill will goes back for generations, the Peruvians looking upon the Chilians with contempt during colonial times.

Most of the persons with whom I have conversed in relation to this rupture express regret at the state of affairs, but it can be easily perceived that their sympathies are with Bolivia, not for any liking for that republic, but through ill will to Chili; and I judge Peru will eventually be induced by some overt act to take part with Bolivia against Chili.

The President of this republic, General Prado, when an exile from this country, resided in Chili; and it is said is personally very friendly to that State, where, reports say, he has also pecuniary interests. I think General Prado will do all that is possible to prevent an outbreak between the countries, but I fear that public opinion will counteract his peaceful efforts and overwhelm him.

What may complicate Peru is a treaty made in secret session February 5, 1877, wherein the right of transit was guaranteed to Bolivian troops through Peruvian territory at any time; this treaty is not spoken of, but to a few is known to exist.

A few days ago a committee of some of the principal Peruvian naval officers were ordered to examine the war vessels of this republic, now at Callao; the result of the examination was an order that the vessels should go into dock to be overhauled and cleaned.

It is to be greatly regretted that these South American States should be so easily led into war, and for such trifling causes; none of them can afford it; this country, as will be seen by my despatch No. 304 of the 10th instant, is in a very impecunious state, Chili not so much, and financially is better off; Bolivia has not much to lose; the Antofagasta nitrate fields are separated from the agricultural and inhabited parts of the republic some hundred of miles by the western range of the Andes, crossed by narrow and difficult passes at certain points.

Chili could easily hold the coast, and perhaps annex it, if Peru does not interfere. Some of the principal mines of Bolivia, silver and copper, are worked by Chilians and with Chilian capital; these would be seized and confiscated by the Bolivians.

By some thinking persons it is feared that if Peru takes part in the conflict, and troops are taken from Lima for the southern provinces, Piérola will make his appearance in a short time near the capital; if he did, I think it would upset the present administration and create great political changes in the country.

No. 314.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Lima, Peru, February 26, 1879. (Received March 17.)

SIR: I have the honor to refer to my dispatch, No. 311, of the 19th instant, in relation to the conflict between Chili and Bolivia. On the 15th the Chilian minister at La Paz declared that peace had been broken, and demanded his passports, which were given.

On the 23d instant telegrams were received that the Chilian Government had prohibited the exportation of mules from the Argentine Republic to Peru. On the 23d the mails from the south brought full details of the taking of the ports of the Bolivian coast, which reads like a formal possession by the Chilian forces, and intentions of remaining, the Bolivian authorities having left and Chilian taking their places.

It is not known what position this country will take, the last three days being carnival, no papers have been published, and all official business suspended.

No. 316.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Lima, Peru, March 5, 1879. (Received March 26.)

SIR: I beg to refer to my dispatch, No. 314 of 26th ultimo, in reference to the occupation of Bolivian coast territory by Chilian forces, the details that arrived by the coasting steamers confirm the news, and all information points to the fact of an apparent determination of the Chilians to remain, as they have established civil and military government in due form on all the points occupied.

Great excitement exists in this country in relation to the matter, the press, with rare exceptions, calling on the government to take an active part with Bolivia against Chili. A remarkable article appeared in "El Nacional," calling on the President to declare war against Chili or resign; the papers of last evening call for an extraordinary Congress, and, from all that I can learn, I think that this country will be led into the question, taking part with Bolivia, for there is no doubt that there is a strong anti-Chilian feeling through all Peru.

Senator D. José Antonio Lavalle, a distinguished Peruvian, has been sent to Chili on a special mission in relation to this affair, and I judge much will depend upon his reception by the Chilian Government, which will decide the course to be taken by the republic. He has filled the position of minister to Russia and Germany. From private telegrams received, it is thought that his mission will be ineffectual.

No. 317.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Lima, Peru, March 12, 1879. (Received April 3.)

SIR: I have the honor to refer to my preceding dispatch, No. 316, of 5th instant, relative to the Chili-Bolivian question. In writing upon this subject it is to place the Department in knowledge of events that may affect this republic. I presume I am also warranted in mentioning affairs of Bolivia, as at present the United States has no representative at that republic to explain affairs. I have to refer to acts of the Chilians, which belong properly to my colleague, Mr. Osborn, at Santiago. I make this explanation that it may not be inferred I am writing on matters outside of my mission.

Up to the present, I have no information of a formal declaration of war having been made either by Chili or Bolivia.

Chili has, by force of arms and through her vessels of war, taken possession of the coast of Bolivia from its limits, latitude 24° south, down to Tocopilla, north of the twenty-second degree, within 30 miles of the river Loa, which is the boundary line between Peru and Bolivia, and holds the whole coast, establishing marine, military, and civil government. From articles here published, taken from the Chilian press, it is said to be only a reoccupation of territory that belonged to Chili, ceded by treaty for certain rights granted, which, not being carried out, Chili has merely repossessed themselves of their own, or, in Spanish, "revindicacion," which may be translated "reinstation."

The only official action taken by Bolivia is a proclamation by President Daza, which is not a declaration of war. I inclose a copy of it in Spanish, taken from a Lima paper, and a translation from the South Pacific Times, of Callao.

This government continues its preparations, I suppose following the old adage, "If you wish peace, prepare for war."

On the 7th instant a regiment of infantry was sent to Callao to be embarked for Iquique, the great nitrate port, the most southerly in this republic, and within about 80 miles of the boundary line between Peru and Bolivia. Great enthusiasm was manifested, and the scene at the railroad station was one of great excitement, a multitude being there to see them off. Yesterday the monitors Atahualpa and Manco Capac got up steam, left their anchorage, and practiced with their heavy guns.

The Peruvians have a large quantity of heavy Blakely, Rodman, and other guns in their deposits, and are changing the smooth-bores on their iron-clads for rifle-bores. Their fighting fleet consists of four iron-clads; Independencia, 2,004 tons, 550 horse-power, 22 guns; Huascar, turret, 1,130 tons, 300 horse-power, 5 guns; Manco Capac, monitor, 1,034 tons, 330 horse-power, 2 guns of 500; Atahualpa, 1,034 tons, 330 horse-power, 2 guns of 500.

The authorities are doing all possible to avoid any public demonstration that may complicate affairs. The students of the oldest and most important university of the country, San Carlos, called a meeting of its members, or alumni, to take place at the fair grounds on the 9th instant. The chief of the police was on the ground and did not allow it to take effect. The young men on arrival there were quietly informed that it would not be permitted, and they returned without making any demonstration.

On the 10th instant telegrams were received from Senator Lavalle, the special minister sent to Chili, stating that his reception at the capital, Santiago, was satisfactory.

These people are of a very excitable nature, and as such the first impressions quickly pass. I think if no extraordinary event takes place, and the actual state of affairs is not changed by some overt act on either part, peace may be preserved between this country and Chili; although there is a feeling of obligation by events that are to be feared in the future. Many Peruvians fear that if the Bolivians are left to themselves they will try and seize the southern province of Tarapacá, the great nitrate deposit, and a more immediate outlet for them to the coast.

One of the results of this uncertainty is the effect on financial affairs. Exchange on England has fallen from 23*d*. to 19½*d*. per sol; American gold 120 premium, now 150, and the necessaries of life increasing in price.

Want of funds may check the war fever of the Peruvians, but one of the leading papers, in last evening's edition, says there are three ways of raising money: an appeal to the country for voluntary contributions to the war; a direct war-tax on the whole population; or, in an extreme case, emission of paper money.

I have just this moment, at a late hour, received a note from the Bolivian minister, Mr. Zoch Flores, declaring that his country accepts the war forced on them by Chili. I inclose copy with translation. He wishes me to telegraph the idea to the State Department, but, on reflection, I advised.him to do it personally over his own signature. He informs me that by the mail received this day there is an immense enthusiasm in all Bolivia for the war, and there will be no lack of funds or men.

The important documents of which the following are translations have been published in the Bolivian papers:

HILARION DAZA, President of the Republic of Bolivia—

Considering:

That the military occupation of the department of Cobija by the invading forces of the Chilian squadron is an unjustifiable attack on the sovereignty of the republic and its territorial integrity;

That the country being invaded it is a national duty to sustain its independence and defend its dignity with the unanimous efforts of all Bolivians, who, in the hour of conflict, have always known how to unite with integrity and patriotism;

I decree:

SOLE ARTICLE. An amnesty, ample and without restriction, is conceded to all Bolivian citizens who, for political motives, should be under trial or abroad, certain that they will place themselves on the side of the government, which at present has no other thought than that of raising very high the national banner under whose shadow all the sons of the soil will fraternize.

HILARION DAZA, President of the Republic of Bolivia—

Considering:

That the parts of Antofagasta, Mejillones, and the mineral district of Caracoles have been occupied by expeditionary forces of the Republic of Chili; that this act of unjust and perfidious aggression compels the nation to take up arms to defend the integrity of its territory, its sovereignty, and independence, assailed by an unloyal and ambitious neighbor; that the state of war to which the republic has been impelled makes it necessay to confer on the government the efficacious and extraordinary power which the political constitution of the state concedes to it in cases of great danger in consequence of interior commotion or foreign war, the counsel of ministers having been heard;

I decree:

SOLE ARTICLE. The country is declared in danger and in a state of siege, in conformity with the prescription of the 26th article of the constitution of the state; in consequence the government is invested with the faculties contained in the 27th article, while during the present circumstances of war, brought on by Chili, endure.

MINISTRY OF WAR,
Headquarters, La Paz, February 27, 1879.

The President of the Republic has considered it desirable to make known to the army the occurrences on the frontier, and has issued the following proclamation:

SOLDIERS: Under the shadow of peace, which should be unalterable and cordially sustained by the Republics of Chili and Bolivia, because the interests of both countries so require it, and because my government has taken care to cultivate with diligence its fraternal relations, that of that nation has just consummated an outrage on civilization for which there is no name. On the 14th of this month two Chilian steamers of war, with eight hundred men for disembarkation, and supported by a considerable number of persons depraved by misery and vice, assassins of the curved blade, have taken possession of our defenseless ports of Antofagasta and Mejillones by surprise, without previous declaration of war, without taking into account that civilization condemns vandalic acts more than it does those of hordes of savages, if they are committed by nations and governments which pretend to culture. The result of an international iniquity, it is natural that it should have been the perpetration of crime as a praisworthy action. A Bolivian policeman, his wife and child, in Antofagasta, and four laborers in Carmen Alto, have been assasinated with the special weapon of the Chilian bandit, the curved dagger.

COMPANIONS: So cynical a conculcation of the rights of humanity imposes on all the States of the American continent a sacred duty of eminent justification and of foresight, which sooner or later they will have to fulfill.

In the mean time the Bolivian army will let the world know that the honor of Bolivia and the integrity of its territory are under the safeguard of its bayonets, and that on this occasion, as on others, it will know how to chastise its cowardly aggressors.

COMRADES: I expect everything from your patriotism, your serenity, and discipline. If the government which has believed it would humiliate us by the occupation of our desert shores does not honorably retract its vandalic acts, there will remain inaugurated for us a glorious epoch, because we will all fulfill with emulation the holy duty of fighting without truce or hesitation the enemies of the national autonomy, the usurpers of our territory, the conquerors of civilized towns. Let our motto be to "live or die for Bolivia."

Be ready for the precious moment in which the campaign opens, and we will march to recover the beautiful soil of Atacama, which was left us by the founders of the republic.

SIR: Referring to dispatch No. 316, of the 5th instant, relating to the Chili-Bolivian rupture, I have not much to add. Preparations going on and all appearances of Peru and Chili gravitating to war, which means ruin. I inclose translation of a decree given by President Daza, of Bolivia; expulsion of Chilians and embargo of their property.

EXPULSION OF CHILIANS FROM BOLIVIA.

The Government of Bolivia have issued the following decree:

[Translation.]

HILARION DAZA, President of the Republic of Bolivia—

Considering:

That the Government of Chili has invaded de facto the national territory without observing the rules of international law or the practice of civilized nations, violently expelling the authorities and Bolivian citizens resident in the department of Cobija;

That the Government of Bolivia finds itself in duty bound to dictate the energetic measures which the seriousness of the situation demands, without departing, however, from the principles recognized by the rights of nations;

I decree:

ART. 1. All trade and communication with the Republic of Chili is prohibited during the continuance of the war undertaken by that republic against Bolivia.

ART. 2. The Chilians resident in Bolivian territory must disoccupy it within the term of ten days from the date of the notification, which should be made them by the local political authority; they being at liberty to take with them their private papers, their baggage, and articles of personal use.

ART. 3. The expulsion ordered in the previous article can only be suspended for the term, which should be strictly indispensable, on account of sickness or other serious impediment in the judgment of the authorities.

ART. 4. The respective authorities will proceed, as a war measure, to embargo the fixed and moveable property belonging to Chilian subjects within the territory of the republic, with the exception of the objects designated in article 2. The mining property belonging to Chilians, or in which there should be shareholders of that nationality, may continue to be worked under the charge of an administrator appointed by the authorities or with the intervention of a representative of the government, as they may think most desirable.

ART. 5. The net proceeds of the mining property belonging to Chilians, or of shares belonging to the same, shall be deposited in the national treasury.

ART. 6. The embargo ordered by this decree will be converted into definite confiscation, should the kind of hostilities engaged in by the Chilian forces require an energetic retaliation on the part of Bolivia.

ART. 7. All transferences of Chilian interests made at a later date than the 8th of November last, on which date the Chilian Government declared the treaty of 1874 annulled, will be ignored; and any contract which should have been agreed upon in this respect will be considered void.

The minister of government and foreign affairs will take charge of the publication and execution of this decree.

Given in the city of La Paz the 1st day of March, 1879.

SIR: Referring to my preceding dispatch, No. 322, of 19th instant, I have not much to add.

The Peruvians preparing their iron-clads and monitors; also many men working at the shore defenses and batteries at Callao.

On the 24th instant a proclamation was published in due form convoking an extraordinary session of Congress to meet on the 24th of April next. The proclamation simply states the reason, as follows:

1st. To make known to the Congress the conflict existing between Chili and Bolivia, so that the position of the republic in relation to the belligerents be defined, and to resolve what might be necessary.

2d. To treat on matters of the highest importance and general interest that the government may deem necessary to place before it.

I should not be surprised if Chili takes the first step and not await for a declaration of war from Peru, but strike the first blow. If they do, it will be unfortunate for this republic, as it appears to me they are not ready to enter into a conflict on the sea, for which I believe the Chilians are better prepared.

SIR: Referring to dispatch No. 323, of 26th ultimo, as I expected, Chili has declared war. This forenoon several commercial houses and various persons received telegrams from Valparaiso stating that war had been declared. This news I suppose has been forwarded already from Valparaiso by telegraph to the Department.

The news has been received with little excitement, as it was expected by many. It has disturbed financial affairs, exchange being nominal. American gold is held at 200 per cent. premium and Peruvian silver 130.

I think this war will affect our commerce, as we have quite a number of vessels loading at the guano and nitrate ports, and I would suggest a larger number of vessels of war on this coast for the protection of our flag.

Up to the present, news has been received of one skirmish between Bolivians and Chilians, at Calama, on the river Loa, in the interior, near the Peruvian boundary, the Bolivians abandoning the town and retiring to the interior.

Chilians now occupy the whole Bolivian coast.

I have not had sufficient time to translate all of the documents, but have a part—the first note of the Chilian minister, of 17th ultimo, asking explanations and demanding declaration of neutrality; the answer of the Peruvian Government, referring to the mission of Mr. Levalle to Chili; and I have taken from the South Pacific Times, of Callao, of this date, translation of the final note of the Peruvian Government to Mr. Godoy's, in which he asks for his passport.

I have answered the circular note of the bureau of foreign affairs, as per inclosed copy.

LEGATION OF CHILI IN PERU,
Lima, March 17, 1879.

SIR: The bellicose preparations which your excellency's government has commenced since the outbreak of the Chilian-Bolivian conflict are notorious.

The army has been considerably increased, and increasing to a number much more than is necessary for ordinary service in time of peace; a large division of it, well armed and abundantly supplied with munition, have been sent near to the territory which will be the ground probably of battle which the Bolivian army dispose to use against that of Chili.

The vessels of which the Peruvian Navy is composed are preparing and getting ready, as if entering in active service; speedily increasing their crews, strengthening their armament, embarking munition stores and combustibles, making frequent and unusual exercises; new iron-clads have been urgently ordered from Europe to increase the navy, which, during many years of international peace, was considered sufficiently powerful; the ports that defended the port of Callao and shelter the national fleet are mounting guns, recruiting men for service, gathering material, and are exercising diligently their guns, getting ready, in a word, to sustain battle.

Along with these indications of a bellicose attitude, unexplained by the excitement of any known danger that menaces the honor, the integrity, or interest of the republic, it is to be also noticed, in at least a portion of the people, the sound, spontaneous or suppressed, of sentiments of hostility towards Chili—sentiments bitterly expressed daily, exciting the feelings, aggravating passions, and even clamoring openly for war; the Peruvian press nearly unanimously so; and what shows, too, feeling, was a popular meeting yesterday, that unmolested passed through the streets of the city to the Bolivian legation, exchanging sentiments of deep sympathy for Bolivia and hate and war against Chili.

And to such violent motives of inquietude and danger for those whom in Chili, as others in Peru, who have dedicated their sincerest efforts to the conservation of peace and the unaltered friendship between both states, it is necessary to add another of extreme gravity—the conviction not denied authoritatively by any person up to the present, which, in either country exists, that Peru is formally compromised to make common cause with Bolivia against Chili in virtue of a secret alliance offensive and defensive.

In view of this state of affairs, Chili, that has not in its international relations ceased to give for as many years as it has autonomous existence undoubted proof of its love, peace, that no effort within reach of its will and compatible with its honor has ever been omitted to preserve perfect harmony with other nations, and to create the sympathies of those who specially have the same origin and nearly common destiny, who, if to-day, has broken its relations of friendship with one of these, and disposed to avail the decision of the controversy by battle, it is because to such extreme it has been dragged by the Government of Bolivia, daringly breaking a solemn treaty, opposing obstinate resistance to all means of a friendly compromise, ordering arbitrary proceedings as the ultimate answer to the pacific and benevolent invitations that up to the last moment were made. Chili, whose armies twice passed the limits of its frontiers, because it came under allied banners to shed its blood for the redemption of Peru; Chili, who desires to increase and strengthen the bands of friendship, of esteem, and of common interest that binds it to this republic as sincere, as well proved, has cause in the defense of its rights to be preoccupied in the attitude that reveals the existence of which there is no doubt of the secret alliance with Bolivia, the hostile demonstrations without guise of a portion of the people, and the warlike preparations on the part of the government.

I believe it proper to make it clearly understood the action in respect to the Government of Bolivia to ask seriously if the government of your excellency has the intentions which duty imposes of remaining neutral in the face of the acts which are and may take place in Chili, defending with arms the reoccupation of the territory of the coast south of the 28th degree of latitude.

I await with confidence that your excellency's government giving proofs that to Peru it is not indifferent, the traditional friendship with Chili; that for mutual convenience and the dictates of justice it will not refuse a formal declaration of neutrality, thus clearing away all want of confidence between two nations that should live in perfect harmony.

To obtain this declaration my government has given me special orders, to which I will faithfully adhere, praying that your excellency will be pleased to give this subject preference, which in itself is very necessary to calm immediately the injurious effects of the alarm that dominates in all minds.

I improve this occasion to reiterate, &c.,

JOAQUIN GODOY.

Mr. Irigoyen to Mr. Godoy.

LIMA, March 21, 1879.

SIR: I had the honor of receiving the note of the 11th instant, in which your excellency, after making various reflections relative to the conflict existing between Chili and Bolivia, terminates, asking through specific orders from your excellency's government that that of Peru will make a formal declaration of its neutrality in face of the acts that have and may take place between said republics.

His excellency the chief of the nation, to whom I have given account of said notes, orders me to inform your excellency that Peru, having accredited a special mission to Chili precisely destined to understand with the government of your excellency on all incidents that have happened, or may take place in the future on the coast of Bolivia, of which the cabinet at Santiago has not as yet made known, orders have been given to the plenipotentiary who fills the mission, the necessary instructions on the points referred to by your excellency in said note.

THE RETIREMENT OF THE CHILIAN MINISTER.

The following is the communication of the Peruvian minister of foreign affairs to Señor Godoy, the late Chilian minister in Lima, in reply to the latter gentleman's letter asking for his passport:

[Translation.]

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Lima, April 4, 1879.

The undersigned, minister of foreign affairs for the Republic of Peru, had the honor of receiving yesterday, at 1.30 p. m., the note of the same date which his excellency the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Chili was pleased to address to him, announcing in the name of his government the rupture of the good relations between Chili and Peru, and the termination of his diplomatic mission, and requesting, in consequence, that his passport be handed him.

The very grave importance of the said document makes it the duty of the undersigned to examine the reasons therein set forth, in support of such a transcendental determination of the Chilian Government, and accordingly he here commences to do so, beginning by assuring your excellency that the charges brought against this government on account of the manifestations that the Peruvian people have thought fit to make concerning the Chilian-Bolivian war, through the medium of the press and by means of popular meetings, totally disappear before the consideration that they have been made in the exercise of a right sanctioned by the law, and also that they have originated in the attitude of the Chilian press and people, which, since the commencement of the war, forgetting that the question was with that government, have busied themselves with marked satisfaction in calumniating Peru and its government, and in rousing up against them the worst and lowest sentiments of the masses, one of the numerous results of such a line of conduct having been the outrages committed in Valparaiso and Antofagasta on the consulates of this republic. The press of this country, on the other hand, has never assumed the tone and tendencies of that of Chili; neither have the popular meetings in Lima and in other places ceased for a single moment to be other that calm and irreproachable gatherings, nor have the authorities once relaxed their diligence in taking measures, although they knew that such were unnecessary, to prevent the least possible chance of any offense being given to the representatives of Chili, as your excellency is aware.

And having made these indispensable observations on what your excellency says in the note on these subjects, the undersigned now proceeds to take into serious consideration the points of real importance in the same document.

Your excellency states that the treaty of alliance existing between Peru and Bolivia, and which all the precautions taken have failed to keep secret, formally bound the first named country, in the event of such a war arising as that between Bolivia and Chili to-day, to become the enemy of Chili and to cause the damage of that country by the aid of its navy, army, and treasure.

The undersigned is ignorant how your excellency can make such an asseveration, knowing, as you do, since the middle of March last, the general and defensive character of the treaty in question, as also the obligation it imposes upon both the contracting parties to employ with preference every conciliatory measure possible to avoid a rupture, and the right that each had reserved, of deciding whether the offense offered to the other was such as to warrant the bringing into effect of the treaty. Your excellency was first assured of this by his excellency the President of the republic, and subsequently by the undersigned, and almost at the same time the government of Santiago must have received the same assurance direct from the plenipotentiary, Señor Lavalle, an assurance sufficiently powerful to cause Chili to rightly estimate the spirit of conciliation and peculiar deference shown by Peru, since, although authorized to present itself as the ally of Bolivia from the first day on which the government of your excellency occupied with its troops the Bolivian coast, it deferred putting into execution of the treaty of alliance, endeavoring without ceasing and without omitting any proper means to bring about an arrangement which, without the necessity of appealing to the said treaty, should do away with the possibility of a war between three republics so obviously intended to live perpetually in perfect harmony with one another.

The government of your excellency appears, nevertheless, not to have given credit to such explicit and frank assurances, and shows itself to be deeply offended by the existence of an alliance not celebrated to its damage nor harm, and which it has been in its power to leave without effect, and of the precise wording of which, if your excellency has not been informed, as you request to be, it has merely been because inasmuch as one of the clauses stipulates for reserve until both the contracting parties should deem it necessary and agree to it in due form, the government of the undersigned was unable to act on its own decision.

Treaties of the character and tendency of the one in question are perfectly allowable as a means of cementing closer the relations of two states with one another, particularly when these are situated as are Peru and Bolivia, and no nation has the right of taking offense at their existence.

Under no pretence, therefore, is it just that the Chilian Government should accuse Peru of having taken a measure of preconceived hostility in celebrating a treaty which can only affect that government, should it attack, as it has done, the clearest and most vital rights of one of the contracting parties.

Neither can Chili be surprised nor complain because Peru has made a defensive alliance with Bolivia, since Chili herself more than once has striven to effect the same thing, and not in the inoffensive and abstract manner in which Peru has done it, but, with the express object, to which I abstain from applying the true name, of acquiring that portion of the Bolivian coast of which it has now forcibly possessed itself, under the pretext of recovering what was formerly its own, promising in return to aid Bolivia with its ships, armies, and treasures in the rash attempt to dispossess Peru of Iquique and Arica as far as the morro of Sama. Chili also, in the year 1864, with hostile intentions towards Peru, solicited the alliance of Ecuador, and at various periods and with repeated instances that of a nation as powerful as she is wise and prudent.

Nevertheless the most perfect harmony existed between Peru and Chili, whilst these secret negotiations, which time has disclosed and proved, were going on.

The assertion made by your excellency, to the effect that the government of the undersigned has commenced to give effect to the said treaty of defensive alliance, by directly, though secretely, providing the Government of Bolivia with arms and munitions of war, is completely void of foundation, and is offensive to the proved loyalty of Peru, and accordingly it is the obligation of the undersigned to state so.

Another portion of the note of the Chilian minister which the undersigned considers it his duty to elucidate is that which refers to the treatment to which your government thought proper to subject the communication of your excellency of the 17th of March last, wherein, after making identical accusations to those contained in the present note, Peru was requested to declare its neutrality.

Your excellency was duly advised by the communication which the undersigned addressed to you on the 21st of the same month, and that the Government of Peru having appointed a special mission to treat directly with the cabinet of Santiago, about everything relating to the Chilian-Bolivian war, its members would be duly instructed as to all the matters referred to in the said communication of your excellency.

The Government of Peru, therefore, did not refuse to furnish the required explanations, but confined itself, in accordance with the usual observance of diplomacy, to doing same through the medium of its plenipotentiary ad hoc., to which end it remitted him on the 22d of the said month, that is to say, on the following day to that on which the reply mentioned was addressed to your excellency, the necessary instructions, one of which ordered him to forward to His Excellency Señor Fierro a copy of the note containing them.

The undersigned is convinced that the explanations which Señor Lavalle was instructed to give were capable of inducing the Chilian Government to take a more tranquil view of the true motives that have guided the conduct of Peru.

Unfortunately, and when the latest communications from Señor Lavalle, which came to hand the day before yesterday, encouraged the hope that the means of arriving at a satisfactory solution of the matter were not yet all exhausted, other counsels have evidently been received and acted upon by the government of your excellency, which has not even seen fit to wait the short period necessary to receive the said explanations.

The note of His Excellency Señor Godoy concludes in saying that Peru has assumed the character of a belligerent, and that, it being incompatible with the dignity of Chili to maintain longer the legation accredited here, he announces as at an end his mission of peace, and throwing all the responsibility of this determination on the Government of Peru, which has made it inevitable, he asks for his passports in order to leave the country at as early a date as possible.

The Government of Peru, which has loyally done its best to avoid this extremity; which, if it celebrated a treaty of alliance with Bolivia in 1873, could not foresee that the Chilian Government would give cause to make that treaty effective against itself; which, if it has made certain warlike preparations, has given them no other shape than the most insignificant form of precaution that the fears for its own safety called for, fears too well founded, unfortunately, as proved to-day; the Peruvian Government, in fine, which up to the last moment has done everything to avoid war, acknowledges the notification of the termination of the mission of peace of his excellency Señor Godoy.

The public conscience of every nation which has already published its irrevocable judgment, condemning the violations of the law of nations committed by Chili in causing the dismemberment of the territory of an American nation, will, it is to be hoped, show itself propitious to Peru in the war declared against her. Above all, the entire nation will duly support its government.

The undersigned concludes this communication by remitting to his excellency Señor Godoy the passport asked for, repeating once more, as he has the honor to here do, the sentiments with which the subscribes himself, your excellency's most obedient servant,

MANUEL IRIGOYEN.

THE SECRET TREATY BETWEEN PERU AND BOLIVIA.

The Peruvian minister of foreign affairs, Señor Manuel Irigoyen, and the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Bolivia, Señor Serapio Reyes Ortiz, having agreed to publish the secret treaty of defensive alliance celebrated between their respective governments on the 6th of February, 1873, in accordance with the terms of the additional article appended to the said treaty, the same has now appeared in print and the following is a translation:

[Translation.]

ADOLFO BALLIVIAN, Constitutional President of the Republic of Bolivia:

Inasmuch as, between the Republics of Bolivia and Peru, represented by their respective plenipotentiaries, there has been celebrated in the city of Lima on the 6th day of the month of February of the present year, the following:

TREATY OF DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE.

The Republics of Bolivia and Peru, desirous to cement in a solemn manner the bonds that unite them, to increase thus their strength and mutually guarantee one another certain rights, have drawn up the present treaty of defensive alliance; to which end, the President of Bolivia has invested with ample powers to conduct the said negotiation, Juan de la Cruz Benevente, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary in Peru, and the President of Peru has conferred the same upon José de la Riva Aguero, minister of foreign affairs, who have agreed upon the following stipulations:

ARTICLE I. The contracting parties will unite and join to mutually guarantee their independence, sovereignty, and the integrity of their respective territory, binding themselves by the terms of the present treaty to defend themselves against all foreign aggressions, whether proceeding from another or other independent state, or from a force without a flag, owing obedience to no recognized power.

ART. II. The alliance will become effective to protect the rights expressed in the preceding article and particularly in cases of offense consisting:

1st. In acts tending to deprive either of the contracting parties of a portion of their territory, in order to assume dominion over it; or to yield it to another power.

2d. In acts tending to oblige either of the contracting parties to submit to a protectorate, sale or cession of territory, or to establish over it any superiority, right, or pre-eminence whatsoever, which may injure or offend the full and ample exercise of its sovereignty and independence.

3d. In acts tending to do away with or change the form of government, the political constitution or the laws that the contracting parties have made, or may in future make, in the exercise of the sovereignty.

ART. III. As both the contracting parties admit that every legitimate act of alliance is based upon justice, for each of them respectively, the right is established of deciding whether the offense inferred to the other is comprised amongst those mentioned in the preceding article.

ART. IV. The casus fœderis once declared, the contracting parties bind themselves to cease immediately their relations with the offending state; to hand their passports to its diplomatic ministers; to cancel the appointments of the consular agents; to forbid the importation of its natural and industrial products, and to close their ports against its ships.

ART. V. The same parties shall also appoint plenipotentiaries to adjust by protocol the arrangements necessary to determine upon the subsidies, the contingents of either sea or land forces, or the aid of whatever kind that must be lent to the republic which has received the offense; the manner in which the forces are to act and the assistance to be lent, and whatever else may be convenient for the defense. The meeting of the plenipotentiaries will take place in the place assigned by the offended party for that purpose.

ART. VI. The contracting parties bind themselves to provide the one offended with the means of defense of which each may consider it can dispose, though the arrangements pointed out in the preceding article may not have taken place, provided that they consider the case urgent.

ART. VII. The casus fœderis once declared, the offended party will not be able to make arrangements for peace, truce, or armistice without the concurrence of the ally who may have taken part in the war.

ART. VIII. The contracting parties bind themselves in addition:

1st. To employ with preference, whenever it is possible, every conciliatory measure in order to avoid a rupture or to put an end to the war, holding as the most effective the arbitration of a third power.

2d. Not to admit nor accept from any nation or government protectorate or superiority that may injure and lessen their independence or sovereignty, and not to yield up nor transfer in favor of any nation or government any part whatsoever of their territories, excepting in the cases of better demarkation of limits.

3d. Not to celebrate treaties of limits, or of other territorial arrangements, without the other contracting party first knowing of the same.

ART. IX. The stipulations of the present treaty do not extend to acts performed by political parties or the result of internal disturbance independent of the intervention of foreign governments; inasmuch as the principal object of the present treaty of alliance being the mutual guarantee of the sovereign rights of both nations, none of its clauses must be interpreted in opposition to its primary end.

ART. X. The contracting parties will, separately or collectively, when by subsequent agreement they may consider it convenient, solicit the adhesion of another or other American states to the present treaty of defensive alliance.

ART. XI. The present treaty will be exchanged in Lima or in La Paz, as soon as it is legally perfected, and will remain in full force on the twentieth day after said exchange takes place. Its duration shall be for an indefinite period, each party reserving to itself the right of considering it as no longer existing when such shall be thought convenient.

In such a case the party desiring to annul the treaty must notify the other party of same, and the treaty will no longer have effect on the elapse of forty months from such notification.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries signed it in duplicate and sealed it with their private seals.

Done in Lima on the sixth day of the month of February, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three.

JUAN DE LA CRU BENAVENTE.
J. DE LA RIVA AGUERO.

Here follows an additional article which provides that the treaty shall be kept secret as long as both parties by common accord shall not deem its publication necessary.

The treaty having received the approbation of the extraordinary assembly of Bolivia and been confirmed and ratified by the then President of that country, Señor Adolfo Ballivian, was formally exchanged between the two parties, represented by their respective ministers, in the city of La Paz, on the 16th day of June, 1873.

The Peruvian Congress gave its approbation to the treaty on the 22d of April of the same year, and notified Señor Pardo, at the time President of Peru, of same on the 30th of the same month and year, who thereupon ratified it.

Mr. Gibbs to Mr. Evarts.

No. 330.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Lima, Peru, April 9, 1879. (Received May 5.)

SIR: Referring to dispatch No. 326, of 2d instant, informing the Department of the declarations of war by Chili against this country, I will now relate what has taken place since that date.

On the 5th instant telegrams were received of the arrival of the Chilian fleet off the port of Iquique, the great nitrate deposit of Peru. Great excitement took place, as it was known that a division of the Peruvian army had lately landed there, but the place is defenseless against iron-clads. The Chilian admiral gave 24 hours' notice, but up to the present no bombardment has taken place.

Private commercial dispatches have been received stating that the Chilian commander gave ten days' notice for all neutral vessels to leave and suspending all loading and discharging. I have information of four American vessels being there in port.

More Peruvian troops have been sent, which landed at Pisagua, a few miles north of Iquique; also other forces, with batteries, have arrived at Arica still further north.

Great enthusiasm has been shown by all classes and nationalities in Lima.

Subscriptions in large amounts coming from every part, and large amounts subscribed by wealthy men and associations to be made monthly during the war.

On the reception of the news of the blockade of Iquique, the Chilian minister, Mr. Godoy, who had closed his legation and deposited the archives with the British minister, with whom he was staying, for reasons unexplained left on the night of the 5th instant, and took refuge aboard of the United States steamer Lackawanna, where he still remains, but I understand will go to Panama to-morrow.

I received a cablegram from Consul Merriam at Iquique to-day at 3 p. m., stating that the Pensacola, Admiral Rodgers, had arrived there, of which I informed Captain Chandler, of the Lackawanna, by telegraph to Callao.

The iron-plated vessels and monitors of the Peruvian navy are still at Callao, but will be ready in a few days. Two of their wooden ships, Union and Pilcomayo, have left with extra crews on a secret mission.

No. 4.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 9, 1879.

SIR: Mr. Gibbs's dispatch No. 317, in relation to the approaching conflict between Chili and Bolivia and the attitude of Peru with respect thereto, has been read with interest. No explanation was necessary on Mr. Gibbs's part for advising the Department of whatever might come to his knowledge respecting the warlike situation of the neighboring republics, even though that to which he was accredited was not an actual party to the dispute.

The position of Peru in relation to the struggle now reported as having been inaugurated is one of considerable interest. The latest news represents that the Peruvian Government has decided to maintain an attitude of strict neutrality. It is sincerely hoped that this decision will be successfully observed, for, besides restricting the arena of the deplorable strife between peoples of one blood, the pacific course of Peru makes her a notable example, and it may be a directly potential agent in the interest of the speedy restoration of peace, so earnestly to be hoped for.

THE ALLIANCE WITH BOLIVIA.

[South Pacific Times, Saturday, April 26, 1879.]

The following decree has been issued:

Mariano I. Prado, President of the Republic, considering:

First. That by the treaty of the 6th of February, 1873, the Republics of Peru and Bolivia are solemnly bound to mutually guarantee one another their independence and sovereignty, and also the integrity of their respective territories.

Secondly. hat the insult offered by Chili to Bolivia by the occupation of the 23d and 24th degrees of that country's sea-coast, under the pretense of revindicating their own, is equivalent to an attack on the said rights of Bolivia, and is expressly pointed out in the first portion of the second article of the treaty referred to as the chief and principal cause why the alliance should come into force.

Thirdly. That the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Bolivia, on a special mission, has requested, by order of his government, the declaration of the casus fœderis, and the consequent bringing into effect of the said treaty; and that Peru has endeavored by every conciliatory measure possible to keep the peace between the republics in question, first interposing her good offices and afterwards offering her mediation in due form, whose only result has been the declaration of war made by the Government of Chili against Peru:

I decree—

The Republic of Peru decrees the casus fœderis mentioned in the treaty of the 6th of February, 1873, with Bolivia has arrived; and consequently the time has come when the alliance must come into effect and all its stipulations.

The respective ministers of state are encharged with the issuing of the necessary orders for the faithful and exact fulfillment of this decree, and of making it known and published.

Given in the Government House of Lima this 6th day of April, 1879.

Note from the Chilian Government to the Peruvian minister, granting him his passport.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Santiago, April 2, 1879.

SIR: The reply given to the Chilian envoy in Lima a few days ago by your government, that it could not observe neutrality in our present conflict with Bolivia because there existed a treaty of defensive alliance between them—which is the same that you read to me in the conference held on the 31st ultimo—has forced this government to the conclusion that it is impossible to maintain friendly relations with Peru.

Considering the assurance you gave me in the first conference we held on the 17th ultimo, in reply to my interrogation whether such treaty existed or no, that you had no knowledge of it; that you believed it had no existence, and that it could not have been approved by the Peruvian Congress of 1873 (when it was said to have been approved), and much less in the succeeding years, when you formed part of the diplomatic commission; considering this assurance, I repeat, my government sees that yours, as well as yourself, in denying this treaty, have placed yourselves in an exceedingly irregular position.

My government is surprised to learn that that of Peru projected and signed that treaty at the time that it professed sentiments of cordial friendship towards Chili.

To this secret transaction, in which the strictest reserve was stipulated, the Government of Chili replies with the fullest frankness, declaring that its relations with that of Peru are broken, and that it considers it belligerent, in virtue of the authority to that effect received to-day from the high authorities of the state.

In forwarding you your passports, I have to assure you that the proper orders have been issued, in order that you and the personnel of the permanent legation of Peru may receive all due consideration and facility in returning to your country.

With sentiments of distinguished consideration, &c.,

ALEJANDRO FIERRO.

OPENING OF CONGRESS.

Message of the President of the republic.

Shortly after two o'clock on the afternoon of the 24th, Congress was formally opened.

The following is a translation of the message of his excellency the President of the republic to the special Congress of 1879.

Honorable Representatives:

At a time when the sentiment of confraternity seemed to be most deeply rooted in the heart of America, the fruit not only of the identity of origin of its nations, and of the glorious traditions which form their modern history, but also the offspring of mutual convenience, very grave and important events, brought about most abruptly by the Chilian Government, have startled our repose.

After the unanimous cry of indignation uttered throughout the entire continent, when the agents of the Spanish Government attempted to revive the deeds of the time of its famous conquests, after the outburst of brotherly feeling which united all the South American republics to one another to protest solemnly against acts odious to all laws which civilized nations have laid down as rules of government, it appeared impossible that those very nations should have recourse to arms without previously employing all rational methods of conciliation, without observing the forms which give to war the character of legality, of which the violent aggressions and the hostilities commenced before the enemy, is either notified or prepared to repulse them, are destitute. Such a course of conduct which outrages the precepts of morality by which governments should be guided, and ruins nations by exciting in their midst, under a cloak of patriotism, passionate feelings of hate and vengeance not certainly in accordance with modern civilization nor with the respect ever due to any people, whatever their class and status, nor is it such as should be adopted by generous nations who confine their destinies to the manifest justice of their cause rather than to the employment of brute force.

Peru and her government were rejoicing the more to see the nations of this continent cementing closer, day by day, the bonds by which they are united by nature, since she observed the willingness with which they all received and realized the idea of assimilating their laws, with the object of giving unity and conformity to their interests, moral as well as material; and doing away with unimportant matters the odious distinction born of the word "foreign," a word which should be banished from amongst the citizens of South America. To these useful and important labors would doubtless have succeeded others, tending to produce in as great a degree as the peculiar conditions of each State would permit of, the same benfits that were looked for from the unity of the principles of internal law.

Peru has so far entertained these laudable desires that, whenever she has had cause to fear the least interruption taking place in the peaceful relations of the other republics, she has hastened to interpose her good offices towards advocating the maintenance of peace and the adoption of whatever measures that were conducive to that end.

The Peruvian Government has always possessed the profound conviction that the disasters which a state of war brings on in all the nations of the universe, and especially in those newly formed, which need to employ all their vigor, means, and activity in consolidating their institutions and in acquiring that moral force which places nations in the first rank of their fellows, giving them prestige and glory, can alone be acceptable when the independence of States is menaced or their dearest interests involved.

If unfortunately the heroic deeds of the days of independence, and after them the different principles which have been the cause of political events more or less turbulent, have delayed the prosecution of those ideas, there exists without doubt an inexplicable virility which, when exercised in the cause of peace, opens the door to the development of all the elements of rational prosperity.

The actual contest between Bolivia, Peru, and Chili, the preconceived work of the cabinet of Santiago, has not failed, therefore, to affect most deeply the minds of the nations of this continent; and all the more so, since all nations, with that providential intuition with which they are gifted, see, or rather feel, that the occupation of Bolivian territory by Chilian forces is a positive usurpation, taking into consideration the attendant circumstances, and is an act of a nature opposed and repugnant to the commonest dogmas of law and justice, and also that the war declared against Peru, on account of suppositions more or less whimsical, has not in its favor a single argument to support it.

In truth, neither the ostensible reason of the measures taken, nor the questions at issue, authorized an attack which is as unjustifiable as it is odious.

To revindicate one's right to territory which has always been in possession of another country, and recognized as such by solemn treaties, has no other meaning than the setting about a conquest, taking advantage of the debility of the offended country. The abrupt and motiveless declaration of war against Peru is nothing less than a preconceived plan, whose aim is to take possession of a long-coveted piece of territory.

The conflict arisen so suddenly between the Republics of Bolivia and Chili gave rise to the necessity of convoking you to special sessions, in order that, duly appreciating the importance of the causes which induce the same and the tendencies they display, you may determine upon the line of conduct which the government should pursue under such difficult circumstances; and, taking in the true situation in which we are placed, that you may adopt such measures as you may deem convenient.

Meanwhile, without the remotest imagination that a declaration of war would be the reply to our generous mediation for the maintenance of peace between the contending parties, the government, interpreting the sentiments of the country as expressed in all classes of society, and ardently desirous of preventing a bloody strife between two sister republics, hastened to put its good offices at the disposition of the cabinet of Santiago; our chargé d'affaires having attained a promise from the President of the republic that no definite steps would be taken without his knowledge.

Notwithstanding this, the Chilian Government caused its military forces to occupy the port of Antofagasta, dislodging the Bolivian authorities and hoisting their own flag over its buildings, with the intent to "revindicate" that territory.

The Chilian press, revealing the hidden views of the government, allowed it to be understood from the very first that the occupation of Antofagasta was the preliminary step to making war against Peru. The violence of their warlike proceedings; the secrecy observed with our chargé d'affaires, notwithstanding the promise to hide none of their proceedings from him; the frequent and offensive manifestations of the popular assemblies, tolerated in spite of the good relations then existing between the two countries; the numerous forces sent to Antofagasta; the concentration of the Chilian squadron in that port, and the works of fortification commenced there, allowed it to be clearly seen that the operations were in reality directed against Peru, since the hostilities with Bolivia, a country not possessing a navy, did not call for the necessity of maintaining a fleet and army in Antofagasta, nor for the erection of harbor fortifications there.

Notwithstanding the significance of all these proceedings, the Peruvian Government, with a lively interest in the maintenance of peace between the South American Republics, and faithful to its traditions, again offered its mediation and appointed a minister plenipotentiary near the cabinet of Santiago, in order that the two republics, yielding their mutual pretensions, might submit the settlement of their differences to arbitration, in accordance with the terms of the treaty entered into between them in 1874. The negotiations, undertaken in the best faith by our plenipotentiary, Don José Antonio Lavalle, far from persuading the Chilian Government to desist from its views, caused it to abruptly break off its relations with us, under various frivolous pretexts, to declare against us a war completely unjustifiable from all points of view, and to set about immediately instituting every species of hostilities, blockading, bombarding, and burning our defenseless ports in the south.

Our military preparations, the dispatching of Peruvian troops to the department of Tarapacá, and the existence of a secret treaty of defensive alliance, are the motives which have contributed to apparently make Chili doubt our desires for peace, and to cause her to look upon us as belligerents in her quarrel with Bolivia.

The falseness and inefficiency of such motives are apparent to all. Immediately upon difficulties arising between Chili and the Argentine provinces, my government, faithful to the duties which the love of peace and the desire for the progress and prosperity of the South American nations impose upon it, proffered its good services, in order that both countries should settle their dispute in an amicable manner, and avoid the misfortunes attendant upon a war, and having acted in the same way as soon as it knew of the question with Bolivia, Chili could not doubt our good faith, and still less so, since I myself, then a friend of Chili—I, who, in my public or private capacity, have never practiced duplicity either with men or nations—had the honor of being at the head of the Government of Peru, directing the diplomatic negotiations.

The illegal act of Chili in invading Bolivia, and taking possession of territory which did not belong to her, and the accumulation of war materials on a large scale in Antofagasta, suggested the entertainment of hostile views against Peru, and prudence counseled us to put ourselves in a position to defend, if necessary, the honor of the nation and the integrity of its territory. This circumstance satisfactorily explains our military preparations and the forwarding of troops to the southern frontier. An armed neutrality has never been a cause of offense to other nations at war with one another. The treaty of defensive alliance entered into with the Republic of Bolivia could have been no motive for supposing that the Government of Peru was acting with bad faith towards Chili; since that treaty, which might well have been subscribed to by Chili herself, and whose sole object is to assure the independence, sovereignty, and integrity of the territories of the contracting parties, impose upon Peru the obligation of employing with preference, when feasible, every conciliatory measure possible in order to avoid a rupture or prevent a war, should the rupture have taken place, holding as the most effective of those measures the arbitration of a third power. In fact, the treaty itself, which does not call upon the ally to declare war, justified the good offices of Peru, and was a guarantee for the good faith of her irreproachable conduct.

Notwithstanding the instances of the plenipotentiaries of Bolivia, my government, faithfully fulfilling the duties which the character of mediator imposed upon it, flatly refused, not only to bring the treaty into effect, but also to supply the arms and other aid which Bolivia asked of it.

Neither the military preparations which prudence dictated, nor the movements of troops called for amongst other reasons, by the peculiar conditions of the department of Tarapacá; nor the treaty of defensive alliance, whose existence, if it remained officially secret in accordance with one of its stipulations, was not unknown to the plenipotentiary Señor Godoy, nor to the members of the Chilian Government; not one of these circumstances, or all of them combined, are sufficient to excuse the conduct of that nation, nor justify the violent and illegal aggression which has broken off at one blow the relations existing between nations who have fraternally shared together the benefits of peace, the calamities of war, and the luster of glory.

The Republic of Chili has declared war against us because the Government of Peru endeavored to prevent that which had arisen between that country and Bolivia; and Peru has accepted it with the high and generous enthusiasm which characterizes her on great occasions; with the enthusiasm inspired by justice, the precursor of victory.

The doing away with the old territorial boundaries, in obedience to interested and avaricious motives, is a pretension bordering upon impossibility, because neither Peru nor the other South America States could consent to it without compromising the integrity of their respective territories; and the force of this consideration manifests clearly that the war declared against us is devoid of political or social motives which can be adduced in its support.

Since the efforts for the preservation of peace have proved fruitless; since Chili, who has taken up arms with the sole intent to attack us, going so far as to offer her material and moral aid to the Bolivian commanders in case they should attempt to take possession of the old department of Moquegua; since Chili, I repeat, is satisfied with nothing but war with Peru; since, giving the lie to her boasted good sense, she has madly thrown herself into the fields of battle, Peru will also march to them, as suits her offended dignity and the valor of her army and navy.

It was sufficient that Chili should proclaim the war, in order that Peru should rise as one man to place at the disposal of the government the lives and fortunes of her sons. Peru is presenting to all civilized nations the most beautiful and touching spectacle of patriotism. If the treasury was empty, her citizens have striven for the honor of refilling it; if the army and navy were reduced to the limits which the law assigns for a state of peace, to-day all are soldiers, ready to sacrifice themselves on the altar of their country. Peru, face to face with her gratuitous enemy, will avenge the insult so treacherously offered her.

Legislators: I convoke you to special sessions in order that you may decide upon the conduct which it would have been the duty of the government to observe in view of the war between Bolivia and Chili, but unlooked for events have happened, which simplify your mission. We are at war with Chili, and it is your duty to dictate the measures which you may deem best in order to assure the triumph of our arms, jointly with the honor and glory of the country.

May Divine Providence assist you in your deliberations.

The sessions of the special Congress of 1879 are now declared opened.

MARIANO I. PRADO.

LIMA, April 24, 1879.

[Inclosure 4 in No. 6.]

Reply of his excellency the President of the Congress, Dr. José Antonio Garcia y Garcia.

CITIZEN PRESIDENT: It is, perhaps, the first time that the representatives of the nation listen to the authorized voice of the head of the State, under the influence of feelings so opposed and so painful as those which in this solemn moment dominate their spirits.

The certain knowledge that, along with the entire country, the delegates in parliament possess of the premeditated conduct of Chili in her relations with Peru; the suspicion and astonishment which the accumulation of hasty and intemperate acts signalizing the policy of that country, in the continuous changes of great American interest, has not failed to awaken in their minds; and the indignation naturally begot in upright and high-principled minds by the deliberate transgressions of the rules which serve as law to States, and guarantee, consequently, the maintenance of justice as the common and necessary principle to guide their mutual relations—in a word, every one of the acts practiced, which, in the order of principles and deeds, has wounded the sentiment of national dignity and profaned the rigid dictates of law and reason, and whose authenticity and details you have proved with the clearest testimony in your important message, could not but call forth in the bosom of the legislative chambers the grievous and opposite sentiments of which I have made mention. Once that cruel strife lighted in our spirits, which the sacred fire of patriotism fans, it is doubtless, Citizen President, that it would lead us to the greatest extremes in repressing and punishing such unheard-of crimes were another moral influence to predominate in the national Congress other than that which, until now, has served as a sure and certain guide to the government, and which inspires in the entire nation the highest sentiments. But it is not so, most excellent sir; in the legislative body, as in the government and the people, the sentiment of justice and their own dignity, the knowledge of their duty, the sacred respect for the rights of others, and an absolute confidence in their power to chastise all rash aggression, as well as the outrageous offenses to the beloved flag of our country, happily rise superior to the bursts of anger and the impatient feeling which, far from denoting strength and reason, betrays debility or pitiful irregularities.

The calm, correct, and dignified exposition which you have given of the historical antecedents of the unjustifiable, and, therefore, ignominious war which Chili has declared against Peru, will allow the national assembly to duly appreciate by the light of same, and with the aid of the papers which the minister of foreign affairs will in due time lay before it, the prevision, the correct judgment, and the patriotic zeal displayed by the executive, as well in the praiseworthy end to avoid the disasters of a war between sister nations and allies of Peru, as to maintain with proper splendor the principle of good confraternity as the indissoluble link of happy union between the republican States of the New World.

The same notable document will, I am convinced, convey to the mind of the entire nation, and to the governments not affected by these events, the intimate persuasion that if the efforts of Peru to maintain the peace between Bolivia and Chili have not alone been of no avail, but, what is truly surprising, have been replied to by the most offensive and senseless threats, the work of evil is the exclusive work of Chili and the result of the long-cherished and iniquitous plan to disturb the repose and sully the splendor, not of Bolivia, but of Peru alone, the country which the hand of Providence has seen fit to shower its favors upon, and the growing development of whose riches, knowledge, power, and legitimate influence in the continent of South America Chili has ever desired and to-day strives to arrest.

Profoundly true are your words, Citizen President, when you state that Peru is offering a most beautiful and touching spectacle to all civilized nations; for, in reality, most excellent sir, there is nothing greater, more beautiful, or sublime than the resolution and energy with which the Peruvian nation, without excepting the last of her sons, has risen as one man, full of ardor and vigor, to assist the public authorities with their lives and fortunes in the glorious task of saving the honor and dignity of the republic in the fratricidal war to which Chili has provoked her.

In this redeeming work, in this most noble and patriotic labor, the legislative body, I can declare in their name, most excellent sir, will know how to rise to the height of their mission. Your suggestions, your proposals, the initiative of the government in one word, as also that of the representatives in all relating to the defense of the country and the triumph of her arms, will find in these chambers a ready acceptance and the solution most favorable to the well-defined interests of our cause.

Peru, who has fulfilled a noble and disinterested duty towards the people of Bolivia without being wanting in the considerations due to Chili, will also comply with, to her own honor and glory, the obligation which she has imposed upon herself of triumphing. Divine Providence, whose aid we invoke with you, Citizen President, ever concedes the victory to the cause of justice, which is manifestly our own cause; we shall conquer, therefore, because our triumph as a necessary law of moral order is plainly the will of that Providence.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts.

No. 7.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, April 29, 1879. (Received May 27.)

SIR: On the 26th instant I signed with the British, French, and Italian ministers, and the German chargé d'affaires, a document addressed to the officer in command of the Chilian fleet on the Peruvian coast, of which I inclose you a copy.

The document as at first drawn up and presented to me assumed the truth of the reports contained in the newspapers, in reference to the action of the fleet, and the British minister assured me that the official information he had from the British consuls at the various places along the coast fully justified the statements referred to in the document. But as I had no official information, except from our consul at Iquique, which exhibited the transactions there in a somewhat less flagrant light, I declined to join in the document, unless so altered as not to assume or assert the truth of the statements referred to, believing it to be in the interest of humanity, as well as for the interest of our own citizens along the coast who are the great sufferers by the war. And it seemed to me to be wise as a precautionary measure to put our citizens in as favorable a position as possible to claim damages for any violation of neutral rights.

The truth is, that most of the damages done and likely to be done along the coast in this war will fall upon neutrals, much the larger share of the heavy business in the coast towns being carried on by foreigners. And no nation, as it seems to me, is more interested than our own in maintaining a high standard of neutral rights.

I am responsible for the assertion in this document of the principle of declaring the duty of belligerents towards neutrals, it having been suggested by me and readily approved by all the other ministers signing the document.

I have, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure in No. 7.]

The ministers of France, United States, England, Italy, and Germany to Rear-Admiral Williams Robolledo, commander-in-chief of the Chilian squadron.

ADMIRAL: The undersigned, though desirous of preserving the strictest neutrality in the war now being carried on between Chili and Peru, consider it also their bounden duty to protect, as far as possible, the interests of the subjects and citizens of their respective countries.

The undersigned are perfectly aware that neutrals residing in a belligerent country must, to a certain extent, submit to many risks similar to those sustained by the natives; but they cannot admit that a belligerent has any right wantonly to destroy the property of neutrals, or to put them in peril of their lives.

The undersigned would remind your excellency that it is a principle of modern warfare not to destroy unfortified commercial towns, nor to fire into any peaceful community, without affording neutrals and non-combatants the time necessary to withdraw not only themselves but their personal property out of reach of the fire of the attacking belligerent.

Should this principle be or have been neglected, the undersigned may add that their respective governments will be entitled to hold the Government of Chili responsible for all losses to which their subjects or citizens may have been subjected.

According to the information we have received, but without wishing to decide as to the exact facts, it would appear that the commander of the Chilian iron-clad, the Admiral Cochrane, in reply to some rifle-shots discharged upon his boats, which were engaged in destroying the property of the inhabitants, suddenly opened fire with shot and shell on the large commercial town of Mollendo, inhabited by thousands of unoffending people, both foreign and Peruvian.

In Pisagua the course pursued is stated to have been even more regrettable, as, after a skirmish between the Chilian boats engaged in destroying trading launches, and the soldiers on the beach, the Chilian squadron opened fire upon this purely commercial town without any previous notice, and did not cease firing until nine-tenths of the houses were laid in ashes, with immense loss to neutrals, as at least two-thirds of this loss will fall on foreigners.

It will be the painful duty of the undersigned to draw the attention of their respective governments to these bombardments of unfortified commercial towns, and to the heavy losses thus unnecessarily inflicted on neutrals.

They consider also that they are but fulfilling a distinct duty in thus drawing your excellency's attention to the opinion they have formed of the proceedings of the Chilian squadron in Mollendo and Pisagua, and in a lesser degree at Iquique.

Accept, admiral, the assurance of our high consideration.

(Signed by the ministers of France, United States, England, Italy, and Germany.)

No. 159.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts.

No. 13.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, May 12, 1879. (Received June 9.)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch to me (No. 145, series of dispatches to my predecessor) in reply to that of Mr. Gibbs, No. 317.

You will have seen by the dispatch of Mr. Gibbs of April 2, No. 326, as well as mine since that time, that prior to the date of your dispatch Peru had become a party to the war, Chili having declared war against Peru.

On looking over the dispatches of my predecessor I find that he had given you a very correct and clear statement of the causes which led to the war. But aside from and back of all avowed causes of hostility between Chili and Peru, it is not difficult to discover a bitter prejudice and traditional animosity, originating with the conquest of Peru and Chili between the Pizzaros and the Almagros, a feud which resulted in the mutual extermination of both these families of butcher "conquistadores," the retributive justice of which result will be equally accepted by the verdict of history, whether attributed to the working out of natural laws or to the dispensation of Providence, but the beneficence of which, to the present limited scope of human vision, would have been more apparent had it been accomplished before these monsters had been permitted to land on the shores of the new world to extinguish a civilization more humane than their own, and to destroy (at least in Peru) useful improvements which the conquering race have never been able to equal or replace. (Pardon this long digression, which perhaps may be improper here, and strike it out.)

But little progress has been made in the prosecution of the war since my former dispatches, except in the raising of troops, which goes vigorously on. Chili thus far appears to have command of the sea, and it is the opinion of Rear-Admiral Rodgers, and seems to be the general opinion, that the Peruvian fleet is not able to meet it with a fair chance of success.

The Chilian fleet has completely put an end to the shipping of guano and nitrates, both held as government monopolies until now, and worked by neutrals on government account, the proceeds of which constituted the principal source of public revenue.

The same fleet has bombarded some of the small towns along the southern coast, and established a blockade, which, however, is not kept up by the presence of an adequate force. They have also cut the cable, first at Iquique, and a few days past at Arica; and now, as the papers report, prohibited the sending of messages in cipher by the cable over which they have control by any parties but the officers of their government.

Many of the operations of the Chilian fleet have probably been carried on, in part at least, for the purpose of provoking the Peruvian fleet to come out from the harbor of Callao and meet them on the open sea, away from the protection of the powerful forts and batteries by which this port is protected.

The Peruvians have been constantly repairing, strengthening, and fitting out their fleet, and there are now some indications of their undertaking some enterprise at sea.

While matters remain in their present condition upon the water there is very great difficulty in bringing the opposing land armies near enough to each other to inflict any injury upon either. The desert of Atacama separates them, and it is very difficult, if not impossible, to transport an army or its supplies across it. This difficulty, while the Chilians dominate the sea, operates most injuriously upon Peru and Bolivia; as from the nature of the country between the Andes and the sea, and that in the interior among or between the two ranges of Andes the march of armies and the transportation of supplies are necessarily tedious.

The great need of Peru, especially, seems to be fast-sailing steam transports to carry her land forces, now concentrated here and at Callao, to the seat of war without being liable to be captured by the Chilian fleet. To supply this need Peru has recently purchased from the Pacific Steam Navigation Company the steamers Cosmo and Oroya, and there are indications that one (if not both) of them is preparing for leaving port.

In the meantime the delay in taking the offensive and making their army actively efficient seems to have produced a feeling of impatience and charges of incapacity against the Peruvian Government much like those which prevailed in our own war just previous to the battle of Bull Run; and the government will be compelled soon to make a forward movement of some kind or lose the confidence of the people, the great masses of whom are ignorant and impulsive, and easily lead by demagogues or ambitious aspirants into any revolutionary movement, and Pierola, the champion and favorite of the Church party, is probably ready to avail himself of the first favorable occasion to seize the government. If the present government should meet with any great reverse, or even if it should remain much longer without striking some effectual blow, I should not be disappointed to see a violent and sudden change in the government, and Pierola at its head—a change which I fear would be unfortunate for Peru—but they must be allowed to test the experiment for themselves, if they see fit.

In the mean time the effect of the war upon the finances has been most disastrous. Government paper, which is practically the only currency known here, and had sunk to less than 50 per cent. of its nominal value before the war, has been sinking very rapidly since. The greatest reliance for its redemption was upon the guano and nitrates, and these being cut off at the same time that immense expenditures are called for for the support of the war, it is difficult to find methods of keeping up the public credit or supporting the operations of war.

The citizens have in great numbers enthusiastically tendered a large proportion of their wealth to support the war. But help from this source will be but temporary or not in sufficient amount, though the war is popular with all classes.

The plan which seems just now most likely to be adopted by the government is that of issuing 8,000,000 of paper soles, in addition to the 17,000,000 already out.

Under the influence of all these causes the paper sole (whose nominal value was equal to five francs in silver) had, when I arrived here a month since, so far depreciated that it was worth slightly less than 20 pence in exchange on London, which consisted of drafts at 90 days sight, equal to 120 days date, and to-day the paper sole is worth in that kind of exchange only 16 pence, and even a little less. The American double eagle will, for limited amounts of a few thousand dollars, to-day purchase from 58 to 60 soles paper.

The effect upon neutral shipping, especially that engaged in the shipment of the guano and nitrates, has been still more disastrous, nothing short of ruinous. The whole business is utterly destroyed. The loss falls heaviest, it is true, upon British ship-owners, most of these products being shipped to that country; but a large number of American ship-owners were engaged in the same trade, under charter-parties taken from an English company, describing themselves as agents of the Peruvian Government, by which the owners were made to assume all the risks of war. Some of these had part of a cargo on board, some waiting to begin loading; but all compelled to leave, and the works destroyed.

The government seems to wish to act in entire good faith, and gives notice that all these vessels may abandon the contract with the government or wait till the government can open other deposits, which they are attempting to do; that any vessel partly loaded may proceed to deliver at the port of destination in England what it has on board, or put it on any other vessel for that purpose, &c.; or it may abandon the contract.

Neutral commerce in every form along this coast is suffering severely, and most of the business employing much capital is carried on by neutrals. In short, neutrals are losing more heavily by this war than citizens of any of the belligerents, because they had much to lose and the belligerents very little.

The Government of Peru is doing all it can to encourage neutral commerce. Some days since a prominent member of Congress introduced a measure to prohibit all vessels touching at Chilian ports from landing in Peruvian ports and all touching at Peruvian ports from proceeding to Chili. But the British and French and the Italian ministers and myself contrived, in an informal manner, to suggest that such a measure would conflict with the 18th article of our treaty, and like provisions of the French and Italian treaties, and even with the British, which under a peculiar "favored-nation" clause, gave the same rights as ours. The measure contemplated (by the member) has not been pushed. The government never favored it, and now an act has just been passed by Congress and approved and promulgated by the executive, May 9, which throws open the coasting trade of Peru to foreign vessels on the same terms as allowed to the vessels of Peru, until otherwise ordered by Congress. There is one ground of apprehension felt here, both by Peruvians and neutrals, which probably would not exist anywhere outside of these South American republics, which do not place so much confidence in the public faith of each other as is common in other countries. Peru was drawn into this war in consequence of her treaty with Bolivia, and because the latter when attacked by Chili claimed of Peru the fulfillment of her treaty stipulations. But now a strong and very plausible appeal is made by Chili to induce Bolivia to abandon Peru and join Chili against her, on the ground that it will be more advantageous to Bolivia to despoil Peru of her southern ports, and obtain them, with the rich deposits of guano and nitrate, than to remain as she is. And it cannot be concealed that the more intelligent portion of the people of Peru, and I am inclined to think the government itself, have serious apprehensions least these considerations should prevail with Bolivia.

I send several dispatches by this mail which were ready las week, but which, owing to connections at the Isthmus between the weekly mail on the Pacific with the tri-monthly mails on the Atlantic side, would not have reached New York earlier than by the mail of the 15th instant.

May 13, 1879. Since writing the above the lower house of Congress has, by a decisive vote, rejected the proposition to issue more government paper, and seems now disposed to resort to a loan for $15,000,000, $8,000,000 of which to be applied to the redemption of government currency now outstanding and the balance to meet war expenses.

The two houses have also just resolved, by a vote of 77 to 44, to put on only 2 per cent. ad valorem export duty on sugar, and by an absolute majority reject the plan recommended by the Executive for increasing all custom-house duties 25 per cent.

Accept, &c.,

LEGATION OF PERU,
Washington, May 15, 1879. (Received May 16.)

SIR: It affords me pleasure to inclose a copy of the treaty* of defensive alliance between Peru and Bolivia, in accordance with the promise made to your excellency at our interview this morning.

I also beg leave to hand you a part of the "Peruano" (the official journal of Peru) of 4th April last, which contains the principal communications that passed between the ex-minister of Chili at Lima, Señor Godoy, and our minister of foreign affairs, Señor Irigoyen, and a note from the latter to Señor Lavalle, Peruvian minister to Chili, all written on the eve of the declaration of war, made in behalf of his government by Señor Godoy, on the 3d of April last. I likewise inclose slips from a newspaper published in English, containing translations of the Peru-Bolivian treaty, and of Señor Irigoyen's reply to Señor Godoy's note declaring the interruption of friendly relations between Chili and Peru and demanding his passports. These translations, although they might be improved, are substantially correct.

The accompanying documents prove that notwithstanding Peru has in good faith done all in her power to avoid this unhappy conflict, the government has finally been forced to accept the challenge of Chili; and whilst most truly deploring the non-success of her loyal efforts to preserve friendly relations with the people of Chili, and to prevent a war between three republics, called for many reasons to live in perfect harmony, she feels convinced that the civilized nations of the world will properly appreciate her position and agree that Peru finds herself engaged in this quarrel solely because her policy has consisted in keeping guard over the maintenance of those fundamental principles of American law that have been openly disregarded by the Government of Chili.

I avail myself, &c.,

No. 16.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, May 21, 1879. (Received June 16.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that since my last dispatch in reference to the progress of the war, the constitutional President, Gen.

* For treaty of defensive alliance between Peru and Bolivia of February 6, 1873, see inclosure to Mr. Osborn's dispatch No. 98, dated May 10, 1879, Document 59.

Mariano Ignacio Prado, in pursuance of the consent of congress thereto given, has taken the chief command of the Peruvian army and navy, and on the 16th instant left Callao with the first (of the three) division of the Peruvian fleet, composed of the Huascar, Independencia (iron-clads), and the steam transports Oroya, Chalaco, and Limeña, the three latter carrying a portion of the Peruvian army, the numbers not stated to the public. They sailed south with the intention, as is generally supposed, of landing at Arica and forming a junction with the Bolivian army. They were heard from yesterday at Mollendo by dispatch from that place, and by this time, unless prevented by the Chilian fleet (which by last accounts was part at Antofagasta and part at Iquique), must have arrived at Arica.

In consequence of the President having taken the command in person of the army and navy, General Luis de la Puerta, the first vice-president, has, in pursuance of the constitution, become the President ad interim of the republic, and has entered upon the duties of his office, upon which, as is usual in such cases, the members of the old cabinet put their commissions at his disposal, and he has in part completed his cabinet as follows:

General Manuel de Mendiburn, minister of war and navy, and president of the cabinet.

Dr. Don Rafael Velarde, minister of the interior, police, and public works.

Don Rafael de Yzcue, minister of commerce and finance.

Don M. Felipe Paz-Soldan, minister of justice, religion, public instruction, and charity.

To this latter office are also for the present, and until an appointment shall be made, committed the duties of minister for foreign relations. All these appointments seem to be well sustained by public opinion, and the several gentlemen are generally believed to be honest as well as capable men.

With the highest esteem, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

SIR: I have the honor to communicate to your excellency that his excellency, first vice-president of the republic in charge of the executive power, has accepted the resignation tendered by the members of the cabinet, and that with yesterday's date he has organized a new cabinet, as follows:

Minister of war and marine and president of the council, Gl. Manuel de Mendiburn.

Minister of government police and public works, D. D. Rafael Velarde.

Of finances and commerce, D. Rafael de Yzcue.

Of justice, religion public instruction, and beneficence, the undersigned, being likewise in charge of the department of foreign affairs, whilst his excellency names the one who is to take the office.

In communicating to your excellency the organization of the new cabinet, it is satisfactory to say that in the short time I shall remain at the head of this department it will be highly satisfactory to me to contribute to the maintenance of the good relations that happily exist between the government of Peru and that of the United Sates, at the same time facilitating your excellency in the discharge of your important mission.

No. 18.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, May 27, 1879. (Received June 16.)

SIR: Since my last dispatch of May 21 (No. 16), viz, on the morning of the 22d, the Chilian fleet (with the exception of the Esmeralda and Covadonga) appeared off the harbor of Callao and remained for several hours, when, without attempting anything, it sailed for the south, having, as is supposed, learned from some fishermen the previous departure of the first division of the Peruvian fleet (mentioned in my last). Their expedition to Callao had given the Peruvian fleet time to transport in safety a considerable part of their army here, with munitions and supplies, to the towns along the southern coast of Peru—Mollendo, Pisagua, Arica, and Iquique—and also to transport a part of the Bolivian army from Arica as far as Pisagua, and to form a junction of the Peruvian with the Bolivian army.

Since that time, and while the Peruvian and Chilian fleet were mutually ignorant of the whereabouts of the other, it is reported here, and I think correctly, that the Huascar (Peruvian) attacked and sank the Chilian steam-corvette Esmeralda at or near Iquique; and the steam frigate Independencia, chasing the Chilian Covadonga, and when on the point of reaching her (on her flight for the shore), ran aground or upon a reef, from which it was found impossible to get her off, and she was abandoned and burnt or blown up by the Peruvians themselves.

This is a serious loss to Peru, but does not, in my estimation, overbalance the advantages gained by Peru in this expedition to the south. But this may yet depend much upon what the Huascar may have been able to accomplish before the arrival there of the Chilian fleet, and upon her success in avoiding the Chilian fleet. But, unless she waits too long, she will probably easily evade that fleet, as it is composed of very slow vessels; and some of the Peruvian transports which went south have returned without seeing the fleet.

The effect of the war upon the finances becomes every day more disastrous. Exchange on England is now quoted at 16 pence per sole, and an American double eagle is worth to-day 62 soles.

I inclose a copy of the act of the Peruvian congress passed for the purpose of providing ways and means by loan and taxes. This is taken from the South Pacific Times, but is translated with substantial accuracy.

Whereas the Congress of the Republic of Peru has given the following law:

ARTICLE 1. Let a national loan be effected for the sum of ten million soles in current money of the republic, at the figure of eighty per cent., and eight per cent. interest per annum, with ten per cent. accumulative amortization.

ART. 2. The service of this loan will be effected at the termination of every quarter, beginning with the quarter expiring on the 1st of October, 1879, and the amortization will be made by lot and at par.

ART. 3. The amortization and interest funds will be guaranteed by the product of the capitation and income taxes, and the tax on the exportation of sugar, sanctioned by the present special Congress, and will also, as a subsidiary guarantee, be assured by the product of such national property as may be of easy appropriation.

ART. 4. The sale of the national property subject to the service of this loan will be effected at public auction, and the payment must solely be made in bonds of the loan authorized by this law.

ART. 5. The loan must be effected within the peremptory term of forty-five days from the date of the publication of this law.

ART. 6. If, at the expiration of the said term of forty-five days, the subscriptions should not cover the full amount of the loan, the actual issue of notes shall be increased in the proportion of the sum wanting to complete the eight millions which the loan will produce.

ART. 7. Let the committee appointed by the law of the 27th January last be empowered to deliver to the executive, in notes of the new issue, the complement of the eight millions to which the preceding article refers, and also to effect the issue and the service of the loan in the proportion subscribed; to which end the funds appointed by this law for said service shall be handed over to them.

ART. 8. The sum of one million eight hundred thousand soles out of the funds for the service of the loan shall be set aside for the payment of amortization and interest of the same loan, should it be entirely covered. If not, of this amount the necessary sum shall be applied to the service of the loan as far as covered, adding the remainder to the fund of amortization of the fiscal issue.

ART. 9. If the funds set aside by this law for the service of the loan should exceed one million eight hundred thousand soles, the administrating committee shall deliver the excess to the executive.

ART. 10. The two millions of soles in restamped notes, which the associated banks had in deposit for the exchange of the unstamped notes, and which the executive has been authorized to issue by the legislative resolution of the 13th instant, shall be considered as an integral part of the subsidiary issue authorized by this law, which in no case can exceed eight millions. Should the loan be effected in its entirety, the two last millions received will be used for the amortization of the two million of soles in notes referred to in the article.

SIR: Though the matter does not strictly pertain to the business of this legation, I will take the liberty of calling your attention to the decree of President Daza of Bolivia, dated March 26th last, in reference to neutral vessels and privateers.

It strikes me that this decree, if carried into effect, might seriously conflict with our treaty with Bolivia,—articles 15, 16, and 17.

This decree was not published here until the 16th May, and did not come to my notice until several days after, nor until Mr. Pettis had left here for Bolivia. I presume it has already attracted his attention, but lest it might not, I have called his attention to it by letter.

DECREE OF PRESIDENT DAZA.

HILARION DAZA, President of the Republic of Bolivia, &c.:

Chili having inaugurated a war against Bolivia, and provoked this by means of a filibustering aggression, and by a violent occupation of our coast by an armed force, breaking two treaties of boundary of a permanent character, the time has arrived to organize maritime hostilities by all legitimate means of defense; to that end having the right and believing it necessary, the issuing of commissions to privateers against the ships sailing under the enemy's flag, against the goods belonging to Chilians, whether contraband of war or not, found under a neutral flag, and for the seizure and confiscation of nitrates, guano, and products of Bolivian coast which are worked and exported, committing theft and piracy upon the national property, and this protected by the Chilian army.

DECREES.

The following regulations, to which must be subject the captains of privateer ships, with the commissions from the republic in actual war with Chili.

1. The Bolivian privateers are authorized to pursue and capture all Chilian vessels, whether men-of-war, merchantmen, or privateers, found on the high sea or in the waters or ports of the republic, or in the waters or ports of the enemy.

2. The privateers of the republic are prohibited from attacking or exercising any act of hostility in the ports or territorial waters of neutral nations, it being understood by territorial waters, those comprised within the reach of cannon at the lowest tide.

3. The privateers of the republic can seize the cargo of the Chilian merchant vessels, when these do not belong to a neutral, except in case that the goods that compose it are contraband of war destined to the enemy, these are always seizable. If a part of the cargo is contraband of war and the other is not, the first alone is seizable.

4. The privateers are by this authorized to detain and seize any neutral vessel which may carry to the enemy official despatches, or land forces, or sea forces, or seamen for the enemy's ships.

5. The privateers of the republic can capture all cargoes appertaining to Chilians, and found on board a neutral vessel, be it or not contraband of war.

6. Contraband of war is composed of the following articles: cannon, muskets, mortars, and arms of every description; also, every sort of ammunition, gun-carriages, powder, saltpeter, sulphur, military clothing, leather in stripes, saddles and bridles, tents, coal destined to the enemy's war-vessels or privateers, and in general all instruments or things destined for war purposes; amongst these, provisions, gold and silver coin, and correspondence addressed to the enemy, are likewise contraband of war, military contingents, and the individuals who belong to the enemy's service.

7. Also, all ships are seizable that cannot prove their neutrality. Likewise those that do not possess their principal papers, such as their sailing certificate, bills of lading of their cargo, or others showing the neutral property of this and of the vessel, and it will be declared a good prize, unless it is shown that these have been lost through an inevitable accident. All papers shown must be properly signed to be admitted.

8. The ships that may hoist a different flag from that of their real nationality, those who throw their papers into the sea, and those that oppose resistance, or endeavor to escape the privateers, will be considered as enemies.

9. The privateers of the republic are authorized to seize all vessels, without distinction of nationality, that carry on board the products exported from Mejillones, Antofagasta, and minerals from Caracoles, such as saltpetre, guano, silver or copper metals, when these cannot prove that they have been dispatched with the concurrence of the Bolivian authorities.

10. The declaration of good prize will be given by the tribunals established by the laws of the republic, If the prize cannot be brought before them, owing to the distance or other cause, the trial shall take place before the diplomatic or consular agents of the republic, in the ports of the friendly nations which may allow the sale of the prize. If the privateer should find it difficult, by reason of any extraordinary circumstances, to send the captured vessel to trial, he will use his discretion according to the circumstances, consulting his security, and preserving the justifying documents which he will opportunely deliver to the competent authority.

11. The privateers of the republic have, as such, the right of visitation which belongs to belligerents, and to exercise it they must comply with the following directions: They will display the national flag, firing a blank shot to stop the vessel which is to be visited, and to compel it to display its flag. If she should not do so, the privateer will proceed, as he thinks fit, to compel her.

12. If the merchant vessel should stop and fly its colors, the privateer captain will proceed to send the visit of recognizance, with the necessary precautions in order to be satisfied by the papers existing on board, of the nationality, nature of the ship, and its cargo, and whether it carries on a lawful commerce.

13. In all cases which result in showing that the vessel is seizable, the privateer will take an inventory of the cargo and all the effects which may be found on board; he will keep the documents which prove the legitimacy of the prize, in order to present them to the respective tribunals.

14. If the visit results in showing that the vessel is not seizable, nor subject to be detained, and that the cargo is entirely neutral property, and that there is no contraband of war, he will give to the captain of the visited ship a certificate in which these circumstances are to be stated, the captain retaining a duplicate of this document.

15. The vessels seized by the privateers of Bolivia, as well as the captured cargo on board of them, are free from all fiscal tariff in the ports of the republic.

16. The commander, officers, and crew of each privateer are under the protection and laws of the republic, and will be considered as citizens of Bolivia, having all the guarantees and rights annexed to the citizenship of Bolivia, though they be foreigners, through the mere act of fitting out and arming a vessel as privateer, or enlisting on board of it.

No. 20.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 18, 1879.

SIR: Your dispatch (No. 7) of the 29th of April last has been received. It relates to neutral rights and the rights of peaceable and unarmed citizens in bombarded towns. The general views upon these subjects which you express are approved, and you were judiciously cautious, before you joined your diplomatic colleagues in signing the protest which was addressed to the commander of the Chilian fleet, to require that paper to be so changed as to make the protest dependent upon the truth of the facts which originally was assumed. The prudence of this step is understood to have since been illustrated by the disclosure that the bombardment of at least one of the points named was by no means unprovoked, but was in retaliation for the firing upon boats of the Chilian squadron, which approached the port under a flag of truce, for the purpose of announcing the blockade. The firing upon a flag of truce is notoriously one of the gravest breaches of the laws of war which a belligerent can commit, and is held to justify severe measures of retaliation, such as were adopted in the instance adverted to.

Although the policy of this government has heretofore shown a leaning towards neutral rights, this has never been or intended to be such as to extinguish the just rights of belligerents, especially of comparatively weak powers. It is apprehended that the capitalists of great European states, who have heavy investments in the funds and in the trade of the South American countries, are so alarmed about their interests that they may not be indisposed to deny any belligerent rights to those countries in the war now unhappily on foot. Undoubtedly they endeavor to impress their views and their anxieties upon their governments at home. This department is not aware how these may have been received. It is hoped, however, that in deciding upon the subject, that no neutral will omit to bear in mind that an acknowledgment of the independence of the belligerents implies a concession to them of all the rights in that character which they may claim under the public law, however the exercise of those rights may infringe upon the interests of neutrals.

The war adverted to is much to be deplored, and, for the sake of humanity, at least, it is hoped that it may soon be brought to an honorable close. Although our own citizens have a much smaller interest in this than those of European countries, complaints upon the subject, especially from owners of vessels in the carrying trade, have reached this department. Hostilities in this case, however, are not likely to be soonest ended, or peace to be permaneut, if neutrals show such impatience as they would not be likely to acquiesce in if the situation were to be reversed.

In regard to the law applicable to the bombardment of unfortified places, permit me to refer you to the opinion of Attorney-General Henry Stanbery, of the 31st of August, 1866, relative to the bombardment of Valparaiso by the Spaniards. A manuscript copy of the paper is herewith transmitted to provide for the contingency of your not having a printed one.

I am, &c.,

WM. M. EVARTS.

[Inclosure in Instruction No. 20.]

Mr. Stanbery to Mr. Seward.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 31, 1866.

SIR: It appears from your letter of the 27th instant that the American commercial houses of Wheelwright & Co. and Loring & Co., domiciled for commercial purposes at Valparaiso, sustained losses of their merchandise in the conflagration caused by the bombardment of that city by the Spanish fleet on the 31st of March last.

The question presented for my opinion is, whether a case is made for the intervention of the United States on behalf of these citizens for indemnity against Spain or Chili?

I do not see any ground upon which such intervention is allowable in respect to either of those governments.

The bombardment was in the prosecution of an existing war between Spain and Chili. Although, under the circumstances, it was a measure of extreme severity, yet it cannot be said to have been contrary to the laws of war, nor was it unattended with the preliminary warning to non-combatants usual in such cases.

It does not appear that in carrying on the bombardment any discrimination was made against resident foreigners or their property. On the contrary, there was at least an attempt to confine the damage to public property.

Then, as to the Chilian authorities, it does not appear that they did or omitted any act for which our citizens there domiciled have a right to complain, or that the measure of protection they were bound by public law to extend to those citizens and their property was withheld.

No defense was made against the bombardment, for that would have been fruitless and would have aggravated the damage, as Valparaiso was not then fortified, and no discrimination was made by those authorities between their own citizens and foreigners there domiciled. All shared alike in the common disaster.

The rule of international law is well established that a foreigner who resides in the country of a belligerent can claim no indemnity for losses of property occasioned by acts of war like the one in question.

The bombardment of Copenhagen by the British in 1807 is a notable illustration of this rule. Immense losses were sustained by foreigners domiciled in that city. There was no previous declaration of war against Denmark, and no reasonable ground upon which the bombardment could be justified, and yet no reclamation upon the footing of these losses was ever admitted by Great Britain. The bombardment of Greytown, in May, 1854, by the United States sloop of war Cyane, is another instance of this rule. Losses were sustained by French citizens there domiciled, from the fire of the Cyane. A petition to the United States from those parties for indemnity was presented through the French minister, then resident at Washington, but without the express sanction of his goverment. Upon full consideration, this petition was refused. Mr. Marcy, then Secretary of State, in answer to the claim holds the following language: "The undersigned is not aware that the principle that foreigners domiciled in a belligerent country must share with the citizens of that country in the fortunes of war, has ever been seriously controverted or departed from in practice."

I have therefore to repeat that I am of opinion no ground is laid for the intervention of the United States in favor of these parties.

LEGATION OF PERU,
New York, June 24, 1879. (Received June 26.)

SIR: The minister of foreign affairs of Peru has instructed me to transmit to you the inclosed pamphlet, which is the counter-manifest addressed by the Peruvian Government to the United States in relation to the war declared by Chili.

The Government of Peru, which is now more desirous than ever to merit the good opinion and the friendship of the enlightened Government of the United States, hopes that your excellency, by perusing the statement made in its name by Mr. Irigoyen, will be enabled to appreciate Chili's true motives in declaring war against us, and to see on which side justice is.

I avail myself of this occasion to reiterate to your excellency the assurances of my very high esteem and distinguished consideration.

JOSÉ CARLOS TRACY.

COUNTER-MANIFEST.

Peru's reply to Chili.

(Addressed by the Government of Peru to all friendly powers with reference to the war which has been declared against it by Chili.)

[Translation.]

LIMA, May 1, 1879.

SIR: The exposition which was addressed on the 12th of April last to all friendly governments, by the minister of foreign affairs of Chili, reveals the fallacy of the motives which have led that government to declare war against Peru.

I feel confident that your excellency has vainly sought in that document for a single plausible pretext which may even apparently justify the very serious grounds taken therein, for it is not possible for good sense and justice to exhibit themselves on a foundation which has been prepared for some time past by overweening ambition and other ignoble sentiments, which at once present themselves to the appreciation of an impartial criticism.

The Government of Chili having lost prestige it its own country, through the policy which it had followed in the question of the Argentine Republic, by maintaining for a long series of years, and in a most irritating manner, exaggerated pretensions over the straits of Magellan and the Patagonian coast, and by afterwards abandoning them before the energetic attitude of that nation; embarrass by the increasing depression of its industries, and by an overwhelming commercial crisis which was daily destroying the principal sources of its prosperity, it suddenly turned its attention to the Bolivian coast, the object of its ancient and oft deferred aspirations, in order to realize an easy conquest which should re-establish it in the good opinion of its citizens, and replenish its exhausted treasury with the abundant wealth which Providence had bestowed upon that privileged territory. For that purpose it needed some pretext which should enable it to initiate its shameful programme, which was found in the question which had sprung up between the Nitrate and Railroad Company of Antofagasta and the Bolivian Government, on account of the moderate tax of ten cents which the latter had established upon the exportation of each quintal of nitrate, as a means of forcing the settlement of differences then existing.

Although in this question, which was an entirely private one, and as such subject solely to the laws and tribunals of Bolivia, there was no excuse for the interference of any government, that of Chili arrogated to itself the defense of those interests belonging not only to Chilians, but also to citizens of other nations; taking as a basis Article IV of a treaty celebrated with Bolivia in 1874, it demanded the suspension of the tax under threat of annuling the treaty.

The Bolivian Government repelled such a pretension, and reminded the Government of Chili that arbitration was stipulated for the settlement of differences which might arise between them.

The latter government, which up to that moment seemed to have forgotten so sacred a pledge, as was evident by the terms of its demand, was forced to acknowledge it by requiring Bolivia to suspend the execution of the law imposing a tax on the Nitrate and Railroad Company of Antofagasta, in order to submit the matter to the arbitration prescribed by the treaty.

And your excellency must bear in mind that while Chili thus appeared ready to enter into an amicable arrangement with Bolivia, it had sent one of its ironclads to Antofagasta with forces ready to land, and another portion of its fleet to Caldera with all descriptions of war material, assuring the governments of La Paz and Lima, through its respective legations, that the ships and forces dispatched to that port had no other aim than to insure, in case of necessity, order and tranquillity on shore, in harmony with the Bolivian authorities.

During this interval the Bolivian Government, animated by a desire to avoid a conflict with Chili, and deferring at the same time to the good offices interposed by Peru, yielded to the pretensions of the former republic by suspending the execution of the law imposing a tax on nitrates, and by accepting arbitration.

This fact should have effectually put an end to all difficulties, and my government believed it would; but the Government of Chili, which was determined by all means to destroy the treaty of 1874 and to seize a portion of the Bolivian coast, found a new pretext in the decree issued by the Government of La Paz rescinding the private contract which it had celebrated with the Nitrate and Railroad Company of Antofagasta. Such a resolution, even on the hypothesis of its being unjust and illegal, is not a sufficient cause to justify a government violently to break a treaty, and still less for taking possession of the coast of its opponent under the pretext of reivindicacion, as has been done by Chili, since before impartial minds it would not be justifiable even to exert the mere pressure of force.

Questions such as that existing between the Government of Bolivia and the Nitrate Company, in itself a private question, are subject to the decisions of competent tribunals in accordance with the legislation of each country, and with the principles of international law. It is only in cases of notorious injustice that a foreign government may interfere for the protection of its citizens, and under this aspect of the question Chili should have waited for an opportunity to interpose its claim, following the conduct usually adopted in such cases by nations which do not deviate from the principles maintained by science and accepted by civilized communities, and without overlooking the fact that all difference with Bolivia should be settled by arbitration.

Notwithstanding this, it pursued a different course, for no sooner did it receive the news of the recision of the contract adjusted with the company, and without protesting against the act by peaceable means, which at least might conform to the practice usual in such cases, than it hastened to occupy the defenseless Bolivian coast, with forces prepared beforehand, and which, according to its previous declarations, were only to be used to preserve order on land, should it become necessary, in harmony with Bolivian authorities.

Chili endeavors to justify its conduct by alleging that the territory comprised between parallels 23° and 24° of south latitude belonged to it by right of dominion and possession before the treaty of 1866; that it was ceded to Bolivia on condition that the latter would not impose additional taxes on Chilian industries and capital for 25 years; and that this republic, having set aside that stipulation, it became necessary to bring things back to their previous status.

In order that your excellency may appreciate the inaccuracy of those statements, it will be sufficient for me to bring before your enlightened consideration the declarations made by the Chilian foreign office itself, and contained in the memorial of the minister of foreign affairs addressed to the National Congress of that republic in the years previous to the treaty of 1866.

In the memorial of 1861 is found the following: "The Treaty of Boundaries which was being negotiated with the republic of Bolivia has met with unexpected interruptions. The government had cherished the idea that amicable and prudent arrangements would effectually dispose of questions as to the uncertainty of limits which heretofore had been the source of difficulties between the two countries, and regrets that the steps taken in this direction have been fruitless."

In a similar document, in the year 1862, the Government of Chili also acknowledges the uncertainty of limits in the following words: "The negotiations relative to the adjustment of the Treaty of Boundaries, which in this respect would put an end to the old questions, have estranged this republic and Bolivia, and have not produced the results which were expected." In the same memorial the minister of foreign affairs tells the Congress of this country: "Bolivia, through its special envoy, ad hoc, had proposed to subject the matter to the arbitration of a third friendly power." This circumstance demonstrates the confidence which Bolivia always had in her rights, and her desire to effect an amicable arrangement.

And lastly, in the same strain, the minister of foreign affairs, in his report for the year 1863, declared that a treaty determining boundaries was pending, which should finally settle all questions as to limits which had arisen between the two countries.

It is then a demonstrated fact that before the treaty between Chili and Bolivia of August 10, 1866, there was an uncertainty as to the limits between the two countries, and also negotiations for the celebration of a treaty which should settle all their differences, whereby it is apparent that the assertions made by Señor Fierro, in his memorial to the friendly powers, are wholly inexact when he assures them that Chili, before the treaty referred to, "enjoyed dominion and possession over the territory comprised between the parallels of latitude 23 and 24."

Had Chili been in that situation, she certainly would not have sustained through long years the negotiations to which she refers in her own documents, and still less would she have carried her disinterestedness to the extent of abandoning a rich territory merely to ingratiate herself with the Government of Bolivia. Thoroughly convinced that the territory in dispute had at no time belonged to her, she would not accept the arbitration proposed by Bolivia, and feeling confident that, under any circumstances, the verdict would be adverse to her pretentions, she celebrated the treaty of 1866, the first article of which is as follows:

"The line of demarcation between Chili and Bolivia, in the desert of Atacama, shall henceforth be the 24th parallel of south latitude, from the Pacific coast to the eastern limits of Chili; so that Chili on the south, and Bolivia on the north, shall enjoy possession and dominion over the territory extending to the said parallel of latitude, and shall exercise therein all the acts of jurisdiction and sovereignty inherent to the lord of the soil."

This article coincides in sentiment with the preamble to the treaty, wherein it is asserted that both republics "desired to put an end amicably, and mutually satisfactory, to the long pending question between them as to the determination of their respective territorial boundaries of the desert of Atacama," and also with the terms of the memorial which immediately after the celebration of that treaty was presented to the Congress of Chili by the minister of foreign affairs, wherein the following language is employed: "Animated, as well as is Bolivia, by an earnest desire to establish more intimate relations between the two republics, and to remove forever any cause of difference between them, we avail ourselves of these conditions, mutually liberal, for the definitive settlement of the former question of boundaries in the desert of Atacama."

The treaty of 1874, which is the last which has been celebrated between Chili and Bolivia for the purpose of introducing some modifications in the division of the profits of the development of the frontier territory, which had been reciprocally recognized in the treaty of 1865, strengthened the rights of Bolivia over the territory comprised between the 23d and 24th parallels of latitude. Its first article is, in fact, the most precise which could have been agreed upon, since it says: "The 24th parallel of latitude, from the coast to the Andes at the divortia aquarum, is the line between the republics of Chili and Bolivia."

These stipulations, in their spirit as well as their form, are absolute and unconditional, and in nowise resemble the terms employed by nations in treaties in which a cession of territory is agreed upon. Article 1st of the treaty celebrated between France and Sardinia in 1859, in reference to the cession of Lombardy, is conceived in these words: "His Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, renounces, in his name, and that of his successors, his rights and titles over Lombardy." Almost the same terms are employed in the cession of Monaco to France, of the cantons of Menton and Koemebrume, and of the more modern of Nice, in 1860.

It was necessary to set forth the antecedents to which I have referred, and which extend over a period of twenty years, in order to present in a proper light the origin of a dispute which culminated in the occupation of the Bolivian coast, and which has led Chili to declare war against Peru. These antecedents, moreover, are indispensable in order to arrive at a conclusion that the conflict between Chili and Bolivia, so long sustained, was amicably settled in the treaty of 1866, and ratified in 1874, wherein the two high contracting parties reciprocally renounced the right which each claimed over territory in Atacama.

It cannot, therefore, be justly held that Chili had ceded to Bolivia a portion of territory which was indisputably the property of the former; and still less that the treaties already cited were conditional, as it is claimed by Chili.

Your excellency is well aware that treaties establishing boundaries, similar to those recognizing the independence of a state, are not of a transient character, having the special feature of being definite and unchangeable after they are once carried into effect. Such treaties continue to exist even independently of a change of sovereignty and of the form of government of a country, and that war itself cannot abrogate them, as it does ipso facto all other treaties between the belligerents.

It is not true the treaty of 1874 is conditional, or that Chili has ceded her rights over the territory comprised between the parallels 23° and 24° of south latitude, on condition of the non-imposition of additional taxes on Chilian industry and capital, as is affirmed by Señor Fierro. Chili could not cede that which had never belonged to her, and still less stipulate conditions for similar concession. In the treaty of 1866 she recognized the dominion of Bolivia over the territory which extended to the 24th parallel of latitude, declaring that that republic might exercise over that territory all acts of jurisdiction belonging to the "lord of the soil."

This acknowledgment having been made in an absolute manner, it was not allowed to subsequently revoke it by any stipulation of ulterior conditions. Chili had solemnly declared Bolivia as the owner of the soil, and having considered her as such during eight years, until treaty of 1874, in which very far from throwing any doubt upon the rights which she had recognized to Bolivia in 1866, she saw fit to ratify them, and could not fall back upon the old questions invoking the right of reoccupation, which is completely rejected and abolished among all civilized communities.

Reoccupation implies unquestionable dominion over the property to which it refers; and if Chili has never exercised dominion over the territories which she has just violently occupied; if, far from this, abandoning her ancient claims she acknowledged that that territory belonged to Bolivia, it is evident that the right of reoccupation which she has asserted is a contradiction in ideas, and an abuse in fact, and the integrity of the treaty of 1874 cannot be brought forward as a counter-argument, for even supposing that it had been abrogated by the alleged violations on the part of the Bolivian Government, things should have been restored to the condition in which they were found prior to the celebration of that treaty, and as a consequence Bolivia's right of dominion over that territory should have remained unimpaired since it had been recognized in an irrevocable manner in the treaty of 1866.

The Government of Chili has, however, ignored these obvious principles in the autonomy of sovereign states; and in the midst of peace has broken the treaty of boundaries by taking forcible possession of territory which she herself declared belonged to Bolivia, and over which she had recognized the sovereignty of that nation from the year 1866 to the 14th February last; and she has proceeded to carry out her programme invoking the absurd and untenable principle of reivindicacion which she has herself condemned in 1864, after the occupation of the Chincha Islands by the Spanish fleet, thereby shaking the foundations underlying American nationalities, and creating deep hatred and an unextinguishable desire for revenge, the tremendous consequences of which it is impossible to foresee or calculate.

The origin being determined of the motive which primarily actuated Chili to take possession of the Bolivian coast, as before stated, and afterwards to declare war against Peru, I will now have the honor to explain to your excellency the policy which has been pursued by my government in the conflict between those two republics, and the true reason of the policy followed by the cabinet of Santiago.

From the 2d of January of the present year, when this ministry was apprised of the first indications of a misunderstanding between Chili and Bolivia, it charged the representatives of Peru at La Paz and Santiago to proffer, at any opportune moment, to the governments of both the good offices of this republic in order to avoid a rupture, or in an amicable manner to avert all acts or measures which should render difficult or impossible a peaceful solution of the questions then pending.

My government further recommended to Bolivia, in a most friendly way, either at prolonged conferences in this ministry between the undersigned and the envoy extraordinary, Dr. Zoilo Flores, or through its representative at La Paz, the expediency of suspending the execution of the law establishing a tax on nitrates at Antofagasta, and the submitting of all difficulties to arbitration, which fact proves the earnestness with which Peru endeavored to prevent a conflict, and the inaccuracy of the contrary asseveration which the minister of foreign affairs of Chili has been pleased to make in his exposition.

On the 24th of January, that is to say 20 days before the occupation of the Bolivian coast by Chilian forces, our representative stated to his Excellency the President of Chili, in a special conference which he held with him during the absence of the minister of foreign affairs, that he was authorized to interpose the good offices of Peru in order amicably to prevent any violent act which might embarrass or interrupt a settlement with Bolivia. His Excellency accepted the offer enthusiastically, and responded to it with a formal promise that no extreme measures would be adopted without notifying the representative of Peru of the same.

Notwithstanding this our chargé d'affaires expressed to Minister Fierro himself the wishes of Peru, and when he had a right to expect compliance with the plighted word of the President of the republic, he only received a courteous rejection of his good offices and a notification that orders were given to occupy by force Antofagasta and Mejillones, as was actually accomplished a few days later. Meanwhile Bolivia had accepted the good offices of Peru, and yielded, as has been stated, to the demands of Chili, which consisted in the suspension of the tax imposed on the exportation of nitrate.

Peru was not, therefore, indifferent to the difficulties which were accumulating between Chili and Bolivia; its conduct, on the contrary, was that of a solicitous and far-seeing friend; and if its good offices, which had been proffered before the outbreak of hostilities, did not accomplish the desired end, it was due exclusively to the fact that in the councils of the Chilian cabinet it had been resolved beforehand, in an irrevocable manner, to seek the aggrandizement of its territory at the expense of its neighbor and ancient ally, and of the disturbance of the balance of power in this section of the continent.

And a very clear and eloquent proof of Peru's lively interest in favor of peace is found in the fact that, although its good offices have not been accepted, whereby it considered its dignity to have been wounded, it was not disheartened or discouraged in its efforts, but hastened to accredit to the cabinet at Santiago a minister plenipotentiary, with the special mission of proposing a settlement with Bolivia on the rational and just basis of the evacuation of the invaded territory, and of the submitting to arbitration of all difficulties existing with the latter republic.

Such repeated offers, the good faith of which Señor Fierro has permitted himself to doubt, by offensively insinuating that his Excellency the President of Peru had stated "that an impulsive public opinion was exercising an undue pressure, and embarrassing his power," were afterwards confirmed by our special envoy in Santiago, who, during the month of his stay in that city, did not cease to devise and propose various methods for a decorous agreement, without any result but the sad conviction that the Government of Chili was firmly bent upon sustaining, by all means, the usurpation of Bolivian territory, and the declaration of war with which she had responded to the efforts made by my government in behalf of peace.

At various conferences which our envoy held in Santiago with his Excellency the President, as well as with his minister of foreign affairs, it was always sought to hide from him their secret designs by speaking in such terms as to make him expect the possibility of the evacuation of the Bolivian coast, for the purpose of wringing from him a declaration of absolute and unconditional neutrality, and if not officially, at least through respectable sources, certain ignominious arrangements were proposed to him, which our representative rejected with dignity, as had been previously done by our chargé d'affaires, notwithstanding the fact that those propositions favored Peruvian interests. Among them was that of dividing Bolivia between Chili, Peru, the Argentine Republic, and Brazil, and making of it, in the words which were employed, an American Poland; and another proposal was that Chili should retain the Bolivian coast, that Peru should cede Iquique and Arica to Bolivia, and that Peru should receive in exchange the Ecuadorian province of Guayaquil.

At the time that this occurred in Santiago, the representative of Chili in Lima addressed to this minister a note which was immoderate and studiously provoking, demanding an explanation of the attitude of the Peruvian press and people, which were but feebly replying to unstinted provocations of the Chilian press and people, falsely and slanderously charging my government with having furnished to Bolivia arms and munitions of war; demanding an explanation as to the existence of a treaty of alliance which united Peru and Bolivia, and which at that date was kept secret; and, lastly, requiring a categorical declaration of Peru's neutrality in the presence of the events which had occurred, and those which were probable, so long as Chili continued to defend by force of arms the Bolivian territory which she had occupied.

The negotiations having been established in Santiago, and this ministry believing that the Chilian cabinet was imbued with a more peaceful and conciliatory spirit than that which was manifested, in all his acts, by their plenipotentiary in Lima, it hastened to address Señor Lavalle, empowered ad hoc, a note in which are satisfactorily disposed of all the charges which were brought against my government, and recommending him to read the same to Señor Fierro and leave with him a copy of the document if he desired it.

This note, which was dated the 22d of March last, will be found among the documents annexed to the memorial which this office has just submitted to the extraordinary Congress, which opened its sessions on April 24th, and which I inclose, in order that your excellency may, if you deem it necessary, verify this and other facts to which reference is being made, and form an accurate opinion as to the proceedings of both republics.

In said document my government declared that as it did not then have official knowledge of the occupation of the Bolivian coast, and as it was not aware of the significance and true aim of that act, the opportunity had not yet arrived to express its opinion and define the attitude which it should assume, and that its policy depended upon two conditions which could not be disregarded, to wit, the existence of the treaty of defensive alliance binding Peru to Bolivia, and the decision of the national Congress, which had been convened for the exclusive purpose of marking out the line of conduct which the government should follow.

The minister of foreign affairs of Chili, however, presumes to affirm that the cabinet of Lima promised the Chilian plenipotentiary the neutrality of Peru. The inaccuracy of this assertion is demonstrated not only by what I have already set forth, but also by the positive declarations which were directly and repeatedly made to the Chilian Government by our plenipotentiary, Señor Lavalle, that Peru could not and should not remain neutral in Chili's contest with Bolivia

Another assertion equally inexact, among the many which are contained in the exposition, is that which supposes that the promise had been made to Señor Godoy to suspend the warlike preparations commenced from the moment that the manifestly hostile designs of the Government of Chili became known. Far from this, on several occasions upon which that gentleman visited this ministry I stated, with the frankness which characterizes the Peruvian people, that we were arming ourselves in anticipation of whatever eventualities might arise, but that our preparations should not be looked upon by Chili as threatening, because they should not be regarded as of an aggressive character; and being satisfied with my representations, he repeatedly stated that he could understand that Peru's interest and political position could not allow her to remain neutral in the contest between Chili and Bolivia, and that he had communicated this impression to his government.

Nor is it true that Peru, while exercising its mediation at Santiago, had supplied Bolivia with arms and ammunition; and my government hastened to repel this charge with becoming dignity, at the very moment when it was advanced by the Chilian envoy. Not only did Peru carry its good faith and peaceful inclination so far as to refuse warlike supplies to Bolivia, but it endeavored to prevent the departure from La Paz of the army, which was burning with ardor to rush to the recovery of their country's usurped territory, as well as the sailing of a privateer which the Government of Bolivia, which is not a signatory to the declaration of Paris of 1856, had prepared to prey upon a rich and defenseless commerce. She omitted nothing in her unconquerable purpose of amicably settling the differences between the two countries.

The Government of Peru could not think or act otherwise; because, aside from the interest which it has ever felt and evinced in the preservation of peace among the South American States, and confiding in the good relations which bound it to its neighbors, it lived without troubling itself with preparations for war, and exclusively devoted itself to the improvement of the critical commercial condition in which it found itself, and which for some time back has impeded the development of its resources; the army, moreover, was distributed over points of its vast territory and was strictly reduced to the peace footing prescribed by law during peaceful times, and the fleet, as is well known to the public and foreign representatives resident in this capital, was almost disarmed, which circumstance, up to the present day, has prevented its leaving the harbor of Callao and repairing to the dislodegment of the Chilian fleet from the southern ports of the republic, that it may not continue its work of burning commercial and defenseless towns, and throwing shells on trains filled with women and children.

A nation completely disarmed as was Peru, and fearful that its interests should be compromised in the struggle if the contending republics did not arrive at some understanding, could not but labor sincerely and enthusiastically in favor of peace, and my government did so, suppressing the deep indignation produced in its own conviction and that of the whole country by the scandalous outrages against our consulates in Valparaiso and Antofagasta, committed in the presence of the Chilian authorities and forces, and which no doubt were expressly prepared with a view to provoke a rupture in the good relations which had been maintained up to that time.

While my government in this manner sought to avoid a sanguinary war, the Government of Chili dallied with the Peruvian plenipotentiary by offering hopes of an arrangement which was not regarded as impossible; and as soon as preparations for war which had been carried on had been completed, it suddenly and brusquely severed relations with the Peruvian envoy, while at the same time the Chilian minister at this capital demanded his passports; and immediately, and without a formal declaration of war, began the blockade of Iquique, and committed those acts of vandalism to which reference has been made.

In order to justify these proceedings it simply alleges the preparations which were making in our fleet, the dispatching of a division of 1,500 men to the port of Iquique, and the existence of a secret treaty which Peru had celebrated with Bolivia in 1873. The enunciation of these fundamental facts is sufficient to reveal their insignificancy and the evidence that the conduct of our adversaries was influenced by other and hidden motives which they dare not express because they would produce profound indignation among the nations of the earth.

The preparation of our fleet and the transfer of 1,500 men to Iquique on the breaking out of the war between two republics, who were our immediate neighbors, could not have been a cause of surprise to Chili, for it is quite natural that the nation should prepare itself for the possible emergencies which a war would be likely to produce, especially when it is carried on at its very borders, as has happened in this case. The Chilian Government had received, moreover, positive and repeated official declarations as to the character of the preparations going on in our fleet, which were merely material, as well as of the movements of the small force mentioned; and it should have been convinced that they were not aggressive, as was subsequently borne out by the facts.

The treaty of alliance with Bolivia could not likewise be construed as a cause for war, inasmuch as in its celebration the contracting parties merely proposed to guarantee to each other their independence, their sovereignty, and the integrity of their respective territories through their mutual defense against any aggression by other nations, which fact does not imply an offense against any state whatever. Similar alliances abound in the department of foreign affairs of other nations, and have never given rise to doubt as to the good faith of the government celebrating them.

The impersonal character of the treaty, its abstract stipulations, and the conditions fixed for declaration of the casus fœderis demonstrate that it could have referred to Chili only after that country should have of her own accord made the fulfillment of the treaty necessary. This treaty, moreover, did not render a war inevitable, but on the contrary required a resort to conciliatory methods which were opportunely offered by Peru without the necessity of concealing under the guise of mediation the character of a beligerent.

On the other hand, the existence of this treaty, notwithstanding the secrecy of its character by virtue of one of its stipulations, was not unknown to Chili. Her public men, and even her ministers of state, at different periods, have mentioned it and frequently referred to its contents.

Moreover, the Chilian Government had official knowledge of its existence from the commencement of the troubles with Bolivia, as the President of this republic and the undersigned communicated to Señor Godoy its principal stipulations, which, far from embarrassing, supported and justified the mediatory and friendly attitude which Peru had assumed in its efforts to avert war between two friendly republics, and to avoid the occurrence of the emergencies which would necessitate bringing into effect the secret alliance.

Nor did the stipulations of the treaty render impossible the neutrality of Peru. If Chili had not occupied the Bolivian coast, invoking the absurd principle of revindication which violates the uti possidetis of 1810 and threatens the territorial integrity of South American States; if Chili had not harbored the purpose of taking forcible possession of that which had never belonged to her; if, deriving her inspiration from a sound judgment, Chili had confined her efforts to obtain through coercive measures the interpretation which she places upon Article IV of the treaty of 1874, arrogating to herself the settlement of a question which properly belongs to Bolivian jurisdiction, Peru would undoubtedly have had no cause for interference in the contest; for so long as the integrity of Bolivian territory was not menaced the casus fœderis would not have been invoked, and Peru would have remained neutral and endeavored to prevent the war and the severance of the good relations between the two countries which the hostilities already commenced presaged.

In 1873 Bolivia was threatened with territorial dismemberment, as was also the Argentine Republic. These threatenings gave rise to the alliance, the aims and tendencies of which are eminently American, since they are calculated to avert war among nations to which peace is necessary for their development and prosperity. Chili had irrevocably settled its boundary question with Bolivia since 1866; and the later treaty, celebrated in 1874, proves that it was not the cause nor the object of the alliance, unless Chili should venture, as it has done, upon the forbidden ground of scandalous usurpation.

The idea that the alliance was inspired by the necessity of forestalling the clamor of the nitrate proprietors in Tarapaca, despoiled of their industry, lacks foundation, and is evidently irrelevant. The expropriation of the nitrate works has cost Peru more than 20,000,000; and the price paid to those who voluntarily disposed of them, and in the price so paid, will be found by those who do not close their eyes to the light of evidence an indemnity which was in some cases far above what justice itself would have demanded. There can be no spoliation when the price of a property is paid and indemnity guaranteed. Peru did both, and does therefore not deserve the insults which have been launched at her in the exposition of the Chilian minister of foreign affairs.

To construe into a cause of alliance between two nations the necessity in which the government of one is placed to avoid claims which may be preferred by the nitrate manufacturers in opposition to the fiscal measures which that nation may have adopted, is a singular proposition which none can accept. Such allegations simply demonstrate that Chili was preparing to constitute herself the champion and defender of the nitrate manufacturers who had been abundantly remunerated for the value of the oficinas which they had voluntarily sold to the state; since, only in this manner can we understand that the minister of foreign affairs should perceive in the alliance the consummation of the expropriation of the nitrate works and an offense against his country.

But while it is true that before impartial minds it cannot be maintained that such expropriation inspire the idea of alliance, we must agree that it insured for Peru and Bolivia the nitrate monopoly and the multiplied interests which are connected therewith, by laying the foundation of a prosperous business which Chili coveted and was determined to wrest from us at all hazzards. Up to that time Peruvian productions had equaled Chili's balances of trade abroad; and after, by force of circumstances, the latter's capitalists had withdrawn from Tarapaca, her ambition revived, and she returned to her efforts for the acquirement of new territories which should offer a fresh field for her decaying activities. This alone can explain the policy of Chili. She needs riches in her present critical financial condition, and as they cannot be found on her exhausted territory, she seeks to obtain by force of arms those which belong to her neighbors. Such are the teachings of the justice which she so loudly proclaims, and of the civilization which she boasts.

The real cause therefore of the war which Chili has declared against Peru is to be found in her vaulting ambition, in her vehement desire to grasp the Bolivian coast, which abounds in guano, nitrates, and other minerals. This she has been seeking for years without hesitating at the employment of any means, even those which are forbidden, and she incessantly seeks the accomplishment of her ends. Taking advantage of Bolivia's internal difficulties, Chili attempted to wrest from her the territory comprehended between the 23d and 24th parallels of south latitude; and not satisfied with this concession, she has endeavored to set Bolivia at war with Peru, by promising assistance, as I have already stated, in the work of seizing the department of Tarapaca in exchange for the territory bordering on the Loa.

There is no act of faithlessness which Chili has not practiced against Peru under cover of the good relations existing between them. Neither the sacred interests of America, nor the dignity of nations, nor the respect due from one state to another, nothing has sufficed to satiate her inordinate ambition. Immediately after the Spanish forces occupied the Chincha Islands under Admiral Pinzon, instead of taking the side of South American interests Chili endeavored to establish closer relations with Spain and to arrange with Ecuador an offensive alliance against Peru, to the end that the latter, crushed by the calamities of war, and in the midst of the difficulties which then embarrassed her means of defense, should succumb, and become the foundation for the realization of Chili's unholy ambition.

While the truce with Spain had not yet been agreed upon and the state of war, therefore, still continued, the Chilian representative in London, without Peru's knowledge and acquiescence, arranged with the representative of Spain to obtain from England's ship-yards the vessels which both had ordered to be built, thus allowing a common enemy considerable to increase her naval forces.

Not having then realized her perfidious combinations she ordered the construction of powerful iron-clads which might enable her to assert supremacy in the Pacific and impose her will upon the nations of the Continent. As soon as she felt her strength she renewed her task against Peru by inspiring the governments and leaders of Bolivia with the idea of seizing a portion of our territory; and availing herself of the first opportunity which offered she has declared war against us, which has been her aim for many years, as the question with Bolivia has been a mere pretext which is proved by several very important public documents in which she has proposed to that power immediate peace, and the compensation of her territory with the more valuable possessions of Peru.

In the light of these antecedents your excellency will appreciate the true motives with which Chili has declared war against us, and will perceive upon which side justice lies.

In the mean time Peru, prematurely drawn into the conflict, places her destinies under the protection of Providence, relying on the justice of her cause, and depending upon the alliance with the noble Republic of Bolivia, trusting in the devotion of her sons and the tried bravery of her army and navy, she cherishes the conviction of her ability to punish her gratuitous enemy.

With sentiments of the highest consideration, I have the honor to subscribe myself your excellency's obedient servant,

MANUEL IRIGOYEN.

No. 25.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, June 25, 1879. (Received July 16.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 20, in reference to the decree of the Bolivian President authorizing privateers, I have to say that having lately heard reports that Bolivia had been making efforts at Montevideo to get vessels to take commissions as privateers, that they were making like efforts in California, and expected also to fit out privateers in ports of Peru, it occurred to me that as Peru and Bolivia were allies in this war, I might with propriety, in the most informal and friendly manner, call the attention of the minister of foreign affairs of Peru to the decree of President Daza and suggest to him the points of conflict which might arise between that decree and the treaty of the United States with Bolivia. I accordingly called upon the minister and stated that it was my wish in the most informal and friendly manner to call his attention to the conflicts which might arise between the principles announced in President Daza's decree and the treaty between the United States and Bolivia, which I proceeded to do; and I took the liberty also to state that if privateers should be fitted out in Peruvian ports under the decree of the President of Bolivia and to be governed by the principles announced in that decree, it might become my duty to make a formal protest to the Peruvian Government against such action. But I stated at the same time that I made these suggestions upon the principle that it is better to avoid difficulties and misunderstandings of this kind in advance than to undertake to remedy them afterwards; and that it had occurred to me that as Peru was in alliance with Bolivia in this contest a friendly suggestion made by him to the proper officer of the Bolivian Government might be well received, and that the President of Bolivia might be induced so far, at least, to modify his decree as to prevent conflicts arising under the treaty of Bolivia with the United States.

These suggestions were received by the minister in a spirit of the utmost kindness and cordiality, and he assured me that he would take occasion in a like friendly and informal manner to bring them to the attention of theBolivian Government; and that he thought I need have no fear that Peru would allow anything to be done in her ports which would be likely to conflict with the rights of the United States under their treaties with either belligerent.

Washington, June 26, 1879.

SIR: I transmit herewith, for your information, copy of an instruction addressed by this Department on the 23d instant to Mr. Pettis, the United States minister resident and consul-general at La Paz, Bolivia, in relation to the intimation lately received through British official channels that the issuance of letters of marque had been decreed by the Bolivian Government, and that agents thereof were already on their way to the United States. A copy of the circular published by the Treasury Department on the 21st instant, addressed to collectors of customs and others whom it may concern, touching the observance of the neutrality laws of the United States, is inclosed.

In the fortunate absence of any intimation that Peru, as the ally of Bolivia, has contemplated, or contemplates, any action which might even remotely infringe the international obligations or domestic laws of the United States, it is unnecessary to instruct you to make official communication on this subject to the minister of foreign affairs, but you may, should you deem it pertinent, intimate to him that this government is using, and proposes to use, every effort to secure the complete observance of the neutrality laws of the United States, both by their own citizens and on the part of those of the belligerent.

Washington, June 27, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 24th instant with the "contra-manifesto" of Peru, relating to the motive of the war now being waged between her government and that of Chili.

Accept, sir, &c.,

No. 169.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts.

No. 34.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 15, 1879. (Received August 7.)

SIR: I inclose a copy of my letter of June 8 to J. W. Merriam, esq., our consul at Iquique, on the subject of blockade. This ought to have been sent you promptly at the time, but I was deficient in clerical force, and it was laid aside for the time, and overlooked until now.

I will say that at the date of the consul's letter, May 23, the blockade of Iquique had been raised by the Peruvian forces, and the consul stated he had been informed, by some gentlemen who professed to know, that by the rules of international law it could not be re-established without a three months' notice.

I will further say, as relating to the same subject (the blockade of Iquique) that both Chili and Peru have become parties to the treaty of Paris, which, among other things, defines what shall constitute a sufficient blockade. That from the time of re-establishment of the blockade at Iquique, about the 1st of June, until the 10th instant, or about that time, no question has been made of the sufficiency or efficiency of the blockade. But it seems that about the time last mentioned, or a little before, the Chilian blockading-squadron adopted the plan of withdrawing at night from the vicinity of the town to the distance of four, five, or six miles or more—fearing, as it is believed, the effect of torpedoes which the Peruvians and Bolivians (who are in possession of the town) might be able to use—and on the night of the 10th instant the Huascar, a Peruvian iron-clad, turreted vessel, of greater speed than the Chilian iron-clads, made her way without difficulty into the port, remained there long enough to communicate with the allied forces on shore, and then, toward the dawn, sailed out in search of the Chilian fleet. She soon fell in with the Chilian transport Matias Cusino, a partially armed wooden vessel, and immediately attacked her, principally with small-arms, and demanded her surrender, which demand was at once complied with, and a prize-crew sent off in boats to take possession; but at that moment the Chilian corvette Abtao, the Magallanes, and later the iron-clad Cochrane made their appearance.

The Huascar at once recalled the prize-crew she was sending out, and, having no time to take possession of the prize, she fired some heavy shot into her hull, disabling her. Then, seeing the Chilian fleet coming down upon her, she sought to make her escape, and in doing so, came in contact with the Abtao, with whom she at once engaged, and the combat was continued nearly an hour, when first the Magallanes and next the Cochrane coming within range, the Huascar left after doing serious damage to the Abtao, and by reason of her greater speed was enabled to make her escape, with very slight injury. What may have taken place since in the port of Iquique, I am not informed.

But it is now insisted here by the Peruvian press, that the blockade is shown to be ineffectual, and that it should be treated as absolutely ended for all purposes. A strong effort, I have no doubt, will be made to induce the diplomatic representatives (of the neutral powers) here to take this ground. What may be the opinion of the other ministers here upon the point, I am not yet informed; but, for myself, I am not yet prepared to take so broad a ground upon the facts already existing, but on the other hand I am inclined to think the facts only show an unsuccessful attempt to raise the blockade by force.

If any mercantile vessel had in the night (say of the 10th instant), and without actual notice of the blockade, got into the port, she could not have been held guilty of a breach of the blockade for so doing. And it may be worthy of careful consideration whether, if this practice of withdrawing the blockading force so far from the port at night should be generally kept up hereafter, neutral nations might not be justified in treating it as ineffectual, and therefore null. But I do not intend to come to any hasty opinion upon this point, and propose to wait till the contingency renders its determination necessary.

I have, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 34.]

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Merriam.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LIMA, PERU, June 8, 1879.

SIR: I notice that in writing to you on the 1st instant, I overlooked one point in your letter, viz, that in reference to the fact of the blockade having been raised, and the question of the length of time necessary to re-establish it. I will say in answer to your question that I know of no rule of international law which would require three months' notice to re-establish the blockade. But it requires the same notice (and no other) that it required to establish it in the first instance; and that, as I understand it, is reasonable notice, having reference to all circumstances existing at the time and place. The notice is mainly if not entirely for the benefit of neutrals, and should be sufficient to all or any neutral ships in port to leave with any cargoes they may have on board at the time; but they can take on no more cargo after notice of the blockade, except with the assent of the blockading squadron, as the recognized purpose of a blockade is to put an end to the foreign commerce of the port, and thus to weaken the power of the nation to which the port belongs.

And as to vessels approaching the port for commercial purposes, they will not be liable to capture unless, after they receive actual notice of its existence, they attempt to enter, in which case they would be liable to capture and forfeiture. But this blockade, not having been formally notified to the governments of neutral powers, so as to give room for the doctrine of implied notice to the ships of such nations; such ships are not to be seized until they shall have received actual notice, which naturally will be given them on their approach by the blockading squadron.

And as to the nature of a blockade itself, you may take it for granted that no mere paper blockade will be recognized by neutral powers, but only such as are maintained by an adequate force. Such an actual force as to render it impossible, or, at least, imminently dangerous, for a vessel to enter the port. But, of course, this doctrine is liable to some qualification. The presence of such force is not required to be absolutely perpetual under all circumstances; as in the case of a storm which may temporarily disperse the blockading force, they will be allowed a reasonable time to resume their position. But, if they voluntarily and completely leave the port so as clearly to indicate a disposition to abandon the blockade, or if they are driven off by the enemy, and the enemy get complete control of the port for a few days (perhaps for a single day) the blockade is ended.

I am, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 19, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 16th instant, and of the report of the Peruvian minister of foreign affairs, presented to the congress convened on account of the war now in progress between Peru, Chili, and Bolivia, and to express the thanks of the government therefor.

No. 171.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts.

No. 36.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 20, 1879. (Received August 15.)

SIR: I have not recently written you anything (excepting in an incidental and collateral way) upon the progress of the war, because it is very difficult to discover that any real progress has been made, except in the way of raising soldiers and transporting them with munitions of war to some field of anticipated operations, and some indecisive and comparatively unimportant naval operations.

By land, the desert of Atacama as effectually separates the armies of Chili on one side, and Peru and Bolivia on the other, as the broad Pacific separates the armies of either from those of China.

Neither party seems to have a navy with sufficient transports to convey an efficient army with its necessary stores and munitions into the territory of the other, at any great distance from that part of Bolivia which approaches the coast, and no decisive action has taken or is likely soon to take place between the fleets. That of Chili would be much the most efficient if a general engagement could be brought about. The Peruvians know this and avoid it, but, with their lighter and swifter vessels, play around the ponderous Chilian iron-clads with impunity, performing the most efficient service, rendering the iron-clads comparatively useless. These last would do the most effectual work if the work were brought to them to be done; but unless they can greatly increase their speed they are not likely to find such work at the right time and place to render it of much consequence.

Chili thus far has, by her own mode of carrying on the war, conferred a great favor upon Peru and Bolivia, by transferring the field of operations to the very locality which they would naturally have chosen, the point where their forces can readily form a junction and operate in concert. And they seem to be now acting in entire harmony, having an efficient combined land force in that region of between 28,000 and 32,000 men, which can be readily concentrated. And the Chilian fleet is too small, compared with the size of the Pacific Ocean, to enable that fleet seriously to endanger the free water communication between the field of operations and the Peruvian base at Callao.

Such is substantially the condition of military affairs to-day. It is liable to be changed at any time, but no one can foresee just what that change is likely to be. In the mean time all the parties are rapidly exhausting their finances, if in fact either can be said now to have any financial resources, for both are on the verge of bankruptcy. The people of all these belligerent countries are poor, and need all their resources.

If the war continues long, further complications are to be feared. The attitude which the Argentine Republic seems to have assumed (according to the intelligence received here, but of which you will be better informed) in rejecting the recent treaty made with Chili, looks ominous for the latter; and if this intelligence should prove correct, Chili seems to be threatened with dismemberment, a result which, in my opinion, would be disastrous to all parties, and which would operate for centuries to come as a cause of commotion and of constantly recurring revolution. In the meantime, while the present war lasts, it not only absorbs all the means of the belligerents and retards all progress in developing their resources and improving their material prosperity, but practically annihilates all commerce with neutral and friendly nations.

It is, therefore, as it seems to me, clearly for the interest not only of the belligerents, but of all other nations, that peace should be brought about between them at the earliest practicable moment. And our own government more than all others seems to me to be interested in such a result; as all these republics have sought to follow the example of the United States, which must naturally feel, to some extent, responsible for their success.

I cannot speak with any confidence of the disposition of Chili, but I am entirely satisfied that both Peru and Bolivia would more readily accept the intervention or advice of the Government of the United States than of any other government in the world. Of this I have become satisfied from various informal and familiar conferences. And if either of the belligerents (Peru and Bolivia on one side or Chili on the other) could be induced to make a proposition for peace on the basis that Chili should first evacuate and surrender the territory, the seizure of which from Peru and Bolivia was the commencement of the war, and that all matters in dispute (boundaries, violation of treaties, expenses of the war, &c.), should be referred to the Government of the United States or any department thereof, I am strongly inclined to believe that the proposition would be accepted by all the belligerents.

Mr. Pettis, our minister to Bolivia, who feels a deep interest in bringing about peace, and has, as he informs me, learned through the correspondence with Mr. Osborn at Santiago, that he also is very desirous of the same result, telegraphed me on the 8th of this month from Puno (on the shore of Lake Titicaca), requesting me, at his expense, to meet him at Mollendo (on the coast), "in the interest of peace," and to telegraph him at Arequipa, &c. I telegraphed him at Arequipa that I could not come, but that I should write him at Mollendo, which I did on the 9th (which was the first mail). And as that letter shows my reasons for not complying with his request, I inclose a copy of it, without (otherwise) repeating the reasons for declining to go. I will say, however, that before receiving the telegram of Mr. Pettis I had ascertained exactly the position of the Peruvian Government in reference to the only basis upon which (in the present condition of affairs) they would be willing to enter upon negotiations looking to a termination of hostilities, but I was entirely ignorant of the disposition of Chili, and if I could have been assured that Chili was ready to make a proposition for negotiations upon the only basis which Peru would (under present circumstances) entertain, I might have ventured to meet Mr. Pettis at Mollendo, as proposed by him.

On the 18th, Mr. Pettis came to Lima, and I called upon him at his hotel and invited him to the legation, an invitation which he accepted. He seemed to feel very sanguine that by our efforts a peace might be effected. But, though he had corresponded on the subject with Mr. Osborn, he could give me no definite information as to the terms upon which Chili would be willing to enter upon negotiations to that end.

But I went with him to the minister of foreign affairs of Peru, who fixed a meeting for 2 o'clock p. m., of the 18th, which we attended. Mr. Pettis then explained his interviews with the Bolivian authorities, and presented the paper showing the result, a copy of which I here inclose (marked Exhibit No. 2, which is a translation by the interpreter for the Bolivian Government), and he submitted the questions: 1st. Whether, if our minister in Chili could give assurance that Chili would be willing to accept a proposition for peace upon the basis indicated by that paper, Peru would be willing to take the first step by offering to Chili such a proposition? 2d. If not willing to make the proposition, would Peru accept it, if Chili should propose it?

The minister of foreign affairs asked time to consult the other members of the government, and appointed 9 o'clock in the evening of the same day, at his room at the palace, to give an answer. We met as proposed, and the minister then assured us that if Chili should make the proposition the basis indicated by the Bolivian authorities (as stated in the inclosure herein, No. 2), Peru would accept; but that, considering the mode in which Chili had brought on the war (I give the substance, not the exact words which were given through an interpreter), Peru could not consent to make the proposition. This I thought sufficiently specific. But Mr. Pettis then drew up two questions in writing, which he asked the minister to answer; the first of which was the same to which he had already given a direct affirmative answer, and to which he again answered in the affirmative. The second question was drawn in words which I did not consider very clear or definite, but which, as verbally explained by Mr. Pettis and myself through the interpreter (who is an attaché of the Peruvian legation in Bolivia, and had accompanied Mr. Pettis), this second question was precisely to the effect of question No. 2 herein inclosed (marked inclosure No. 4); and to this question, as thus interpreted and explained to him, he gave an affirmative answer.

I am compelled to say that in conversation with Mr. Pettis after this interview, he persisted in claiming that the Peruvian minister of foreign affairs had given an affirmative answer to the questions which he had proposed to him, and in the form proposed and written by him; but I am also compelled to say that the minister did not answer the last question at all, in the form proposed by Mr. Pettis, but only in the form I have given it in question No. 2, as explained to and understood by the minister.

Another meeting was fixed with the minister of foreign affairs for 1 p. m. of the 19th, but being compelled to go to Callao in the morning, I was not able to get to the palace until 1.20 p. m., when I met the minister and Mr. Pettis, and I do not know what had taken place between them before I arrived. But when Mr. Pettis, at the time of our leaving, assumed to declare to the minister that both he (Mr. Pettis) and myself were confident or had no doubt that Chili would consent to make the proposition or one of the two propositions in question, I felt constrained to say and did say to the minister, that while I hoped for such a result, yet, being without any special information upon the subject, and compelled to judge only from an outside view of the situation, equally known to him, I did not feel the same degree of confidence that my colleague had expressed, though I hoped for the same result. But that while it seemed to me that cool and sound judgment might dictate this course to Chili, yet, in the midst of a war of this kind, the passions as well as the judgments of men must be taken into the account, and that in this view, while my own judgment might satisfy me that it would be well for Chili to make such a proposition, I could not feel any high degree of confidence that the Government of Chili would take the same view.

Mr. Pettis left by the steamer of last evening for the south, declaring his intention to go to Santiago to see Mr. Osborn, and endeavor to persuade the Chilian authorities to make the proposition in question. I sincerely hope he may succeed.

If I could communicate with you by telegraph I should inquire of you whether, if Chili should make such a proposition as that contained in the second question above alluded to, the ministers of the United States would be allowed to meet at Mollendo and to decide upon the question referred to them. But, as little time could be gained by sending you a dispatch by mail to Panama, and thence by wire, and your answer in like manner, and as I have been furnished with no cipher, and the telegram might be made public, I have, for the present, concluded not to attempt this mode of communication.

But relying upon the known desire of the United States to secure peace between these republics, I shall, should Chili make such a proposition, venture to meet the United States ministers to Bolivia and Chili at Mollendo, for the purpose indicated, relying upon your approval of any fair course which may promise the desired result.

But as yet I fear there will be no occasion for me to assume the risk of exercising so questionable a discretion.

Please to accept, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 36.]

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Pettis.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 9, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Your dispatch received. At present I could not well leave, as I have an extradition case on hand, and other matters which require attention. I feel as anxious as you can to do anything in my power to bring about peace; but without some more definite information than I now have tending to make our efforts available in that direction, I could not properly venture to absent myself from the legation for so long a period as would be required. Please write me fully your views and what you conceive to be practicable, and by what means.

As Chili opened the war by seizing Bolivian territory and declared the war against Peru and took the offensive, it does not seem to me that the allies would be willing to take any steps in advance for peace, nor, without a trial of strength, to consent to any negotiations except upon the terms that Chili should first evacuate all Bolivian and Peruvian territory. But you may have more information than I have upon these matters, and if so, write me fully by next steamer.

I shall always be ready to do all I properly can in the interest of peace.

I am, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 36.]

All under the special condition, not to take any decision or compromise without the knowledge and approval of the Peruvian Government.

The authorities of Chili, civil and military, withdraw from and disoccupy all territory that they have taken possession of upon and since the 14th day of February, 1879, leaving all things in the state and condition they were in previous to the 14th of said month. Then if arbitration is agreed upon, the arbitrators to hear, determine, and decide all matters in dispute between Bolivia and Chili and Peru, and establish the dividing line between the two countries, Bolivia claiming the boundary line fixed by the Chilian constitution, taking into consideration the damages caused by the act of 14th February, and the subsequent aggression claimed by Bolivia, the expenses of the war.

That reference may be made to the President of the United States of America as sole arbitrator, or to the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, or the Ministers of the United States of America, in Peru, Bolivia, and Chili, a decision by a majority of the arbitrators sitting to be valid and binding upon the parties, to be approved in its execution and perpetuity by the President of the United States.

The above is a correct translation.

M. V. BALLIVIEN,
Interpreter.

QUESTIONS.

1. If Chili proposes arbitration upon the terms indicated by the authorities of Bolivia as presented yesterday, will Peru accept?

The minister says, yes.

2. If Chili proposes reference to the parties or authorities indicated in the first question and upon the basis implied in that question, excepting only that the time of evacuation shall be referred to the United States ministers for Peru, Bolivia and Chili, will Peru accept this?

The minister answers, yes.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts.

No. 37.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 22, 1879. (Received Aug. 15.)

SIR: I inclose you an editorial from the South Pacific Times of Callao, a paper which represents English opinion here with considerable fidelity; and you will pardon me for saying a few words in reference to the matter which evidently gave rise to this editorial. I went down to Callao on the morning of the 19th, and called at the United States consulate there, where I learned through the consul and Admiral Rodgers that a Col. Horace N. Fisher was in Callao and about to go up to Lima to see me; that he represented himself as the bearer of important dispatches to me, and either from what he had said, or from what had been inferred by others from the fact of his having brought dispatches, the impression had already gone abroad, and it was generally spoken of by the public, that he had come here as the bearer of important dispatches in reference to an offer of mediation by the United States; and I am under the necessity of saying that his own conversation with me, and with others as reported to me, justified the public in the belief that he had some special mission from our government the object of which was to put an end to the war and restore peace, and that he was going to Chili with that view. And I will say that before receiving and opening the dispatches which he did bring to me, I drew the like inference from his conversation with me, and, under that impression, I conversed with him more freely than I should but for that impression. But when I found that the only papers he had were your dispatch No. 16, and the circular of your department of the 29th May, in reference to leaves of absence, and that he brought no letter from you in reference to himself or his supposed mission, I drew the natural (it may have been incorrect) inference that he was not charged with any special mission, but that he was assuming a consequence beyond what the facts warranted; and, though I treated him civilly, I did not make him a confidant.

He professed a warm solicitude for peace, whichI have no reason to doubt he felt; if he did not, he is the only American, I may say the only citizen of a neutral nation, I have seen here who did not strongly feel that desire.

He went south on the same steamer with Mr. Pettis, and if they can either or both succeed in contributing to an early peace, they will deserve the warmest thanks of all who take an interest, as I do, in the prosperity of these republics.

If I have drawn a false inference in reference to Colonel Fisher, you will, I know, pardon me, under these circumstances, for the innocent mistake.

Please accept, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 37.]

[Extract from the South Pacific Times, Callao, Tuesday, July 22, 1879.]

Colonel Fisher was among the passengers who arrived here by the Lima on Saturday. This gentleman is a special messenger from Washington to this country and to Chili, and bearer of dispatches to both these governments, offering the mediation of the United States Government in the present unnatural quarrel in which they are engaged. We sincerely hope the mission of Colonel Fisher will not be unattended with success, for there can be no denying the sincerity of purpose which prompts the great republic to action; not that the same might not be said of European governments, whose intervention would not be less earnest nor less sincere, but the interference of the United States will perhaps be more acceptable; and the presumption may be more generally and, perhaps, more justly entertained, that it is better interested nations, or those nations whose subjects have millions invested in these countries, should not be arbitrators. For instance, let us, for a moment, look at the proposition just made in France; it is to the effect that the bondholders unite to defray the expense of the war for Chili, on the condition that they are protected by Chili in getting paid on their Peruvian bonds from the proceeds of the guano and nitrate, and that they be reimbursed from the same source the war expenses so to be advanced. This proposition would be acted upon had the English bondholders agreed to it. We allude to this point simply in illustration of the fact that there is less likely to be confidence where there is interest, or where disinterestedness cannot reasonably be expected to prevail. Under the circumstances, therefore, we think the United States is unquestionably the best nation to intervene, and has already acted for Peru, if not for Chili likewise, in reference to the political relations existing with Spain. Colonel Fisher presented his dispatches here on Saturday, and the same evening left for Chili with the same object. We have heard the opinion of one worthy of respect that an armistice is very likely to follow the presentation of the dispatches, so as to allow time for agreement as to the conditions of peace. We hope this may be so, for blood enough has been shed, and the wounds to national honor had better be healed now than later—the sooner the better.

No. 39.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 23, 1879. (Received August 15.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose copy of my letter of this date to Mr. Merriam, our consul at Iquique, together with an extract of the letter of the consul to me of July 10 (his No. 38), in reference to the right of the Chilian fleet to prevent the shipping of nitrates from Pisagua.

As to the circumstances going to show whether the blockade of Iquique had been raised, you will find them stated with substantial accuracy in my dispatch No. 34 (July 15), except that I inadvertently, in that dispatch, stated the date of the transaction as the 12th when it was in fact the 10th of the present month; and I ask that the correction be made in that dispatch.

I have, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 39.]

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Merriam.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 23, 1879.

SIR: Your two notes of the 10th instant (Nos. 38 and 39) received.

As to the blockade, you are undoubtedly right in your conclusion (stated in your No. 39) that, upon the facts stated by you, and as appears by all the accounts I have seen, the blockade has not been raised. The whole proceeding must be treated rather as an unsuccessful attempt to raise it.

As to the other matter mentioned in your No. 38, the question of the right of the Chilian fleets to prevent the loading of nitrates at Pisagua, I will say that I do not think those nitrates, considered with reference to their agricultural use and their destination to European ports, can be treated as contraband of war, properly so called; and if the nitrate-beds are owned by individuals and worked on their account only, I do not think the Chilian fleet could lawfully prevent such commerce by neutral vessels in any other way than by establishing an effectual blockade of the port.

But if the nitrate-beds are owned or worked or the nitrate shipped on the part of the Peruvian Government, so that the proceeds or part of them go into the Peruvian treasury, then I am inclined to think the Chilian fleet has, under the laws of war, a right to stop that commerce if they can, and to use any means for that purpose properly calculated to reach the end, such as preventing the loading of vessels or destroying any of the works or lighters used in loading, after having notified the neutral vessels to leave or cease to load. Nevertheless, should such a course be attempted by h e Chilian fleet towards the American vessels, it might be well for you to protest in due form against such proceeding, so as to save any rights which American ship-owners or American citizens engaged in that commerce may in the end be found to have. Such protests can do no harm, and it is better in such circumstances to err by claiming too much than too little.

I am, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

J. W. MERRIAM, Esq.,
United States Consul, Iquique.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 39.—Extract of letter from United States consul at Iquique of July 10, 1879.]

As the mail closes in a few minutes, I have only time to add that I have just been informed that Commander Simpson, of the Lord Cochrane, verbally notified the captain of the American brig Mary Greenwood, on the 1st instant, at Pisagua, where she is taking in a cargo of nitrate of soda for the United States, that she will not be allowed to continue loading after the 15th instant, and that if he finds her in port after that date he will take her to a Chilian port and confiscate her cargo.

It is said that the Chilian commander would not give any written order, and that he inquired particularly as to whether the Peruvian Government was the owner of the nitrate, and that the captain would only reply that he was chartered by Grace Bros., of Callao, and that he was ignorant of the ownership of the cargo.

I am waiting for an official statement of the facts from the agent of the Peruvian Nitrate Company, before taking action in the matter, and am also endeavoring to find out whether nitrate of soda can be considered contraband of war.

I shall keep you informed on the subject.

No. 174.

Mr. Tracy to Mr. Evarts

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF PERU,
New York, July 24, 1879. (Received July 25.)

SIR: I take the liberty to call your excellency's attention to a matter which is of vital importance to the interests of Peru, and which likewise affects, in no small degree, those of the commerce of this country. I refer to the interruption of free transit across the Isthmus of Panama of materials which are recognized by the Government of the United States as being articles of lawful commerce.

I do not doubt that the consular officers of this republic on the isthmus, and the representatives of the Panama Railroad Company, as also perhaps more than one of the commercial houses of this country whose interests are jeopardized by the decision of the Government of the State of Panama of the 26th of June last, have laid before your department such protests as they have considered proper and necessary. Notwithstanding that, I must not remain silent when a question is at stake whose decision is now of transcendental importance to Peru.

The Government of Panama having consulted the federal government of the United States of Colombia with regard to the transportation of arms and other elements of war via the railway across the isthmus, the executive branch of the Government of Colombia, under date of the 2d of June last, rendered, through the secretary of the interior and of foreign affairs, the decision which I inclose to your excellency. It is taken from the Panama Star, and is marked A.

This decision, which is worthy of the government of a nation that respects its treaty stipulations and the principles of international law, appears to have been misinterpreted by the government of the States to which it was addressed, that it might serve as a guide for that government's actions, as your excellency will see by the decision published on the 26th of June last by the said government, a copy of which I inclose, which is also taken from the Panama Star, and marked B.

The decree of the federal government states that the Panama Railway has been declared to be an absolutely free highway for the commerce of the world, with exoneration from the duty of inquiring into the origin, nature, and destination of the goods passing over it; and it only prohibits citizens of Colombia from carrying on a direct trade in articles of war with the belligerents, whereas the decision of the State government absolutely prohibits native citizens and foreigners from shipping munitions of war to the belligerent nations, and refuses to grant them the right of forwarding such articles to neutral ports without previously furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Government of the State of Panama.

A perusal of these two decisions is sufficient to show how contrary to the intentions of the Federal Government of Colombia has been the action of the President of the State of Panama, who being actuated, as is to be hoped, by the most sincere desire to observe a strict neutrality, has nevertheless succeeded in dealing a blow to the allied republics whose consequences it is difficult to foresee. To obstruct the passage across the isthmus is to deprive us of the only means that we now have to procure the articles which we most need, while our enemies have Cape Horn and the Straits of Magellan for all that they require; and it is an act on the part of the Government of the State of Panama in favor of the republic of Chili, which can only be considered as a violation of all neutrality.

The minister of Peru who is accredited at Bogota will present to the Government of the Colombian Union the energetic protest which is deserved by a decision of the character of the one to which I refer, and I do not doubt that that enlightened government will hasten to issue such orders as it may deem suitable to remedy, so far as possible, the injuries that have been occasioned by the action of the Government of the State of Panama.

For my own part I feel that I should be wanting in the performance of my duty, and that I should render myself liable to the well-deserved censure of the government that has honored me by appointing me to the office which I now hold, if I failed to call your excellency's attention to this matter, protesting, as I hereby do protest, in the name of the republic of Peru, against this interruption of free transit across the Isthmus of Panama; not doubting that the Government of the United States will find means to protect its numerous citizens who, dealing in goods which are recognized as articles of lawful commerce, are now embarrassed and threatened with grave injury on account of the causes to which I have adverted; and by the mere act of protecting the interests of your citizens, your excellency will, at the same time, render a service to the allied republics, without violating the neutrality which it is proper for you to observe towards the belligerents. Peru will appreciate this as a fresh evidence of the friendship and good will which have so often been manifested towards her by this government.

The undersigned chargé d'affaires has the honor, &c.

JOSÉ CARLOS TRACY.

Resolution of the national government.

UNITED STATES OF COLOMBIA—SOVEREIGN STATE OF PANAMA—EXECUTIVE POWER—OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE IN THE DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT—SUB-DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

PANAMA, June 20, 1879.

SIR: In a telegram dated the 10th instant, at Bogota, the minister of foreign affairs transcribes the subjoined resolutions, dictated on the 2d of the same month by the executive power of the union:

"In view of the appeal made by the government of the state of Panama as to the transit of arms and other war material over the Colombian Interoceanic Railway, with presumed and probable destination to the republics of the Pacific, whose friendly relations have unfortunately been broken, it is considered—

"1st. The railway between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans has been declared by the Colombian Government to be an absolutely free highway for universal commerce, which freedom implies the exoneration from duty of inquiring into the origin, class, or destination of goods passing over it.

"2d. There being no custom houses at the ports of Colon and Panama, the surveillance of goods passing over the transit as proposed is indispensable, but would be manifestly inconvenient and defective.

"3d. On this supposition, it would be necessary to allow the transit of war materials as articles of commerce, provided they were manifestly under destination to neutral ports of any of the republics on the coast of the Pacific which might originate a traffic which would for the moment favor either of the belligerents.

"4th. The republics of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia being at war, the policy of Colombia, as a neutral power, should be made known to the agents of the government, and consequently it is resolved—

"(a) The Panama Railroad shall serve for the transit of universal commerce, without any limitation whatever as to the origin, class, or destination of the goods.

"(b) The transit of troops of any of the belligerents shall not be permitted through the territory of the union, nor the storage within its ports of booty or reprisals, whose capture shall not have been perfected before their arrival in its waters; nor the landing of prisoners, except to restore them to liberty.

"(c) It is not lawful for citizens of Colombia to trade with the belligerents in arms, munitions of war, ships, or other elements immediately applicable to the uses or purposes of war.

"(d) The shipment of salt, water, provisions, and all kinds of merchandise of lawful commerce destined to the countries at war, shall be allowed at Colombian ports, provided they are not forwarded to blockaded ports or intended to supply the war ships of any of the belligerents.

"(e) It is absolutely forbidden to aid the belligerents with troops, or allow their ships to be stationed at Colombian gulfs, bays, or inlets, for the purpose of watching the enemy's ships or of sending boats to capture them.

"(f) In cases of doubt the agents of the government shall be guided by the stipulations of existing treaties celebrated by the republic; and in the absence of these, by the rules of international law."

I have the honor of transcribing the foregoing for your knowledge and guidance.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOSÉ MARIA ALEMAN.

Resolution of the state government.

RESOLUTION.

OFFICE OF THE EXECUTIVE POWER,
Panama, June 26, 1879.

In view of the communication addressed, June 23, by the consul of Chili in this port, and in view of the resolutions dictated, on the 2nd instant, by the federal executive power, and communicated to the government of the state of Panama, in a note from the secretary of the interior and foreign relations dated the 5th instant, No. 65, section 1, and containing prescriptions relative to the neutrality which this republic is bound to observe, in accordance with public treaties and international law, in the war which has broken out between the republic of Chili and those of Peru and Bolivia, and considering:

1st. The republic of the United States of Colombia, friendly to the belligerent nations, must maintain strict neutrality in the struggle between them, and which American hearts deprecate;

2d. That neutrality consists in favoring neither belligerent to the prejudice of the other, thus preserving cordial relations with both of them;

3d. That the rules relative to the internal strife in the nations bordering upon Colombia, and which are comprised in federal law No. 22, of 1871, relating to frontier regulations, are equally applicable in cases of international war;

4th. That the executive power of the union has decided it to be unlawfu lfor the citizens of Colombia to trade directly with the belligerents in arms, munitions of war, ships, and other elements immediately applicable to the purposes of war, which prohibition naturally extends to foreigners domiciled in the country, and to all mercantile operations in such elements, and with such destination within the territory of the republic;

5th. That the executive power of the union has expressly declared that it is lawful only to ship salt, water, provisions, and all kinds of merchandise of lawful commerce, destined to the countries at war, provided they be not forwarded to blockaded ports, to supply the war vessels of either of the belligerents;

It is resolved—

1st. It is absolutely forbidden to ship at this port, under destination to ports of either belligerent on the coast of the Pacific, canons, arms, munitions, and other articles considered as contraband of war.

2d. The shipment of articles mentioned in the preceding clause, with destination to the ports of the non-belligerent countries, shall be allowed, provided the shippers guarantee in a satisfactory form that such articles shall be landed at the port or ports to which they are destined according to the respective declarations.

3d. Let the foregoing be communicated by the executive power of the Union to the superintendent of the Panama Railroad Company, and to the inspector of this port, and let it be published.

JERARDO ORTEGA.

The secretary of the government.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Evarts.

No. 41.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 30, 1879. (Received August 22.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose to you, 1st, the letter of Mr. Merriam, our consul at Iquique, of the 17th instant; 2d, extract from his letter of the 21st instant; and, 3d, a copy of my answer to those letters.

I also inclose copies of the correspondence between the consul, as dean of the consular corps, and the Chilian admiral, in reference to the bombardment of Iquique, first in Spanish and second by translation.

This correspondence, as well as that between the consul and myself, will explain itself.

I am, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 41.]

Mr. Merriam to Mr. Christiancy.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Iquique, July 17, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the Chilian fleet bombarded this town last night between the hours of half-past seven and half-past nine, having fired in all forty shots.

This act of barbarism was committed without previous notice upon a town containing thousands of defenseless inhabitants, including women and children, of whom some of the latter fell victims to the murderous assault. The exact number of casualties is not known at the hour of writing, but it is thought to be small. Two of the national guards were killed outright. A shot struck the custom-house, passing through one of the windows of a room where a few minutes before the Chilian officers, prisoners of war, were confined. It then burst, passed up through the ceiling into the room above, where a group of Peruvian officers were seated, slightly wounding three of them, and finally passed through the southern side of the custom-house. Other buildings in different parts of the town were also seriously damaged, and one, at least, completely destroyed. Among those damaged may be mentioned the dwelling-house attached to the gas-works, and the buildings and large tank of the Arica Water Company, the property of English citizens.

The mutilated remains of two small children have been found in the outskirts of the town.

As dean of the consular corps, I have called the body together to meet at twelve o'clock to-day, to take action in the premises, to protest against the act of barbarism, and if possible secure immunity against its repetition.

As the mail is about to close, I have not time to send a dispatch to the Department, and would be greatly obliged to you if you would embody in one of your dispatches the fact of the bombardment. If we had had a foreign man-of-war in port, I do not think that the scandalous event would have happened.

J. W. MERRIAM.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 41.—Extract of letter from J. W. Merriam, United States consul at Iquique, July 21, 1879.]

To the last note of the consular corps of the 19th instant, no answer has as yet been received. The absence of the signature of the French vice-consul on the protest and on the subsequent note is explained by the temporary absence from town of that gentleman.

With reference to the assertion of Admiral Williams that torpedoes were employed against one of the vessels of his command on the night of the 8th instant, and also against the Blanco Encalada, on the night of the 16th instant, I will state that General Buendia has most solemnly assured me that on neither of these occasions, nor on any other, have torpedoes been employed against the Chilian vessels in Iquique. We, as members of the consular corps, did not feel it incumbent upon us to deny the truth of the statement of the Chilian admiral on this point, for no assertion of ours would be taken as evidence in a matter in which we cannot be considered competent witnesses; you will also observe that, in the only allusion which we have made to the charge referred to, we have made use of a saving clause, which shows that we do not concede the fact of the employment of this weapon.

On the points of law which we have tried to make, I should be very glad of your opinion, and particularly as to whether the Chilian commander is not bound, by principles of international law and by the usage of civilized nations, to give sufficient notice of his intention to bombard, to allow neutrals and other non-combatants to leave the town, no matter what provocation he may think he has for resorting to this extreme measure.

With reference to Admiral Williams's statement that, from humane motives, he directed that the shots should be fired at a great elevation, it is difficult to understand why, if he was actuated by such humane sentiments, he should have fired at all, or, at least why he should have expended more than forty shots, a large number of 250 and 300 pounds, upon a defenseless town, and at night, and still at such a low elevation as to cause destruction of property and loss of life in various parts of the town.

Moreover, the most convincing proof of all that his intention was to destroy the town is to be found in the fact that many of the missiles were filled with explosive substances, which only failed to set fire to the town from the fact that the wooden walls of the houses, from their thinness, did not afford sufficient resistance to cause their explosion. Several of these shells were picked up in a perfect state and carried to General Buendia, who caused them to be carefully emptied, and found them to contain, among other things, resin and sulphur.

I cannot doubt that this act of vandalism will be condemned by the civilized world, and although I fear that an offer of mediation would not be accepted by Chili, still I cannot help expressing an earnest wish that the friendly intervention of the United States might be accepted and thus put an end to this war of aggression and conquest, for which Chili alone should be held responsible.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 41.]

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Merriam.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, July 30, 1879.

SIR: Your two letters of July 17 and 21 (Nos. 40 and 41) received. I shall write to the Department to-day giving the information contained in those letters, with extracts from them.

I will only say here that you did well in placing your protest upon the distinct ground of the assurances given by the admiral to the consular corps on the 6th of April, which, being public and known to the people of the town, they (as well as the consular corps) had a right to rely upon those assurances. If no such assurances had been given, the case would have been very different. This town being occupied by, if not the headquarters of, the military forces of Peru and Bolivia, the Chilian fleet undoubtedly had the right to attack and even to destroy the town itself, according to the laws of war. And such occupancy by the military forces of the allies might itself be looked upon as notice to the inhabitants that if they continued to reside in it, they must do so subject to all the risks of war; and that among these risks is that of a bombardment, and though, even without the assurances of the 6th of April, humanity might dictate that a notice should be given before opening fire, so that the peaceable inhabitants might fly from the danger, yet this would not have been imperative according to the laws of war. But the attacking party must be allowed a liberal discretion in judging of the exigencies which justify the omission of such notice.

The case is quite different from what it would have been if the town had not been held or controlled by the military forces of the allies, and had been occupied by peaceable inhabitants only.

And in the present case what I have said of the inhabitants applies equally to the people of other (and neutral) nations there residing and to their property. By continuing their residence in such a place under such circumstances, they all equally assume all the risks incident to the situation, and the attacking party are not bound to make (and practically could very seldom make) any discrimination.

It is, therefore, the violation by the admiral of the assurances he had given on the 6th of April, which alone can be held to have constituted the bombardment without notice an act of vandalism, and a violation of the laws of honorable warfare. And the merits of the question must depend upon the validity or sufficiency of the excuse which he alleges, the attempt to use torpedoes against his vessels. Opinions might differ as to the validity of this excuse, if true. For myself I should not consider it a valid excuse for the neglect to give any notice; but if the excuse which he alleges had no existence in fact, then I think all would agree that the admiral had violated the rules of honorable warfare, unless he was himself deceived as to the facts; and in this view I regret that you did not in your note to him of July 19 either deny, upon information and belief, the use of torpedoes as alleged by him, or protest that you were ignorant of the facts so that you could not be held to have admitted it, as I fear will now be held to be the effect of the correspondence when taken together. But this effect will be removed if hereafter it should be made clearly to appear that the excuse alleged did not exist in fact.

United States Consul, Iquique.

The Consular Officers at Iquique to Commander Rebolledo.

[From the South Pacific Times, Callao, Tuesday, July 29, 1879.]

IQUIQUE, July 17, 1879.

SIR: We have not forgotten the distinct declarations that your honor was pleased to make on the 6th of April to the delegates of the consular corps, and, in view of the confidence which those declarations merited from us, we could never have imagined that events would happen in direct contradiction to the guarantees spontaneously offered by your honor.

Contrary to all our expectations, last night, for the space of two hours, for motives that we fail to understand, and without prior warning as required by international law, the vessels under your honor's command threw a considerable number of cannon-shots into this town with disastrous effects, various defenseless people, old men, women, and children, and several neutral persons having been killed, and some private property belonging to foreigners, of whom, as your honor must be aware, the majority of the inhabitants of this town is composed, destroyed.

The protection of the lives and interests of our respective countrymen being encharged to us, in fulfillment of the duties of our trust, at a special meeting we have unanimously resolved to protest, as in due form we hereby do protest, against the bombardment of last night as unjustifiable and contrary to the most sacred and current practices of international law, and throw the responsibility of the consequences to which this act may lead upon your honor.

We remain, &c.,

Consul of the United States of America, and senior member of the Consular Corps.

To the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF of the Chilian fleet in this harbor.

Commander Rebolledo to the Consular Officers at Iquique.

ON BOARD OF THE IRON-CLAD BLANCO ENCALADA,
Iquique, July 17, 1879.

Mr. CONSUL: I have had the honor of receiving the protest-note of the consular corps resident in this port, and shall lay same before my government by the first opportunity.

In the mean time I consider it right to assure your honor that I do not deny the fact of my having offered the consular corps that, in the event of the circumstances of war obliging me to bombard this place, I would, with due anticipation, notify the consular corps of same, for the personal safety and interests of their countrymen. And I possess the satisfaction, Mr. Consul, of having acted strictly in accordance with my promise, in spite of the hostile acts of the military forces on shore, practiced against the corvette Esmeralda, during the first naval engagement, and the attempted destruction of one of the ships of the fleet under my command, by means of a torpedo on the night of the 8th instant.

The repetition, however, last night of the latter act against my flag-ship, authorized me, in fact, to destroy the town; but, even then, and solely in obedience to sentiments of humanity, I gave orders that the shots should be fired high, as your honor must have observed.

I deplore the loss of lives of defenseless persons which your honor assures me has occurred; but your honor cannot be ignorant of the fact that the successful exit of the torpedo scheme would have destroyed the lives of numberless persons also defenseless against this treacherous arm of warfare.

Up to the present, the war in which we are engaged has been, for our part, carried on with entire good faith; your honor can assure your countrymen of this, and add that it will be continued in the same way, so long as the enemy do not employ arms of the above kind.

Finally, I must beg to remind your honor that this town, to-day the headquarters of the army, with its fortifications and defenses, has become a military stronghold, and its inhabitants are therefore subject to all the fortunes of war, for which reason I am sincerely sorry that neutral citizens, and very particularly your honor and the other members of the consular corps, over which you so worthily preside, still remain in the town.

With sentiments, &c.,

J. WILLIAMS REBOLLEDO.

To the CONSUL OF THE UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA, and senior member of the Foreign Consular Corps in Iquique.

The Consular Officers at Iquique to Commander Rebolledo.

IQUIQUE, July 19, 1879.

SIR: We have read with careful attention the note that your honor has been pleased to address to the senior member of the consular corps in this port, and after meditating upon all the reasons adduced in justification of the bombardment of the night of the 16th instant, and in support of the right to repeat same in future, whenever the hostilities be renewed which your honor asserts have been put into practice against the fleet under your command, we beg to state that on this subject we are of another opinion.

We do not believe that international law authorizes and makes legitimate the destruction of private and neutral property, as a mere measure of reprisal, but only in the distinct and extreme case where the necessity of bringing the war to a speedy termination or of executing some highly important operation make its destruction inevitable. Neither do we think that this open town can be properly termed a fortified place; but however this may be, and leaving the responsibility of future events to whoever incurs same, we beg to inform you that at the same time that your honor makes use of the power in your hands, after the manner and way in which you may think fit, your honor will be pleased to remember that the same civilized nations which classify a bombardment, when legitimate, as a measure of extreme rigor, stigmatize it as a crime if it is effected without previous warning, however legitimate it may otherwise be.

Trusting in the promise which your honor made us on the 6th of April, indirectly confirmed by the note to which we have the pleasure of replying, we request your honor to be good enough to inform us whether we can assure our respective countrymen that, in the unfortunate event of their lives and properties running the risk of bombardment, this may not happen unawares, but be advised beforehand, according to the practice of civilized nations.

In conclusion, and thanking your honor exceedingly for the interest shown for our personal safety, we hasten to remove the feeling of surprise that our actual presence in this port causes your honor, assuring you that it is explained by the guarantees which your honor gave us; and that the duties of our trusts oblige us to remain where the interests of our countrymen are threatened.

We are, &c.,

Consul of the United States of America, and senior member of the Consular Corps.

SIR: The only item of news since my last in reference to the "progress of the war," is this:

The Huascar (the Peruvian turreted iron-clad), after the affair at Iquique, mentioned in my dispatch of the 15th, No. 34, was with the Union, a wooden corvette, dispatched from Arica to the south. They passed around the Chilian fleet blockading Iquique, and went south along the coast of Chili destroying the Chilian launches at Caldera, Carrizal, Huasco, and Pan de Azucar, and on the 25th instant returned to Arica, bringing in as prizes three sailing vessels laden with coal and copper, and also the large steamer Rimac (formerly running from Valparaiso to Callao, but now used as a Chilian transport), with a whole regiment of Chilian cavalry, fully armed and equipped, and five hundred horses. The privates of this regiment remain prisoners at Arica. The officers were brought here as prisoners last evening. In the mean time the Chilian iron-clads Cochrane and Blanco Encalada seem to be of no use except in the blockade of Iquique.

Although abstaining from any direct indorsement of, or co-operation in, this apparently laudable effort of Colombia in the interest of peace and reconcilation, this government, which feels lively solicitude for the prosperity and tranquillity of the South American States, cannot but watch Dr. Arosemena's mission with especial attention. In personal intercourse with the doctor, when he visits Lima, you will probably find a fitting occasion to express to him the warm interest taken by the United States in this tentative step, and the friendly solicitude of this government as to the result.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, August 12, 1879. (Received September 4.)

SIR: I inclose a translation of an article which appears in the Comercio (a leading paper published in Lima) of the 7th instant. I have little comment to make upon it, except to say that, after making due allowance for the habitual tendency of the newspaper press to draw false inferences and even to misrepresent facts, I am not without some apprehension from what I saw of Mr. Pettis here and what I heard from his conversation with others, and his anxious inquiries of my clerk (who speaks Spanish) what the newspapers said of him, that his conversation and conduct in Arica and Pisagua may have justified the honest belief on the part of newspaper men and the public in general that he was, in fact, charged with a special and very important mission to the Governments of Peru, Bolivia, and Chili, and authorized to represent the Government of the United States in all these countries. I do not mean to say that I believe he so expressly stated, but that, from his general conversation, hints, professions, and manner, he may have left many of his hearers under an honest impression of this kind. Perhaps all this may do no harm, though it may tend less to sustain the dignity of our country abroad than to gratify personal vanity.

But though I have not made and do not propose to make any intimation to the government here upon this matter, they are not likely to be misled, as Mr. Pettis made no pretensions to them of any such authority, nor do I suppose he has done so to the cabinet of Bolivia or that of Chili.

Of course I do not interfere with the newspaper press here, nor make to them any suggestions upon this or any other subject. But on being inquired of the other day by a representative of the Lima paper known as the Patria, whether Mr. Pettis had any such mission from our government, as stated by the Pisagua paper, I felt bound to say that I was entirely ignorant of his having such a mission; that I knew he was desirous of bringing about a peace between the three republics, and supposed he had gone south with a hope of contributing something to that end; and that I hoped he would be successful. I left the newspaper man to draw his own inferences; and the next day there appeared in his paper an article in which, after quoting the article from the Comercio, with the extract from the Pisagua paper (which I send you), the writer makes the remarks of which I send you the inclosed translation. (Inclosure No. 2.)

For myself, I think it important that no representative of our government should do anything to raise, even in the popular mind here, hopes or expectations not to be realized, nor attempt to commit our government to any course of action, without instructions from the State Department; unless, indeed, it be upon some point upon which he has a right, under the circumstances, to take for granted that our government would approve the action taken, and for this the case must be very clear. In this view I wish to qualify the statement made in my dispatch No. 36 (near the close), in which I say that "should Chili make such a proposition" (I should) "venture to meet the United States ministers to Bolivia and Chili at Mollendo for the purpose indicated," &c. I made no such promise to Mr. Pettis, nor was the matter discussed between us, and it occurs to me, on reflection, that if any action of the United States ministers should be in any way dependent upon the United States Government or any of its departments becoming arbitrator between any of these republics, the ministers of the United States have no right to take it for granted, without previous instructions, that our government would accept the position of arbitrator.

If the efforts of neutral nations to restore peace between republics should prove to be a mere farce, I object to making our government play the part of chief harlequin in such a farce.

I have the honor, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure No. 1.—Translated from El Comercio, August 7, 1879.]

THE UNITED STATES AND THE WAR.

Through a private letter from Arica of the 2d of August, we receive the following information:

On the 23d the North American minister who comes on a special mission to the three republics arrived here, and as that same day General Daza had gone to Pisagua, the minister could only have an interview with General Prado, with whom he remained in conference during two hours, without it being possible for us to arrive at the result of the interview.

The minister continued his voyage to Pisagua where he met General Daza, as you will see from the inclosed cutting from a newspaper, and lastly he left for Chili, where he will arrive on the 28th or 29th.

The Pisagua paper cutting referred to is dated the 24th of July, and reads as follows:

"The illustrious General Daza received a telegram informing him that the minister from the United States of America to the Governments of Bolivia, Peru, and Chili, Mr. Newton Pettis, had arrived at Arica just as the Pilcomayo was leaving the port, and that he had business of high importance for which he had to consult with the chief of Bolivian Republic, and the latter resolved to await the steamer of the next day to please the minister. And, as was expected, at eight o'clock this morning he arrived in this bay, where he was received by the body of aids-de-camp of General Daza.

A private interview took place and as we believe it would be an obstruction to the interests of the belligerents, we cannot publish the result of it, more so as we have not been able to learn it in its details, but we are led to believe that very complicated interests are at stake, that General Daza has directed them towards the welfare of his country and that of the republic to which he is united by treaties."

[Inclosure No. 2.—Translation from La Patria, August 8, 1879.]

* * * Without pretending to assert, we believe that there is more illusion than reality in all that is asserted in reference to the said interview.

First. It is inconceivable that the Government of the United States would especially commission its consul-general and minister resident in La Paz for negotiations that it could intrust to its Plenipotentiaries Christiancy and Osborn, residing now in Lima and Santiago, they being in constant communication with their government, and held in the highest esteem.

Mr. Pettis, residing in Bolivia, was doubtless not the best qualified to treat with Generals Prado and Daza, and we doubt that it would occur to the government at Washington to seek in a consul-general what would be easily obtained of its envoys extraordinary.

Besides, we have motives for believing that Mr. Pettis has no official mission, and, what is more, the United States legation at Lima has no knowledge of the mission that El Comercio believes that gentleman to be fulfilling in his interviews with the generals of the allied army.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch No. 37, of the 22d ultimo, upon the subject of the recent visit to you of Col. H. N. Fisher, who was the bearer of certain dispatches from this Department to you.

The discretion displayed by you in your conversation with Colonel Fisher in regard to the existing difficulties between Peru and Chili is commended. Colonel Fisher, though holding an official position under the Chilian Government, is an American citizen, and is deeply interested in the general desire to bring about a peace. He has no official connection with this government, but having recently visited Washington was informed of the desire of the United States Government to lend its good offices towards the accomplishment of that object when it should be probable that such a step would be welcome to both belligerents.

It is probable that Colonel Fisher takes advices from the new Chilian minister here to his government, but upon this point the Department has no positive information.

SIR: I take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of the communication dated the 19th instant, from the Hon. F. W. I thank you for this information, and, at the same time, I am glad to be able to inform you, for such purposes as may be suitable, that I yesterday received a communication from the consul-general of Peru at Panama, bearing date of the 12th instant, in which he states that the Government of the Colombian Union has disapproved the decision of the President of Panama prohibiting the shipment of arms.

The view taken by you in regard to the neglect of the admiral of the Chilian fleet to notify the authorities of Iquique of his intention to bombard the place, in order that non-combatants might retire from danger if they so desire, appears to be fraught with sound reasoning, and is believed to be in accordance with public law.

No. 47.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, August 26, 1879. (Received September 16.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 36, I have the honor to state that I have not yet heard anything direct from Judge Pettis as to the result of his mission to Santiago "in the interest of peace," but I received on Saturday last (23d) a confidential letter from Mr. Osborn, our minister to Chili, which satisfies me that there is no present prospect of Chili being willing to make either of the propositions alluded to in my dispatch above cited, nor any proposition based upon the status quo ante bellum, and, in fact, that no Chilian ministry would, at present, dare to make such a proposition; not that they would object to the United States as arbitrator, if a practicable basis could be found upon which any arbitration could be proposed. But I presume Mr. Osborn has himself written you fully upon this subject, and I need not say more.

In my opinion neither party will be willing to arbitrate at all until one or the other shall have suffered some serious reverse. But when and how either is to be able to reach the other so as to try the arbitrament of arms it is not easy to foresee.

In the mean time it is understood here that the government of Ecuador has been tendering its good offices to bring about an accommodation, but without result. And the United States of Colombia some time since accredited Dr. Arosemena (an eminent and accomplished gentleman, standing high in the estimation of all the belligerents) to the three republics of Peru, Bolivia, and Chili, and it is publicly understood here that the special object of his mission is to offer the good offices of his government for the same purpose. He spent some weeks here, and leaves to-morrow for Santiago and La Paz. But under present circumstances, and until the belligerents have tried their strength, I am satisfied his mission will be without result.

A significant circumstances, however, occurred while he was here, tending strongly to show that Peru and Bolivia, at least, look upon the questions involved in the present war as exclusively American questions concerning only American republics.

A breakfast was given to Dr. Arosemena by members of the Peruvian Government and leading senators and representatives, in which the minister of Bolivia also took an active part. The invitations to foreign ministers were confined to the representatives of American republics. I attended the banquet, and it was impossible to shut my eyes to the fact that our government was on all hands accorded the pre-eminence, and received the highest respect and the warmest expression of esteem and admiration, many of the speakers declaring that the United States of America had presented the model which they sought to follow; and though, as I was compelled to explain, my position imposed upon me the obligation of reserve and of strict neutrality, and I could not venture to decide or even to discuss the question who was in the right or who was in the wrong in the present unhappy conflict, I could assure them that the people and the Government of the United States highly appreciated and keenly sympathized with the efforts which the South American republics had made and were making to follow our example; that we all felt in some degree responsible, and that our credit was in some manner pledged before the world for the success and prosperity or all these republics; yet I would venture to express the hope that while they sought in the main to follow our example, still there was one thing forced upon us by circumstances beyond our control, in which I hoped they would not feel bound to follow our example, and that was the example and calamity of a great civil war; that the conflict now waging here had many of the revolting features of a civil war; it was waged between people of the same national descent, the same language, the same religion, and many of whom were connected by blood and by marriage and the dearest of family ties; that I hoped the time would soon come when the only contest between them should be, which should best cultivate the arts of peace; which should do most for the development of its internal resources and to promote the confraternity of all.

These sentiments were well received, and I believe there is an anxious desire for peace, but each side fears to make the first advance, lest it should be lowering its dignity; and there is much plausibility in this position on the part of Peru and Bolivia, especially the former, as Chili began the war by the seizure of Bolivian territory, and declared the war against Peru while Peru was making an effort to preserve peace.

I do not go into the merits of the question at all. Bolivia may have been in the wrong in the preliminary dispute which led to the war, and Chili may have been right or wrong in declaring the war against Peru, because of the secret treaty of alliance. These are questions only to be decided by the sword or by arbitration.

But on full reflection, I have thought it best to put you in possession of the real feelings of these governments in respect to the question of peace and the best mode of bringing it about, and to enable you to decide whether it is true policy to tender the good offices of the United States to that end, and whether, should a contingency arise in which the parties should be willing to make our government an arbitrator, it would be willing to assume that most unwelcome and responsible position.

I should have written you this fully two weeks since, but my health, which is still feeble, did not permit.

I have, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

P. S.—Since writing the above, I have received from Mr. Pettis a private pencil note, dated Mollendo, August 23, detailing his attempts at negotiation at Santiago, but as he says that he writes fully to the Department on the same day, I need not go into the particulars. I fear his intense desire to effect a peace makes him take too sanguine a view of the prospect. I. P. C.

Lima, Peru, September 1, 1879. (Received September 25.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose to you the copy of a confidential letter from me to Mr. Osborn, our minister to Chili, dated August 29; also a copy of a confidential letter from me to Mr. Pettis, our minister to Bolivia, of same date.

Both these letters are in answer to confidential letters of the respective ministers to me, which, because they are marked confidential, I do not send copies of, though I presume every fact stated in them will be stated in their respective dispatches to you. I have only marked the inclosed letters confidential because their letters to me were so marked.

Probably this letter, with its inclosures, should be treated as confidential, if not entirely unofficial. I therefore do not number it, as of the regular series of dispatches. But it is for you to decide.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Osborn.

Confidential.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, August 29, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Your confidential letter of the 11th instant received.

I am not at all disappointed in the result of the self-constituted mission of our friend Judge Pettis to Santiago. I looked upon the whole movement of his as one of very doubtful propriety which I would not have taken the responsibility to make. But he was so confident and enthusiastic that I felt sure no advice of mine would have been taken against making the experiment; and I was myself so anxious to see a restoration of peace between these republics that I wished, and had some vague hope, that he might succeed, with your aid, in getting the Chilian Government to make some proposition which might lead to peace. But I confess I could not see how it was to be brought about, if it depended upon any action of our government, until it had authorized him or you or some one else to pledge it to such action.

My own deliberate opinion is, and I some time since so wrote the Department, that neither party to this war will be willing to make any practicable proposition for arbitration until one or the other shall have suffered some serious calamity, or until the resources of each shall be exhausted in the effort to bring their armies in contact with each other.

I expect, in the course of a week or two, an answer from the Department to some of my dispatches, which answer will probably give us some definite instructions as to the position our government may be willing to take in this matter.

In the mean time, as it seems to me, our whole duty will be discharged by taking advantage of any opportunity which offers to encourage a disposition for an accommodation of some kind.

If anything occurs here showing any change in the government, as to a disposition for peace, I will let you know as promptly as I can. And I hope you will keep me posted as to any change in the disposition of the Chilian Government.

I am, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

P. S.—I shall send a copy of this letter to the Secretary of State, but not a copy of yours to which it is a reply.

I see by some articles in the Chilian papers that the public there seem to understand that Mr. Pettis rather offensively intimated intervention of the United States. I think this must be untrue, because, however the zeal of Mr. Pettis might lead him to express himself in an incautious or imperfect manner, I cannot doubt that your cool judgment must, in such a case, have compelled you to disavow any such intention on the part of our government, unless you had instructions from the State Department which would authorize such an intimation, of which I am utterly ignorant.—I. P. C.

Mr. Christiancy to Mr. Pettis.

Confidential.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, August 20, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Your two confidential pencil notes, of the 23d and 26th instant, received.

Though I ardently wished you success in your endeavors at Santiago to bring about peace, I cannot say that I am disappointed at the result. The fact is as, I stated to you when here, that the effort for peace was made at the wrong end of the line. Peru was drawn into this war against her will to comply with her treaty with Bolivia; and Chili declared the war, after seizing from Bolivia the territory which by treaty belonged to the latter. Now whether Chili was, upon the whole, right or wrong, it could hardly be expected that Peru, at least, would make the first advance for peace, as she had attempted the same thing before the war and failed. It seemed, therefore, to me that the first step was to learn whether Chili would consent to make a proposition, and, if she would not, all efforts at peace must be useless until the parties had tried their strength in actual conflict, and one or the other party had suffered some serious reverse, or had so utterly exhausted her resources as not to be able to keep an army in the field. But I was so very desirous to see peace restored between these republics that I felt a most ardent desire that you should succeed in your undertaking, though, as I told you, I did not share your confidence in the result.

I have, more than four weeks ago, written fully to the Secretary of State all the considerations which occurred to me bearing upon the policy of our government offering its good offices for adjustment, and expect an answer, in the course of two weeks, which will show the wishes of our government and the position she is willing to take. I am glad you have also written, and as we have not, without orders from the State Department, any right to pledge the action of our government in advance, all we can do in the mean time is to make the most of any circumstances which may occur to foster any disposition for an accommodation. Please write me often and keep me posted as to facts.

Your friend,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

SEPTEMBER 1.

P. S.—I must take it for granted that what I see in some of the Chilian papers about your having intimated an intention of our government to intervene must be incorrect; because, as I intimated to you here (when I spoke trying to telegraph by way of Panama to the State Department), and as you also must have realized, no minister of the United States can have the right to bind his government to any course of action in any important matter without previous instructions to that effect. And I must take it for granted that in a matter of this kind, involving the interests of nations, you would naturally feel the necessity of great caution, delicacy, and circumspection; and that you have, therefore, done nothing to justify the representations or misrepresentations of the Chili press.

No. 189.

No. 49.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Lima, Peru, September 2, 1879. (Received September 25.)

SIR: I take the liberty of inclosing to you an editorial from El Mercurio, of Valparaiso, of August 14, and another from La Patria, of the same place, of August 15, 1879, together with translations of each.

You will see by these articles what has been the result of the trip (I cannot say mission) of Judge Pettis, to Chili; and, making all due allowance for the errors and misrepresentations of the newspaper press, you may, perhaps, form some probable judgment of the effect of his visit to Chili.

I take it for granted that it is not Mr. Osborn who is referred to, who seems, so far as I am informed, to have commanded the respect of the Chilian Government; and, judging from the letters I have received from him, I cannot think he has said anything to justify the articles which I inclose.

Of the manner in which Mr. Pettis has discharged the delicate duties he assumed by his journey to St. Iago, it is not my province to judge, nor do I here express any opinion further than to say that I cannot believe that he intended to threaten the Chilian Government with the intervention of the United States, though it is quite possible his zeal may have led him into some loose or inaccurate expressions which might admit of such construction. But, though ignorant of the actual facts, there is some ground to infer from the article in the Mercurio, especially, that there was or had been some apprehension among the people or some party of the people that the government, the President and his Cabinet, or some of them, were willing to place matters in statu quo ante bellum as a preliminary to peace, and to refer all questions in dispute to arbitrators, and that these papers, representing the popular or partisan sentiment opposed to such a proceeding, sought to make that idea as odious as possible by representing the United States as threatening intervention.

For myself, I have not dared to venture upon any such dangerous experiment; but whenever inquired of, by those entitled to know, what position the United States Government was disposed to take, I have frankly stated that, while I knew that our government, as a neutral and friendly republic, regretted the present war and would rejoice to see a restoration of peace, yet that I had received no instructions tending to show any disposition to interfere, in any manner, in the contest or with any question in controversy between the belligerents, nor to volunteer, even by advice as to any particular measure for the restoration of peace. That, judging from the past history of our country and the traditional policy of our government, I could discover no ground for supposing that she would attempt to intervene in the contest; and that, without instructions to that effect, I could not even venture to say that she would be willing to tender her good offices to bring about an arrangement, without some assurance that such an offer would be agreeable to all the belligerents.

But I have ventured to say that while I could not speak officially or give any assurance to that effect, yet, as an individual, I would express the opinion that if all the belligerents should, in any proper manner, express the wish that our government should use its good offices to that end, I thought such a wish might be complied with. But I have been careful, on all occasions, to say that I have received no instructions upon the subject.

I have, &c.,

I. P. CHRISTIANCY.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 49.—Translation of editorial of the El Mercurio, Valparaiso, August 14, 1879.]

INTERVENTION OF THE YANKEE GOVERNMENT.

We learned yesterday, from a trustworthy source, that the United States plenipotentiary had passed a note to our government intimating, in terms somewhat accentuated, the necessity of putting an end to the conflict in which we are involved.

If this be true, it would be the right time to tell the great North American Republic that she has completely forgotten her own doctrines and practices, intervening in matters which merely and exclusively concern the three belligerents.

If the mentioned intervention is amicably offered, we must thank them for it, but we must also refuse it as imperative.

If, on the contrary, it signifies an incidental threat, as it is said to be, the repulse should be immediate and clear. No matter in which of the two positions we may place ourselves, the result can only be one and the same. And how could it be otherwise when we are in a position which can only allow a solution by the victory of one or the other of the two contestants? By what other road could we attain peace?

Or does the North American Government believe that we could, to please it, or out of fear of its threats, return to Bolivia the territory that by the irresistible force of rights and events has formed again an integral portion of the republic? Impossible!

The Chilian flag that waves there in testimony of national possession and of protection to the powerful interests rooted in that soil cannot be hauled down until the Peru-Bolivian Army succeed in defeating ours. In this way only could it retire; in any other way, never! never!

And with regard to Peru, how would that peace which the Yankee Government offers us stand? Should we leave without revenge the martyrdom of the heroes of the Esmeralda, and without chastising the treacherous attacks in consequence of which more than four hundred Chilians sigh in painful bondage?

To step back without obtaining at least a partial reparation for so many evils and insults to our country would be an indelible stain for Chili; and Chili does not consent, and will never consent while it has a spark of life, to a single spot on its shield.

The Government of the Great Republic knows us little. It judges, perhaps, our dignity by the number of inhabitants, by the scarcity of our national income, by our relative backwardness in comparison with her. But if this is so, she is greatly mistaken, for though poor and backward and lacking the great resources for defense that the great powers possess, we have always shown, since the day of our emancipation, a patriotism able to face all contingencies, a courage in proportion to the intense esteem of our honor.

It is hard to believe that the North American Government that has always looked with the most absolute indifference on the contests of the republics of this continent should to-day want to enforce itself as mediator in a contest perhaps the most justified (it is so understood on our part) of any that have stained with blood the New World. Since when so much humanitarian zeal, after having looked quietly upon the slaughter in all the South American countries except Chili?

Yesterday only did not Misters Yankees see Paraguay perish after a heroical combat against three adversaries, of which the least strong was a thousand times superior to herself? Well! Why then, did they not use their friendly influence or their coercive threat? When the Spanish squadron bombarded Valparaiso the Great Republic had in the bay the formidable "Mounadnok," nevertheless, Admiral Mendez Nuñez proceeded as if he were the absolute master of the seas. Minister Seward would not even listen, in compliment to Neutrality, to the complaints of the Chilian representative, who, in an unhappy moment, believed that the so-celebrated Monroe doctrine extended so far as to protect a feeble country, a victim of a powerful European nation.

Now, then, if the Monroe doctrine could not cross the Isthmus of Panama whilst a poor American country was being chastised by one that had been its master in the bygone times of colonization; why, then, shall we allow to-day, to the principle of intervention, a principle only used against the weak, so violent an interpretation, founded, it may be, on a humanitarian basis or upon financial interests?

If Chili, as the United States Government cannot deny, is a self-governing country, constituted after the same manner as the other free countries are, it becomes clear that any act of a foreign power, no matter which it be, tending to lessen its liberty, is an unjustifiable act, an insult not to be tolerated. Rights are equal to the whole of the human family. The small and modest Switzerland is as much master of her freedom to punish those that depreciate her as powerful England is. Belgium and Holland are not more or less on this point than France and Germany. If Chili were only like the Republic of Andorra or San Marino, then could the United States or any other European power justify such an intervention as that of which we are speaking. But, fortunately, we are not so unfortunate as to owe to the pity or the contempt of the world the liberty which we enjoy.

We do not, for a single moment, desire to imagine that the government looks upon this matter in another light than we do. Nevertheless it is prudent to advise it that the moment it should show the least weakness the entire country would hold it to a strict account. National honor is not to be trifled with, and it would be precisely the national honor which would be forfeited by acceding to the suggestions of any nation interested in imposing upon us its will.

Chili does not require tutors; she is old enough to be able to know how to govern herself. If the chief of the state does not believe so, he must from to-day believe the contrary, under the penalty of discovering that a Chilian governor must think as the people he governs think.

[Inclosure 2, in No. 49.—Translation of editorial of La Patria, Valparaiso, Aug. 10, 1879.]

A MEDIATION AS ABSURD AS DANGEROUS.

Conjointly with our colleague of this port, we received yesterday the advice that there had been presented to our government, in an imperative manner, a proposed forced mediation, tendered by the great Republic of the United States.

We will ingenuously say the truth; we gave no credit to the news, reserving to ourselves to qualify it as being of the worst character, and, above all, of more evil consequence than many of the false news which every day some people, with wicked designs rather than a spirit of intervention, spread about the streets.

Even to-day, and notwithstanding the honor it has merited from "El Mercurio" by finding place in its columns, we insist upon denying not only its existence but also its verasimilitude. And, in truth, foundation is not lacking in proof of our systematic incredulity.

It is an established fact, as it is opportunely put forth by El Mercurio, that the benevolent intention of the Northern Confederation and the purposes of the Monroe doctrine have never passed the sphere of beautiful theories in favor of any of the Latin-race countries of the South American continent. The Monroe doctrine was invented solely for Saxons and in favor of Saxons.

To the real and indisputable examples set forth in aid of this thesis by El Mercurio we can properly add other examples, if possible, to those already mentioned.

What has the Monroe doctrine done for Cuba? Has Spain not prosecuted with tenacity her implacable war under the nose of the United States? Has the case of the Virginius been forgotten, from on board of which Spain took out, by means of the Tornado, citizens under the protection of the starry flag, shooting them afterwards, notwithstanding the protest of the commander of the vessel?

What did the United States do for Mexico when the Imperial Eagle was making a prey of the heroic and intrepid Puebla? What did it do for Texas? What has it done for the Republics of Central America in their conflicts with Germany and other European Governments? To fold her arms, and if not co-operating, allowing, at least, the realization of the known maxim la force prime le droit, or, let us call it, the right of the strong is the only one possible right.

And, besides, by what privileged reason should the United States be the one who should constitute itself the executor of a forced mediation?

We have not ignored the steps taken by Peru in search of a mediating power and of a mediation. We have followed her step by step in her shameful travels through courts and palaces in Europe, from Holland to Germany, and from Paris to London, receiving everywhere as sole answer to her exigencies silence and disdain.

And what she has failed to accomplish until now by diplomacy, always ready for negotiations with those great powers which has been refused to be taken in hand, and that in a collective manner, by the whole of Europe, and this in an amicable and conciliatory manner, should now come as a ukase, unprecedented in the history of America and of the world, by the country who was the cradle of Lincoln and Washington?

It is obvious, and the more it is examined the greater becomes the surprise, and greater still the absurdity of the matter which we are treating, obliged by the necessity of evading its doleful propagation in the public spirit and the discouragement which would be the inevitable consequence, if in reality such mediation had existed, or should ever exist.

And how could it be attempted?
